An innovation, inaugurated this year, was the omission of the tests or messages from the evening meetings, and while some were disappointed, the majority of those attending expressed their approbation of the change, and doubtless this plan will be continued in the future and the messages confined to the afternoon meetings.

Pres. J. S. Maxwell and Vice-President, J. P. Whitwell were unanimously re-elected, and were given a very vigorous Chautauqua salute.

Mr. J. Peterson, Jr., of Bemidji, Minn., was elected Second Vice-President; F. E. Irvine was also re-elected Secretary; Mr. P. J. Samson is the new treasurer, and Asa Talcott, C. P. Follett, H. Hegdahl and G. W. Bush are the trustees.

President Maxwell was elected as the delegate to attend the N. S. A. in Washington, D. C., next month.

Greetings were received from Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, 617 Congress street, Toledo, Ohio; Dr. T. Wilkins, Secretary Illinois State Association, Chicago, Ill.; Mary T. Longley, Secretary N. S. A., Washington, D. C.; George H. Brooks, President Wisconsin State Association, Milwaukee, Wis.; George W. Kates, Cheyney Pa.; California State Association, Santa Barbara, Cal.

Financially the convention just closed was a success, as all present responded liberally to make it so, and in behalf of the State Association I take this method of publicly thanking all who assisted.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." Demonstrates the continuity of life and our environment of spiritual influences. Free from all theories of superstition. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 25 cents.

John W. Ring in Galveston, Texas.

To the Editor:—Mr. J. W. Ring has come and gone. He came Friday August 30, and remained until Monday, September 2. How delighted everyone was to see him. People flocked to the Temple to bid him welcome.

On Saturday night the members tendered him a reception. The Lyceum room was filled to pass a few hours with him, and to show their love and appreciation of one who was our speaker for ten years, and labored so untiringly for the benefit of our society. The auxiliary served ice cream and cake.

On Sunday afternoon he named here in the Temple, Mr. and Mrs. William Parr's little girl. The ceremony was made more impressive because he married the young couple two years ago.

On Sunday night Mr. Ring delivered one of his eloquent lectures. The auditorium was filled, and as he stood on the rostrum amid the palms, ferns, and flowers, it carried us all back to "other happy days," and with the knowledge that he does not "belong to us," caused us all sadness after it was over, and when the word "Good-Bye" was said, many left the Temple with tears in their eyes. When he left on Monday many of his friends went to the train to wish him "God speed." We are in hopes to have him for our speaker in another year.

Mr. and Mrs. Noyes will be here the first of October, and we all feel assured that we will learn to love them, and hope under their ministrations our society will grow and prosper. A TRUE FRIEND.

Sunapee Lake Camp, N. H.

The thirteenth annual Spiritualist camp meeting of Sunapee Lake, N. H., closed on Sunday, September 1, 1907.

The officers and members agreeing that this season has been the most successful and most productive of good for all for many past.

The season opened on August 4, with Mrs. Emma B. Smith of Lawrence, Mass., as medium for the first week. Her work as a lecturer and bearer of messages was excellent and her genial manner won for her the love of those who gathered. Dr. Edgar W. Emerson of Manchester, N. H., followed, and never has his work been better among us; par excellence, expresses it best for the week he remained with us.

Then came Mr. and Mrs. George W. Kates of Cheyney, Pa., and although their first appearance among us, we feel they went away with pleasant memories, for they left behind them ties of love and friendship as the result of their labors among us. Their work as royal and true instruments cannot be too highly commended.

Mrs Martha A. Whitehead of Methuen, Mass., also served us twice, giving two excellent lectures followed by messages; the light of her countenance is proof positive of the spiritual illumination that is hers.

Mr. Thomas Burpee of Sutton, N. H., gave two lectures of superior quality, and Mrs. Kate R. Stiles of Boston, Mass., finished the season's work with lectures, showing the great progress, scientifically, philosophically and spiritually she has made in the many years of her service as a medium.

Mrs. A. M. Warren of Manchester, N. H., held the extra evening seances in the hall, her work being well received, many being comforted and uplifted through her mediumship as a message-bearer.

The music under the direction of Mrs. A. O. Haines of Manchester, N. H., gave good satisfaction.

The Fair held under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid, was a great success, and Mrs. Harriet C, Comstock of Newport, N. H., as the manager of affairs, is to be congratulated, with those who so faithfully assisted.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them."

I have a neighbor who lives two doors north of me and has a little child, coming three years of age, and they are not Spiritualists—don't believe in spirit return. But here comes a surprise, and awakening of spirit return.

On one occasion the little child said, "Aunt Maggy, there is Uncle Jim standing there by you. Don't you see him?

But her aunt laughed and said, "You hush, you don't see your uncle, for I don't, and he aint here."

But several times in the day she would tell her mother and aunt, "there is Uncle Jim, can't you see him?" and they thought because they did not, she was going crazy. Her uncle lived in Texas, and she never saw him in her life, and they wondered why she knew him. But on morning of the 18th they got a telegram saying he passed out on the 17th of April, the day the child saw him. Now they know she surely saw him. Now, if this is not spirit return, what is it? And to think no one saw him but the little child not three years old, and she knew it was her uncle, called him by name, and she had never seen him. It is just grand, and will prove to them the truth of Spiritualism. The little children will lead us. MRS. T. J. NEWMAN.

Camp Chesterfield a Great Success.

The Indiana Spiritualists' 17th Annual Session at Camp Chesterfield is one of the "has beens," and I want to say, as a matter of fact, that never in its history has this Mecca of Spiritualism, with all its scenery of the beautiful, the lovely, and the grand, where Nature and art combine their efforts for a display of perfection, put in a better appearance than in the year 1907.

Never before have its officers, from president down, including the managers of hotel, lodging house and Ladies' Bazaar, paid closer observance to their official duties respectively, to make the camp a success. As a result, financially it can be truthfully said that the dark clouds that had previously arisen and hung out menacingly over Camp Chesterfield's fair name have faded into mists, and they even are so thin that the light of salvation shines clearly through them, and this fact our arisen Mother Colby-Luther as a materialized spirit predicted with emphasis at the first seance given by Mrs. Mendenhall, in the beautiful language: "Chesterfield Camp was not born to die; it came to stay."

While speaking of mediums, I must, to be exact, say that, though I had but little opportunity to visit personally the seances given by the numerous media present on the grounds, other than Mrs. Mendenhall, I am justified in saying that from all reports by those who did visit them, that the mediums never acquitted themselves here or elsewhere with higher honors for the good work done.

Lyceum Work.—In the years gone by the little folks had almost concluded that, as a conductor for this branch of spirit work, our beloved sister Mrs. Gillespie was the only woman for this place. I will say in reference thereto, with all due deference to Sister G., that the work performed in this department during this camp session, under the management of our good and worthy sister Mrs. Fesler, of Indianapolis, evidences the fact that there is no one person so great and useful in the work of building up character for future humanity; but there may be found a peer. It certainly can be truthfully said, without hesitation, by the thousands of witnesses to the method of training the young idea how to shoot, as well as faithfulness to duty and interest shown therein, Sister Fesler in every respect touching her work in this all-important line of culture won for herself laurels that will not fade away in coming years. May she long live, and her good name ever remain endeared to many hearts.

Conference work also was voted a success this year at Camp Chesterfield, though perhaps modesty would compel this subject to be touched lightly, as the writer was the chosen manager thereof. But I will say, at the risk of being gainsaid, that never at any previous session upon our camp was the glow of intelligence, love and real heartfelt delight to be seen so uniformly manifest on so many dear faces.

But, to the culminating point. What shall I say of the array of talent brought into use to entitle Camp Chesterfield to the honors of bearing away the banner of intellectual and spiritual glory of the year 1907? Our speakers, we think, were second to none others in any camp since "Our Moses" and Mother Colby-Luther and Sister Jennie H. Brown have joined the laborers of broader fields. Our own honest-hearted Tom W. Smith, of Anderson, being the first on the program after President O'Neill voiced the address of welcome.

He took the platform and at once made clear the fact that he was the right man in the right place. Spiritualism being his subject, I want to say right here that if any speaker ever showed the need of being honest in dealing with the cause of Spiritualism, whether it be medium, speaker or investigator, Brother "Tom" did the work.

Justice and fair play would demand a brief notice or synopsis of all who occupied the platform, as the reading of their work would be valuable to any class of thinkers. But neither space on paper nor time would admit of such.

Brother E. W. Sprague requires no recommendation from the writer's pen. It needs only to be said that he and his good wife were with us and their work was done in their usual style of earnestness and candor.

Brother T. Grimshaw, of St. Louis, Mo., in his lectures on Genuine Mediumship and Its Important Uses in Studying Life's Philosophy and Religion, proved himself a masterly teacher, under the control of the higher inspiring intelligences.

Brother Harrison D. Barrett is known to the world, and here, as in all other localities, he did his work nobly.

Mrs. Henderson, of Indianapolis, did her part as lecturer and message bearer in her usual way, ever to the honor of the cause and herself.

Dr. W. D. Wattles, formerly of Winchester, Ind., for his subject—first lecture—from the following three points, which present the subject of Spiritualism in its broad, deep and much-needed sense of understanding as the science of life in its practicabilities thus—the past, present and future of Spiritualism; in other words, the Spiritualism of the World's Bibles; the spiritual concept of the marriage relation; and the Brotherhood of Man. On these the speaker displayed a wide range of biblical thought, psycho-physiological study, and the culmination of the spiritual philosophy. Dr. Wattles is widely known as a lecturer and teacher in the school of "New Thought," and is prepared to serve the people when and where needed if called upon. He and family members make a quartette equal to the best on lecturing occasions. Call for him and family.

Mrs. Lillie—one of Nature's choicest blooms—ah, what shall I say of her? Only this; She is not only the Lillie of the West, but the Lillie of the world. She did a noble work while here.

Brother Wilson Fritch, of Seattle, Wash., filled his place as none but he alone could. His subject was Mediumship and the True Religion of Now. It is enough to say that his personal figure on the platform, together with his matchless oratory, holds every thinking member of the audience spellbound from start to finish. As substitute for dates reserved, Dr. Marvin, of Anderson, Ind., was brought into service, and in his lecture made deep impressions upon the minds of his attentive listeners. Along the same line Miss Mae B. Hedrick, of Brooklyn, New York, was introduced by the president as the "adopted daughter of Camp Chesterfield." This certainly is a beautiful as well as a befitting title. This beautiful angel in the earth form, as lecturer and message bearer did her work to the satisfaction of both mortal and angel audiences.

I come now to the top round in the ladder—the world-wide famous Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, who, accompanied by her good husband as her reporter, served Camp Chesterfield the last week of its session. Oh! that my pen were the harp of a celestial musician, that I might to the world sing the melody and true worth of her inspired words. In her lecture entitled "The Approaching Glacial Period and its Effects," as being both destructive and reconstructive to the various business institutions as well as to the various systems of moral and religious thought; and "The Uses and Modes of Co-operation of the Unseen Forces of the Universe" was, to put it mildly, sublimely grand. With her personality clad in her peculiar suitably-cut costume when upon the platform would alone render her a central power of attraction for any thinking audience. But when her lips voiced slowly, clearly and wisely her thought on the unseen universal forces and their uses, she reminded the humble writer of some great soul let down from the higher realm—nay, rather some one of the gods or goddesses who had taken an active part in the construction of worlds and was here to teach us mortals something of the divine lessons of life which we are yet to learn before we can boast largely of our scholarship.

Sister Richmond's closing lecture was an elaborate explanation of her mission to the World's Peace Conference now in session at The Hague in Holland. She went there as the representative of the Spiritualists of the United States of America. Mrs. Richmond, there among the chosen savants of the world, in which forty-six nations were represented in their best thought in behalf of humanity's interest in the peaceful adjustment of all national difficulties, on the economic principles of arbitration. On this question of all questions I may only say our good sister Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond showed herself, as on all other occasions, to be master of the situation.

MESSAGE FROM AN ARISEN ONE.

I have stepped to the verge of the love-land shore,
Where life is so clear to me,
Just stepped as close, dear ones, as I can,
To tell what it is to be.

I caught the inrush of the spirit zones
As I sped from your sight away,
And left you the poor, worn, broken
shard
That had served the little day.

But I that had been its tenant, freed
From its close environment,
Departed for another clime
And on nobler life intent.

I swept the blue to my glad surprise,
At home almost anywhere,
But sorrow's call, the voice of love,
Brought me back the home to share.

I saw your tears fall like the rain,
I gave you the hand of love,
I essayed to make you hear my voice,
To tell you "I'm not above.

"Nor yet below; right here am I,
In your midst, alert, alive;
No death as yet has come to me,
And I only cried, 'forgive' "

For papa could have found the way,
He should have sought for light
For himself and you, and left you there
In the midst of sorrow's night.

But listen now, dear ones, I call
Across the lessening tide,
And bid you seek the truer way
That I have found and tried.

There's no such thing as death,—to die
Has never yet been known—
Nor sleeping either—spirit sleep?
Why should you then bemoan?

I am but in advance of you;
My work goes on the same;
I care for all—but oh, the ways!
These grand attention claim.

Think of me, then, as knowing still
The ways you daily go,
And think, too, that it makes me proud
To have you love me so.

I'll watch to help you everywhere,
I'll heed your slightest call,
And in a blessed yet-to-be
I'll learn to teach you all.

Come closer, then, at eventide;
Papa will list' for you,
Will seek to guide the every thought
To higher ways and true.

MEETINGS IN NEW YORK.

First Commenced by Andrew Jackson Davis.

In December, 1862, Andrew Jackson Davis was publishing a weekly paper, "The Herald of Progress," in this city, and in said paper he made the following statement: "President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation takes effect January 1, 1863, and we should conduct Progressive Sunday meetings, as the movement will mark an important epoch. Hon. John W. Edmunds, Ralph Glover, M. D., Henry J. Newton, Charles Partridge, P. E. Farnsworth, Warren Sumner Barlow and myself, and a host of others concurred in the movement, and on Sunday, January 4, 1863, Meeting was commenced at Dodsworth Hall, Broadway, opposite 11th street; said meetings have continued up to June 30, 1907; the last season at Elk Hall, Majestic Bldg., 8th ave and 59th street, was eminently successful. Mrs. May A. Newton is president, of the First Association of Spiritualists. Mrs. Margaret Gaule Reidinger, a remarkable psychic, has given earnest attention to the welfare of said society for the past 9 years, and her husband, August Reidinger, has been an energetic and harmonious assistant in her work, and their combined efforts have resulted in attracting a very desirable membership of ladies and gentlemen, whose aim is to labor in every possible way to advance the glorious Cause of Spiritualism. Mr. Reidinger has been very fortunate in obtaining so desirable a hall for their meetings, which are to commence September 15.

Splendid Spiritualist Meetings Held by Will J. Erwood of Elkhart, Indiana.

For three days the gifted speaker and psychic, Will J. Erwood, has ministered to the Spiritualists and interested friends who have indeed enjoyed a real spiritual feast. His lectures have been masterpieces of oratory and eloquence, and the manner in which he presented and discussed spiritual and scientific truths prove him to be one of the foremost thinkers and leaders of the day.

His many messages were splendid and all recognized as being absolutely correct. Every moment of his time was taken in answering questions and explaining the philosophy and phenomena, and giving private readings. The interest shown was so great that Mr. Erwood was prevailed upon to hold afternoon meetings.

The excellent work of this splendid man has created the greatest interest and enthusiasm the cause has ever known here. The friends were anxious that Mr. Erwood remain ten days or two weeks, but owing to previous engagements he was compelled to leave for other fields, but we hope and expect to have him again. We are always glad to come in touch with the master minds, and to discover ministering angels and friends in human forms makes life much sweeter and better. In every department of his work he has given excellent satisfaction, and one has said:

"There are no words too beautiful to say,
Of him who's gone for but a day,
Beyond our plane of sense and sight."

He can never go beyond the influence or out of reach of the good wishes and kindly thoughts the friends here send to him, and when he finds another opportunity to return, a cordial welcome awaits him. We invoke the angels' blessing on this splendid worker, and know they linger very near him in his ministry.

The N. S. A. Convention.

To the Editor:—Back again to dear old home, both feeling fine this beautiful September morn while the sun is streaming through the eastern window, filling our hearts with choicest of Nature's gifts.

I have been trying to secure special rates from several cities for the convention at Washington, D. C., but the best are the ones already out, viz., from Chicago, $22.25; from Peru, $19.70; from Muncie, $18.50; from Indianapolis, $19.25. These tickets are good for fifteen days from each given point; ten days or less at Washington, with a trip by boat to Norfolk, Va., or Jamestown; from there by boat up the historic James river to Richmond, and back home over the most picturesque route. Arrangements can be made whereby we can go in a body and meet in Cincinnati. The best time to leave Cincinnati is in the evening about 9 o'clock; this will bring you about dawn through most delightful mountain scenery, arriving at Washington, D. C., about 5 p. m. next day. Anyone wishing to join our party can find out about time of starting by writing Mrs. Carrie Mong, 415 Franklin street, Muncie, Ind., or Mrs. Ella J. Bloom, 896 Turner avenue, Chicago, or Mrs. Woolsey, 127 West 16th street, Indianapolis, Ind.

To give you a description of this trip is impossible; it is a delightful one.

I want to see some protection made for honest mediums wherever they may go. I want to see the frauds swept from our ranks.

W. D. Wattles will commence his series of lectures on Spiritualism on Sunday, September 15, in Orpheum Hall, 135 North Delaware street, in this city. It is his intention to organize one of the best and strongest societies in the United States this coming winter.

Get together, go to Washington, make this convention the largest and best attended convention the National has ever had. Go prepared to work for its good, and assist those who have spent years in making it what it is to-day.

Science of the Soul.

In The Progressive Thinker of June 22 will be found an address by Geo. W. Lewis, A. M., upon the above title, which shows an almost exhaustive research and a keen, criticising appreciation of what he found in the records of science, and the opinions of scientists and students of the occult as well, and finally concludes with this statement:

"The soul is an eternal and uncreated entity, and the wisdom of the scientists, the machinations of the priest, or the gates of hell, cannot prevail against it."

This is true, but is not all. In Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's book, "The Soul in Its Human Embodiments," which was given in lessons to private classes some forty years ago, and purported to be the wisdom of the Spirits of the Heavenly Order of Gabriel, a band of whom at that time claimed to be her guides, after a like exhaustive study upon entirely different lines, concludes, in part, with this statement:

"Soul is an eternal, immortal, finite entity, uncreated; in essences like unto God; therefore all souls have had, and will have, being forever. God and the souls in the universe constitute all the consciousness of the universe.

"God is the Infiniverse, and the universe is that which God expresses.

"There is never any change in the relationship between the soul and God; the soul is always finite, God is always infinite.

"The Deity pervades, surrounds and controls, but is not the finite entity God; nor are all souls God, or parts of God, but like unto God."

Such are some of the conclusions arrived at by the grand band of intelligences who at that time controlled Mrs. Richmond, and in all that I have ever seen emanating from her control since, none has seemed to come from so high a source as that book; and still it has never seemed to be all required to establish a perfect understanding of the entity called "soul." There is no reason given why it should desire to embody in habiliments of earth, nor what the value is to the soul in being obliged to express itself in so many entirely different embodiments, nor what the result will be to the soul, nor what value it will all be to God.

Now in accordance with the few glimpses that have come to me through what I term soul consciousness, the conception of God, as has been presented above, is at fault in these regards.

If God is infinite and fills the infiniverse, which contains all universes and systems of universes and all beyond, then He, They, It, is ALL, and has no negative, there being nothing beside Him, which, to finite minds, is absolutely incomprehensible, as it should be, to be REALLY infinite!

One glimpse I caught showed me that the law of polaric force was and is the basic law of creation, and that particles of substance are to each other as the vibrative energy in one is to the same energy in the other. This led me to question the source of this vibrative energy, and on entering the silence I saw that before creation all substance was held in INFINITE vibrative energy; was and is held in the potency of the Infiniverse, THE INFINITE! Before Creation the Infinite held in potency all that manifestation, through power, expresses in universes; hence ALL that is palpable to sense perception has been externalized as expressions—manifestations—of the Infinite. "HOW?" do we ask? One way was shown to me through SOUL ILLUMINATION. It was shown that John, the beloved disciple upon whose bosom the Master rested his weary head, caught the true version when he said, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made."

Evidently, in the realm of being, where ALL is uncreate, The Infinite determined MANIFESTATION SHALL BE, and it was shown that the first move in that direction was a DIVISION in the elements of infinity. Under His fiat the power-wielding elements separated and became positive and negative universal spiritualities, Male and Female, Father-Mother, God-head, the Almighty Creator! The Agent of the Infinite to produce the universal manifestations He had determined should be. But this Word was positive creative Spirit, and polaric force having been determined as the law of manifestation; there was demanded a corresponding NEGATIVE, which should be as absolute in its position as the Word was in its position, it was shown to be the ATOM, a thought of the Infinite, the vibration of which was slowed down to absolute inertia—congealed! and thus becoming the basis of universal manifestation; hence, when science strives to determine the atom, it is striving to discover and measure a congealed, purposeful thought of the Infinite, which in truth seems to be the mathematical point endowed with perfect resistance, but capable of taking on polaric conditions; hence, under the action of the Word, one side of each became positive and the other negative, thus clasping each to each and thus demonstrating that "LOVE is the fulfillment of the law," and pointing the way of aggregation, concentration and combination, resulting in what is termed "CREATION."

It was also shown that in a general way evolution is true, evolving the involved energy and ideation placed within the clasping atoms by the action of the Word, until a planet of a system in the universe became evolved, up to a point beyond which mere material, animal, physical organizations could not go. A new departure became necessary in order that progress could be maintained as had been decreed at the beginning.

At this crisis came the response from the Infinite to the Word "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness," etc., and there proceeded from the innermost of the Infinite His Divinity, polarized to correspond and harmonize with the attained condition of the planet, ready to become dual entities of male and female. Under the manipulation of the Father-Mother principle of the Word, a substance was generated that separated each dual-entity from all the rest, and ALL from the Infinite and from themselves; thus were the soul-entities individualized in the Garden of Eden, the Paradise of God, the Soul Nursery of the unborn, unembodied souls of men which is still existent, in the realm of no attraction between Solar systems; thus it will be seen that ALL the souls to be embodied on any planet were individualized at one and the same time, of the same substance, the Divinity of the Infinite, that contained every attribute of Himself, in germ, except INFINITY. There can be but one Infinite! All that is has life, breath, form and being in Him.

Thus it is plainly seen that in QUALITY all souls are alike and like unto God and are in very deed His children, no matter how they may differ in quantity and individual unfoldment, the latter of which is all gained by and through human embodiments or incarnations in HUMAN form, for it was just as plainly shown that no soul ever was embodied in any form below the human, after the inauguration of the human on the planet, and that IT was through the soul's action upon the highest evolved animal form that the human form was evolved, that bridged the chasm between mere animal and right human form and relegated the "lost link" idea to the realm of myths, where it belongs.

It will also be observed that the NECESSITY of the many embodiments of the soul is to unfold and make active the germinal attributes of the Infinite, which are passive at inception and were decreed to become active and finally masterful over environments through that class of contact with physical forms. It may also further be observed that it is the pleasure of the Infinite to see Himself glassed in every class of human form, from the bushman to the archangelic form in heaven.

Again, this view of the science of soul gives immortality per se, for as a divine principle, holding an eternal past, naught but an eternal future can be predicted; hence Mr. Lewis' concluding statement, also Mrs. Richmond's conclusions, are true, and this further and more definite version of the science of soul is true to me because it came on the lines of soul illumination, which carries within itself the evidences and impress of truth to whomsoever the manifestation may come.

In conclusion I will say I deem the above but a version of the highest, holiest truth that has ever been presented by The All-Father to his children for them to discover each for himself, and that sooner or later there will come an impulse to each soul to solve the problem which it needs must obey; but if there is any higher, holier solution extant I would like to see it, for I am only a searcher after God's Holy Truth.

MINNESOTA STATE ASSOCIATION.

Tenth Annual Convention of Spiritualists.

To the Editor:—The State Spiritualists' Association of Minnesota, has just closed its tenth annual convention, and we are pleased to know that it was as harmonious and forceful a convention as we ever held.

There was a large attendance of delegates and visitors, and the interest manifested in the deliberations of the convention was very gratifying. Some of the fraternal societies sent delegates who were most cordially received, and whose remarks on their line of work were greatly appreciated.

We were favored with the assistance and lectures of two of the prominent workers in the ranks of Spiritualists, Prof. W. M. Lockwood of Buffalo, N. Y., and Miss Elizabeth Harlow of Columbus, Ohio. Miss Harlow will speak for the State Association during the month of September, and the local societies, to show their appreciation of the efforts of the State Board to bring talent from out of the city, have closed their meetings for this month, and will join forces with the State Board in making the meetings a success financially as well as intellectually. Miss Harlow is well known to the people of the Twin Cities, and Prof. Lockwood has made many friends and admirers who will give a cordial welcome whenever he comes to us again.

An innovation, inaugurated this year, was the omission of the tests or messages from the evening meetings, and while some were disappointed, the majority of those attending expressed their approbation of the change, and doubtless this plan will be continued in the future and the messages confined to the afternoon meetings.

Pres. J. S. Maxwell and Vice-President, J. P. Whitwell were unanimously re-elected, and were given a very vigorous Chautauqua salute.

Mr. J. Peterson, Jr., of Bemidji, Minn., was elected Second Vice-President; F. E. Irvine was also re-elected Secretary; Mr. P. J. Samson is the new treasurer, and Asa Talcott, C. P. Follett, H. Hegdahl and G. W. Bush are the trustees.

President Maxwell was elected as the delegate to attend the N. S. A. in Washington, D. C., next month.

Greetings were received from Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss, 617 Congress street, Toledo, Ohio; Dr. T. Wilkins, Secretary Illinois State Association, Chicago, Ill.; Mary T. Longley, Secretary N. S. A., Washington, D. C.; George H. Brooks, President Wisconsin State Association, Milwaukee, Wis.; George W. Kates, Cheyney Pa.; California State Association, Santa Barbara, Cal.

Financially the convention just closed was a success, as all present responded liberally to make it so, and in behalf of the State Association I take this method of publicly thanking all who assisted.

John W. Ring in Galveston, Texas.

To the Editor:—Mr. J. W. Ring has come and gone. He came Friday August 30, and remained until Monday, September 2. How delighted everyone was to see him. People flocked to the Temple to bid him welcome.

On Saturday night the members tendered him a reception. The Lyceum room was filled to pass a few hours with him, and to show their love and appreciation of one who was our speaker for ten years, and labored so untiringly for the benefit of our society. The auxiliary served ice cream and cake.

On Sunday afternoon he named here in the Temple, Mr. and Mrs. William Parr's little girl. The ceremony was made more impressive because he married the young couple two years ago.

On Sunday night Mr. Ring delivered one of his eloquent lectures. The auditorium was filled, and as he stood on the rostrum amid the palms, ferns, and flowers, it carried us all back to "other happy days," and with the knowledge that he does not "belong to us," caused us all sadness after it was over, and when the word "Good-Bye" was said, many left the Temple with tears in their eyes. When he left on Monday many of his friends went to the train to wish him "God speed." We are in hopes to have him for our speaker in another year.

Mr. and Mrs. Noyes will be here the first of October, and we all feel assured that we will learn to love them, and hope under their ministrations our society will grow and prosper A TRUE FRIEND.

Sunapee Lake Camp, N. H.

The thirteenth annual Spiritualist camp meeting of Sunapee Lake, N. H., closed on Sunday, September 1, 1907.

The officers and members agreeing that this season has been the most successful and most productive of good for all for many past.

The season opened on August 4, with Mrs. Emma B. Smith of Lawrence, Mass., as medium for the first week. Her work as a lecturer and bearer of messages was excellent and her genial manner won for her the love of those who gathered. Dr. Edgar W. Emerson of Manchester, N. H., followed, and never has his work been better among us; par excellence, expresses it best for the week he remained with us.

Then came Mr. and Mrs. George W. Kates of Cheyney, Pa., and although their first appearance among us, we feel they went away with pleasant memories, for they left behind them ties of love and friendship as the result of their labors among us. Their work as royal and true instruments cannot be too highly commended.

Mrs Martha A. Whitehead of Methuen, Mass., also served us twice, giving two excellent lectures followed by messages; the light of her countenance is proof positive of the spiritual illumination that is hers.

Mr. Thomas Burpee of Sutton, N. H., gave two lectures of superior quality, and Mrs. Kate R. Stiles of Boston, Mass., finished the season's work with lectures, showing the great progress, scientifically, philosophically and spiritually she has made in the many years of her service as a medium.

Mrs. A. M. Warren of Manchester, N. H., held the extra evening seances in the hall, her work being well received, many being comforted and uplifted through her mediumship as a message-bearer.

The music under the direction of Mrs. A. O. Haines of Manchester, N. H., gave good satisfaction.

The Fair held under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid, was a great success, and Mrs. Harriet C, Comstock of Newport, N. H., as the manager of affairs, is to be congratulated, with those who so faithfully assisted.

OF GREAT INTEREST.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them."

I have a neighbor who lives two doors north of me and has a little child, coming three years of age, and they are not Spiritualists—don't believe in spirit return. But here comes a surprise, and awakening of spirit return.

On one occasion the little child said, "Aunt Maggy, there is Uncle Jim standing there by you. Don't you see him?

But her aunt laughed and said, "You hush, you don't see your uncle, for I don't, and he aint here."

But several times in the day she would tell her mother and aunt, "there is Uncle Jim, can't you see him?" and they thought because they did not, she was going crazy. Her uncle lived in Texas, and she never saw him in her life, and they wondered why she knew him. But on morning of the 18th they got a telegram saying he passed out on the 17th of April, the day the child saw him. Now they know she surely saw him. Now, if this is not spirit return, what is it? And to think no one saw him but the little child not three years old, and she knew it was her uncle, called him by name, and she had never seen him. It is just grand, and will prove to them the truth of Spiritualism. The little children will lead us. MRS. T. J. NEWMAN.

LETTER FROM MR. RING.

The Debate at Hedrick, Okla.

The debate at Hedrick, Okla., beginning August 20 and lasting six days, is a thing of the past. It was stenographically reported and will be printed. Mr. Ernst, Hedrick, Okla., has charge of publication.

"Resolved, That the fundamental principles of Modern Spiritualism are identical with the spiritual basis of the religion of Jesus Christ," occupied the first three days, and J. W. Schism, Christian Evangelist, for Texas, denied.

Resolved, That the scriptures teach that spiritual gifts such as are recorded in the scriptures, were discontinued with the close of the Apostolic Age." This Mr. Schism affirmed.

Aside from old personal attacks, such as "works of the devil" and "free love" and doctrinal harangue, little was advanced by the Evangelist. In a quiet, and I trust to the inspiring influences, capable manner the clean, pure Spiritualism was presented until members of various denominations expressed themselves as favorably impressed. The book will determine the worth of the debate.

Alternate nights Mr. Schism held "church service," and every alternate night Mr. Ring delivered an address on Spiritualism. The only night that the weather was not ideal was Mr. Schism's night, after he had announced "the Lord willing, we will hold divine worship."

A most delightful Sunday was spent at the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Tex., September 1, with many dear, true and tried friends. My reception was most cordial, and farewell reluctant, for I most pleasantly recall the year spent in the oleander city by the sea. While there, named the baby daughter (Margaret Elizabeth) of Mr. and Mrs. William Parr, whom I married one and a half years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Noyes are to take up the work in Galveston, October 1.

September 3, 4 and 5 was spent in Oklahoma City, where the First Annual State Convention was held. Mrs. Alice Baker, State Missionary; her son, Milton Baker, Mrs. Thorp, pastor of the Oklahoma City Society, Max Hoffman, and "yours truly" were speakers and mediums. Large crowds attended the meetings. Max Hoffman remained for Sunday the 8th, and held a big meeting.

I am making a few calls along on my way to Shelbyville, Ind., R. R. 12, which is my permanent address, although I return to San Diego, Cal., November 1 for probably five months.

Ladies' Bazaar Society of Camp Chesterfield.

The Ladies' Bazaar Society of Camp Chesterfield held its annual convention on August 29, and elected officers for the ensuing year, as follows: Mrs. M. W. Brown, of Cambridge City, Ind., for president; vice-president, Mrs. Park McKee, of Pittsburg, Pa.; secretary, Mrs. F. C. Moore, of Anderson, Ind; treasurer, Mrs. Calla Powell, of Hartford City, Ind.

The society is in a flourishing condition, many new members being added to the ranks. They voted $75 to the Camp Association; also intend to paint the Colby-Luther Cottage this fall, and will still have a nice little "nest egg" in the treasury.

Much credit is due to retiring officers, and we hope those who have been chosen ot take their places will fill the positions as well as did their predecessors.

The ladies in convention passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in the transition of Mrs. Adelia Dowell to a higher life, the Ladies' Bazaar Society of Camp Chesterfield desire to pay tribute to her memory by expressing their appreciation of her excellent service as secretary during many years, and her capable and efficient management of "Luther Memorial Cottage." Mrs. Dowell was careful and courteous with guests and patrons. Not only were the material interests of the Bazaar increased by her suggestions and guidance, but the object and sentiment for which the memorial cottage was founded were always kept in view, and to the memory of Mrs. Colby-Luther, never tiring in her efforts to promote and uplift the cause of Spiritualism.

No Omnipotence or Infinite Intelligence.

If God is omnipotent he must be the author of all things—the evil as well as the good. He is therefore responsible for all that is. As such a being can neither make mistakes or permit interference with his designs, everything must be as he wishes it to be, and therefore all the sin and all the good, all the pain and all the joy are but a part of his plan. He can not create an instrument through which to work his purpose and shift his responsibility to his agent. He cannot create a being with the qualities essential to the execution of his plan and justly punish that being for what he is and what he does. Were he omnipotent and good he could not have originated the crime of a fallen humanity—a humanity so defectively constituted that it could sin— and, as a feature of this plan the additional cruelty of sending his son into the world to suffer and die an ignominious and agonizing death, when, possessing all power, he could as easily have arranged otherwise— could as easily have created all things perfect. Then there could have been no sin, no need of redemption, no need of a Christ crucified. If this omnipotent being is all in all, if he is the author of all things, of evil, of pain, of grief, of fear and of death, when he had the power to make it all joy and pain, he is not, as claimed, the personification of love and goodness, nor is he a being who should be adored and worshiped. It is safe to say that such an entity—such an infinite intelligence does not exist, and if he did it would be greatly to his credit if he did not.

A Typical Spiritual Sermon.

Delivered by C. L. Rogers, a Clergyman of Hutchinson, Kansas, at the Funeral of Mrs. Ella Gertrude Turner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Hoyt, at Arkansas City, Kansas.

I would not for one moment add to your grief by a multitude of words; but upon occasions like this, when the heart is overcharged with its burden of sorrow, if some word of comfort may be uttered, if some ray of light and hope may be made to penetrate the gloom that surrounds so many of us, it is well. This life of ours, so strange and filled with its numberless experiences, has been only partially understood; and standing over against this mystery of life is this other mystery: that change that comes to all.

No school of science has ever yet been able to analyze the matter of life; neither have they been able to tell us what this mysterious change is. This life which we have entered, with its trials, its joys and sorrows, is at the best but a narrow vale strewn on either side with flowers whose beauty and fragrance fill all the air, where the rippling waters of life's joys and comforts seem their happiest, and where the songs of birds make glad music all the day, and gladness gives to all the quiet shadows of the night.

Those who are unlearned have tried to pierce the heights of the two eternities, between whose summits this vale extends; and they in their anguish have tried in vain to reach these heights; and in their anguish have cried aloud, but the only answer is the mocking echo of their cry. But there are those who in the conservatory of wisdom, in the temple of life, have come to the point where the soulful lesson of joy flashes across life's highway; for in this night of death "hope sees a glittering star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing." Yet somehow so many of us stand uncomforted, and wonder if this is the end. They do not know. But one thing is sure, and that is, so sure as God is God, and so sure as life is life, this is not the end. I have chosen a few words which I trust will comfort the broken-hearted and tend to lift us up to higher living.

"He Giveth His Beloved Sleep."

We are all members of a common community. The experiences of your life are the experiences of all. No matter what may be the trend of our lives, we are drawing from the same fountain. We are exercising upon the same broad plain. Your life and mine are from the same source, and whatever it is, it never had a beginning, and hence can never end. Life is an active entity of God himself, and that which is of God must be endless. In referring to God, I do not mean a personage sitting in frosty holiness above the tumult of the Universe, from whose decree there is no appeal, but I do refer to that which abides in all of us. Most of us claim to be Christian men and women; we claim to love and revere the character of Christ, whatever he was. We concede that he was loving, true, and good. To follow him is to be a Christian. True Christianity reaches down to lift up, but never reaches up to pull down. A true Christian never sits in judgment upon anyone. A true Christian never condemns. It is the province of the true Christian to sympathize, to pity, to perform good deeds, but a true Christian never sits in judgment—no, never, nor never will. A Christian is more than simply a member of some church; he is charitable in all things. Christianity is not the monopoly of any church, any more than the being of God is the monopoly of the church.

So in exemplification of the truest christianity we are here to-day to pay our tribute of respect to a beloved daughter, wife, mother, and a loving companion, who has journeyed with us, but who has grown weary and has laid the burden of life down and sought those bowers where "He giveth his beloved sleep."

As we bend above these silent graves, mute in silence from the unreplying dead, what can I say to you in this hour of the heart's acutest pain, which shall cause the star of hope to brilliantly glimmer through the tears which are silently falling; which shall paint the bow of peace above the clouds of pain and unrest.

I see before me a beaten track, worn smooth by the constant marching of funeral trains which have gone this way for hundreds and thousands of years. Along all this beaten highway I see crumbling pillars—shattered monuments of earth's persistent dissolution. I see garlands of flowers whose glory has departed, whose colors have faded, whose perfume has expired, strewn ruthlessly among the graves where love lies prone, disconsolately weeping. I see trembling hands trying to press back the anguish of riven hearts. Here tears are falling from eyes vainly looking for joys which have long perished, for hopes crushed and dying upon the grave where love has traced her dearest treasures. Above this highway a dark image with folded pinions forever hovers. They say his name is death; and with ever flowing tears of sadness he has laid the dark mantle of unspeakable despair upon the sweetest and truest lives the world ever saw. Why should I follow this beaten highway and unutterable sadness? Why should anyone be compelled, in the hour of supremest need, to desolately wander among the graves of the superstitious past? In this hour when only the touch of tenderness should encircle the throbbing brow, when only the evangel of peace should drop from his outspread pinions the sweet benisons of undying hope, why should we conjure from the moss-grown tombs of the past the glibbering skeleton of a cruel dogmatism? Why continue to lacerate the hearts already bleeding from the wounds which death has made? Why persistently turn away from the golden-fringed glory of the morning to seek the sombre shades of the stormy night? As I stand upon the threshold of this century-beaten highway of earth's demise, I see a divergent highway. There are faded garlands, it is true, but all the pathway is strewn with living, blooming flowers. There are crumbling pillars, it is true, but upon either side there are conservatories where everlasting love abides. An angel wings his way above the highway, but his name is not death; his eyes beam with ever watchful love; his wings forever distill the aroma of ever gracious peace. Bowers are here in which "He giveth his beloved sleep."

This divergent highway converges with the gloomy highway where all the highways of life intersect in the streets of gold. Then let the heart which has grown callous with the bigotry of fear, propel its midnight car along this track of the forgotten centuries; we will take the road surveyed by Infinite love, cheered and made beautiful by the undying presence of everlasting hope. Let no sombre robes or chill of doubt distract you or make you tremble. Let not the despairing cry that death ends all, in anywise disturb your faltering faith. "There is no death." It is true the rose may cast its petals, but only to spring forth again in a most luxuriant beauty. The sun may fade from heaven, but in the roseate robes of the morning he comes forth in renewed splendor and glory. The stars go down only to shine upon a fairer shore.

"There is no death. What seems so is transition." Nature, whose laboratory stands wide open to all around you, cries aloud in all her voices that "there is no death." What we call death is only absorption of life, the assimilation of elements. From the lowest clod by the roadside, up to the towering form of inspired and inspiring genius, the sweet song of life's unbroken continuance vibrates like the harmonious chorus when all the sons of God vied with the morning stars in peans of gladness to the Creator and Giver of life. I pray you do not let man's inhumanity to man break up the sweet and tender harmony of your associated lives. Do not let the cruel formulations of a crude and childish age so jar the beautiful instrument of hope and trust as to produce inharmony in the soulful chorus of the universe. I pray you, let the doubter doubt; let the stereotyped creedmonger cleave to his creed; but let the untrammeled children of the All-Father trust and be not afraid. Our loved one has gone out from among us into the blessed mysteries of the hitherto unknown. She was good and true to all her obligations, and her demise brings no doubt, no misgivings; for when the lightning stroke of inevitable law smote her, it was the sweet spirit of rest which kissed her eyelids to the rich repose of dreamless sleep. Why should I hurl thunderbolts at this sleeping clay? Because she was smiling and gracious in her communion with her friends and neighbors? Because her heart answered to the cry of sorow and distress? You do not forget how you used to linger in the serenity of her kindly nature. Shall she be condemned for all these? If so, I do pray that my lot may be with one so kind and true. She was not perfect; who is? But think you that "Those upon whom the tower of Siloam fell were greater offenders than all them that dwell at Jerusalem?" Whatever the results of this life, the other will certainly be better. Since God is God, and infinite in all his attributes and perfections, infinite good must finally triumph over every form of evil. It was for love of such as these, of you, of all that brought the revelations of the unassuming prophet of Nazareth to the world. Justice and mercy meet together in the bosom of the eternal; and the arbitration of these divine forces shall regulate all the hard circumstances of this short life.

Wherever man strives to live up to the best there is in him, there need be no fears as to his future. We are not going to be judged by what we are; not by what we profess to be; not even by the best that is in us, but by what we all desire to be. When you understand the limitations of our human natures, and the weakness of the flesh, it is exceedingly difficult for us to be what we would be.

So in this change which comes to us all, we simply pass through the low corridor of so-called death into the larger universe of development. I believe that the word "death" should be stricken from human language and the word "change" substituted. The scientist tells us that the tissues and material of the body pass out into nature every seven years. I was here forty, fifty years ago, but this body was not. Nature with gentle fingers has gathered up the used fragments and restored them again to their constituents in Nature. So in this peculiar change, the decaying fragments of the body are thrown out into Nature, and through air, moisture, soil, vegetation, it again returns to the various forms of life; but the spirit—the freed spirit—passes into the deathless clime, and frequently comes to us to cheer and guide us. This dear one was cheered by the presence of the loved who had gone before, and came with light and joy to bear her company from the shattered gardens of this narow sphere to bloom forever in the garden of the bright Summer Land.

How frequently I am told that this faith will do to live by, but it will never do to die by, forgetting that every man must die by the life he has lived.

As to our relations to the Infinite, we read that in the beginning God breathed into man the breath of life. God did this. Who is God? I think he is the all-pervading, all-permeating, all-wise, all-powerful, beneficent force in the universe, everywhere diffused, for, "If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, lo! God is there; if I make my bed in hell, lo! God is there." Where God is there is love, and where love is there is happiness. So when he "breathed" into man, it was the Divine copulation of the Spirit with the material. He inspirited the spirit. That is, impregnated humanity with Divinity, making humanity as much his child as can be conceived through the natural laws of consanguinity. This fact was what led Paul to declare "One God and Father for all, who is in all and through all." "For of him and through him and to him are all things." Nothing can separate us from the love of life. "For I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God."

So let us be ready to meet the loved who have preceded us to the land where no sorrow comes, and where they shall no more say, "I am sick." Let us make that preparation that shall usher us with joy into the homes which are being prepared for us over there.

A MESSAGE TO THE SEER, DR A. J. DAVIS.

To Andrew Jackson Davis, from Spirit Henry C. Wright, through the Mediumship of Eva A. Cassell.

My thoughts, and also those of hosts of workers on this side of eternity, have been going out to you—as a cheer, as a blessing, for the great work you have done in the past and are doing to-day. Many questions have you asked, and sought the answer, like all honest souls who seek the wherefore of the trend of things. Many times have your yearnings reached those in spirit life who have responded gladly along the telepathic route with messages of love and peace. We bring you tributes of affection and appreciation to-day for the great work, which could only be given you in the morning of your life, and at a time when the best results were assured, the events of which you will fully understand when you pass into the spiritual spheres. The veil will be rent aside and you will understand. Just as souls are born purposely to receive spiritual truths, so also were you born to be the prophet of that earlier dispensation. It is true that some mortals are led to each other in wedlock for the one mission of gestating a Christ, a teacher, a reformer; often, their mission done, the parents drift apart in life.

There are spirit hands to-day, brother, who place the crown of laurel upon your brow, crying, "Hosanna! Hosanna!" for the apostles of the so-called "New Thought," may date the cult not in this twentieth century, but fifty years back in the last one, to the time when you first preached, in plain English, "A human soul gains nothing by FIGHTING the conditions of evil. Let it alone—go straight over the evil to that condition which is good."

The doctrine of non-resistance—the greatest teaching ever given to mankind—was taught by you over fifty years ago. Some day you shall behold, with your spiritual eye, the influence your thought has made on the lives in this century; some day you shall behold the filaments of infinite truths of to-day, reaching far back to the time and place where you first spoke to the multitudes. Each thought, each word, has come a-down these scores of years and borne fruit. There never has been a time when you or the word of God you preached has lain dormant; it has been the leavening power for fifty years among the world's people.

This is a glorious age, brother, and though the spiritual faith seems a little dulled in brilliancy, yet fear not, good friends, it has done a wonderful work for humanity; it is a continual leavening force in the affairs of humanity, though it may not be accepted as Spiritualism, distinctively; but why should we care? Titles, names, cognomens, count for very little in the world's growth; development, human unfoldment, is the proof. To many classes of people the spiritual faith would be ever unaccepted—in fact, repudiated. The wise souls or angels who ever have the growth of humanity in charge, must seek other methods of progress and raise up apostles of newer faiths to give the needed teaching, in newer guises, perhaps; but the bottom plank is there—the unfoldment of the spiritual man on earth, to fit him for the continuity of life beyond—for eternal progression in the spheres beyond. It is possible that Spiritualism, as you know it to-day, may be later on merged into another form, and under another name, which will prove more acceptable to certain minds on earth it is desirous of reaching to-day. The world moves ever on and civilization marches with it. Religions have their day, are thrown aside, and progressed nations never take them up again—in that form; it must be under a higher form, a form that will answer to the new growth of humanity. Spiritualism under a higher form and name would simply prove that, instead of remaining still—stagnating—it had kept pace with progression and unfolded into higher altitudes, since all things change, to grow nobler and better.

Spiritualism has done superhuman work in freeing man from the shackles of superstition, and it will still march boldly on, in other forms, freeing the spiritual man from errors of the past, leaving him at liberty to unfold his own divine powers as an immortal soul. And when I look abroad over the earth I am filled with joy; this is an era of soul, an epoch of human love and brotherhood, where all men will combine to lift each other out from the depths of labor and suffering, up to the heights of peace and love. Yes, man is slowly extricating himself from the sloughs of despondency and gloom to more harmonious planes of existence.

I turn now to man's helpmeet, the dearly beloved for whom I travailed on earth, and sought more peaceful, appreciative walks of life, Woman. In tears of anguish does she bring forth her young, asking mutely for the help that never seems to come. With her I stood for years and strove, with my weak arm to bear her up to the planes of a higher, a nobler comprehension by the world of men. She cannot procreate, alone, a race of gods to rule over and bless the earth, instead of human mongrels to curse. Man must, in time, come to understand her more fully, and give her her rightful position—as the crown of creation, the superior of her species. Evolution unerringly points to Woman as the most highly endowed and unfolded of all created forms. Darwinism and Evolution teaches that what appears last in the scale of species is the highest of all, and since the creation or advent of Woman, no other species have been created! Woman should be given her rightful position before the world, and Man should give her the best conditions for gestating the human being.

Oh! my soul longs to enfold the agonizing humanity. My best thought is ever for its good. Now, as ever, I stand ready to point the way upward to the world of men seeking the light. Nay, as ever, my word of cheer is for the weary wayfarer who drops out in the struggle of the survival of the fittest, and I say, "Rise up, brother; take fresh courage and try again. The heavens are pregnant with mercy, and unseen angels are opening the avenues to peace and plenty. The time will come when sorrow will be no more; when joy and comfort and prosperity will rule on earth.

To workers and mediums everywhere I say, yet a little more labor in the vineyard and the way will open to other forms of thought, needing teachers to promulgate spiritual truths. Have your lamps ready, filled with the oil of advance and reform along spiritual ways. The spirit of Truth is being poured over the inhabitants of earth to-day and apostles will be needed to work in the vineyard. All right-thinking men and women should send forth their kindest thought to bless and sustain these workers. I thank them and for the good word spoken to my charge and pupil; my deep gratitude to Brother Pierpont and his faithful co-worker on the mortal side, for their kindly interest and assistance in her unfoldment; for their words of cheer and encouragement when all seemed dark and fraught with gloom. I feel thankful for every kind word given to a struggling soul of earth who needs your help and compassion, for there are many. Angel hosts draw near to sustain, and mortals should help in the good work by noble efforts to lighten the burdens of these struggling ones. My heart goes out to you all, my best aspirations for your joys, your delights and your welfares. My interest still centers in human kind, and now and always shall I work for their unfoldment.

OKLAHOMA SPIRITUALISTS.

Condensed Report of the Annual Convention of the O. S. S. A.

The First Annual Convention of the Oklahoma Spiritualists' Association, which convened in Oklahoma City, Okla., September 3, 4 and 5, at the K. of P. hall, was called to order on the morning of September 3 by the vice-president, Mr. G. G. Lee, of Roosevelt, Okla., the president, Mr. Simmons, being unable to attend, being in Colorado at the time. The convention proceeded in the regular order of business, the different committees were appointed and attended to their work with zeal. The president's, secretary-treasurer's and the State missionary's reports were read and accepted, and being quite lengthy documents we are unable to cite them. All the reports of the officers to the convention showed plainly the beneficial effect of organization upon the members and societies in the new State, and certainly were interesting from many points. According to the report made by the State misionary, Mrs. A. Baker, we have three chartered societies as a result of the first year's work, viz.: Oklahoma City, Lawton and Perry, besides a goodly number of individual memberships. As all beginnings, as a rule, have been comparatively small, we can nevertheless feel proud of the results achieved through the earnest efforts of the missionary and the State officers, in an entirely new field.

On the third day of the convention the same proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows: G. G. Lee, of Roosevelt, Okla., president; J. F. Piercy, of Meeker, Okla., vice-president; Frank Anlauf, of Oklahoma City, scretary; Mrs. G. H. Beebe, of Oklahoma City, treasurer. Trustees: Dr. A. Bolston, Oklahoma City; Dr. L. Stansbury, Wells, Okla.; R. G. Lee, Hedrick, Okla.; E. T. Oden, Perry, Okla.; M. Parmenter, Lawton, Okla.

A vote of thanks was extended to all the old members of the board, also to the State missionary, for their faithful and unselfish work in behalf of the cause during the last year.

It was also unanimously resolved to hold next year's convention in Lawton, Okla., in the second week of September, 1908.

In conclusion I want to say that the convention was honored by the presence of Mr. John W. Ring and Max Hoffman, two well-known and highly appreciated talents, who certainly did their best to make this convention a sucess, giving us some helpful advice and presenting philosophy and phenomena to the soul-hungry public in a most acceptable manner; not to forget our worthy State missionary, Mrs. A. Baker, and her son Milton, who also contributed liberally to the feast spread before us.

The members of the local society, with their pastor, Mrs. S. E. G. Thorp at their head, vied with each other in doing delegates and visitors homage, and it was largely due to them that the convention took more the aspect of a family reunion than a mere business affair.

And now, every Spiritualist in Oklahoma to the work, so that next year's results may be even greater.

WHITE SAVAGES IN AFRICA.

The First White Folks Were Africans.

The first white folks were the Africans—so the wise folks say. How many have heard of the white race of the Atlas mountains in Morocco? Its people have features have features like ours and some of them have blue eyes and red hair. Many have rosy skins and complexions so fair that if dressed in European clothes they would not be out of place in New York or Paris. Others are darker from their admixture with the Arabs and Moors. This race is scattered through the mighty mountains of northwestern Africa. It is composed of the Berbers and Kabyles, who are numbered by millions and are found everywhere around those hills. The Berbers are the oldest white race on record. They are supposed to have come from southern Europe, but if so it was when Europe was savage, eating with its fingers and sleeping on the skins of wild beasts in the forests. The Berbers were there when Athens was in its infancy and when Rome was yet to be born. There are records in the Egyptian temples dating as far back as 1,000 years before Christ which speak of them as having rosy cheeks, blue eyes and red hair. There is a dried specimen of one in the British museum. JOHN A. HOWLAND.

STARTLING PREDICTIONS

Your Whole Life Revealed.

Remarkable Psychic Astrologer Tells Past and Future with Amazing Accuracy to All Who Write Absolutely Free.

Men and Women from All Parts of the World Seek His Advice About Love Affairs, Business, Health, Journeys, Marriage, Legacies, Changes, Speculation, Etc.

From the great city of New York, where scientists and investigators are eagerly watching the progress of inventions and spending millions of dollars in the perfection of methods by which the masses may be benefited, comes the startling announcement that Professor Albert Postel, the great Astrologer, has perfected a system by which he can foretell the principal events of a life, forewarn people of danger, point out the road to success and explain the cause of failure in so many lives.

The Professor says that he can explain who your enemies are, tell you those persons in whom you can place confidence and from whom you may expect favors, name your lucky days, tell you what pitfalls to avoid, what opportunities to grasp, advise you about your business and how to improve your condition physically, financially and socially. His method is unlike that of any other astrologer, and from the expressions of gratitude contained in the many thankful letters from his patrons, it is evident that much good is being accomplished by his work. The following are samples of the letters received by Professor Postel, and go far toward showing that his Life Horoscopes are not only accurate, but are prepared with a view to guiding and benefiting those who apply to him for counsel.

Effa M. Tryon writes "You are certainly the most wonderful astrologer living. Every one of your predictions came true."

Mr. Broad, real estate agent of Brandon, Can., in a recent letter to Mr. Postel, says "My horoscope is the best instrument of guidance that I have ever had put in my hands. I would not take a hundred dollars for the information you have given me."

Another letter from Miss Bergliot Horne, reads as follows: "I followed your advice and succeeded in securing a position at a much higher salary than I anticipated. I consider the horoscope worth hundreds of dollars to me."

Charts and dials of strange design surround the Professor in his daily work of answering the correspondents and sending out readings to people in all parts of the world. From a glance at the features of Professor Postel, 'tis clear to be seen that he is a man who has a kindly feeling toward humanity, and his manner and conversation tend to prove that he is sincere in his desire to be of real benefit to his clients.

Readers of this paper can obtain a reading free of charge by addressing a letter to Professor Albert Postel, Dept. 661, No. 128 West 34th street, New York, N. Y. Simply say you wish a reading of your life, and be sure to state your birth date, sex and whether married or single. Please enclose 10 cents (silver or stamps) to pay postage and clerical work and the reading, also a copy of Prof. Postel's interesting book, "Your Destiny Foretold," will be promptly sent. Tell your friends to send for a reading also.

THE OTHER SIDE OF DEATH

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

Some Glimpses of Occultism ANCIENT AND MODERN.

BY C. W. LEADBEATER

The following subjects are treated in a most able manner;

ANCIENT:—Theosophy and Christianity; The Ancient Mysteries; Buddhism.

MODERN:—The Unseen World; The Rationale of Mesmerism; Telepathy and Mind Cure: Magic, White and Black; The Use and Abuse of Psychic Powers; Vegetarianism and Occultism; How to Build Character; The Future of Humanity; The Gospel of Wisdom. Well bound in Cloth, with silver back and side stamp. 400 pages. Price, $1.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEAL.

The POSTAGE on papers has been increased to all the British possessions on this continent. On a single paper we are compelled to pay ONE CENTS each week, amounting to 52 cents a year, whereas previously we only paid the pound rates—a mere trifle. Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in The Progressive Thinker can be obtained at this office. Express charges or postage prepaid at the price named unless otherwise stated.

Coal Supply and the Banner of Peace.

All other reasons aside for disarmament of nations, there is one which cannot be lost sight of in the near future. Coal is a necessity to keep a navy afloat. The consumption by the great warships is enormous, and contribute their full share in producing the shortage annually felt in all coal fields. Anthracite is an American production, and this class of coal seems best adapted to produce steam. Its supply is constantly diminishing. Is it not time to take some thought of the generations who are to succeed us and cut off every species of waste, so as not to impoverish those who will have the future destiny of the world in their keeping?

Christian nations distrust each other. The more zealous their faith, the more earnest their effort to be able to cope with the rival Christian nations in arms.

Our government made provision a little while ago for the construction of two mammoth war vessels, to cost ten millions of dollars each. And now comes the information that this number is to be doubled.

The hope of civilization, and of our coal fields, is in The Hague Congress, still in session, and still considering the feasibility of submitting national disputes to arbitration. They should be settled by a congress of nations. Arbitration is an individual affair. A congress, composed of delegates from all the powers, and their acts compulsory everywhere, wars—other than local affairs—would be an impossibility.

Down with the banner of the cross, originally a sign of victory, stolen and used as an emblem of faith when Christianity was forced on the world, and up with the Banner of Peace. Let it wave everywhere, and let Ben Butler's order, "Shoot down at sight any person who attempts to lower that flag" be practically observed, and soon peace will be universal. Then the coal of the world can be used to keep the babies and their mothers warm, and then orders like the recent one for 200,000 tons from Austro-Hungary, and a like order from the Italian government, can be turned down with the information, "We have no coal to sell for war purposes."

A Correction.

A writer some time ago in The Progressive Thinker said:

"The title 'Holy,' interpreted correctly, means Sun Book, or, plural, Books of the Sun."

It is impossible for the writer to find the source of our friend's wisdom. The Greek word Biblia, Christian scholars claim, was first applied in the fifth century to a collection of sacred writings, before which they were known as Scriptures. The English of Biblia is Books.

The word "holy" is an adjective, signifying sacred, hallowed or revered. It has no reference in any way to the sun, and it is a priestly fiction to associate the word with the sun. He who has been misled, and has made the title "Holy Bible" to mean "Sun Book" will do well to reform the derivation of the name.

If you want to know the opinion of your neighbor, you want his honest opinion. You do not want to be deceived. You do not want to talk with a hypocrite.—Ingersoll.

Scientific Thinkers.

There is something about that electrical theory of the universe that profoundly interests philosophers, and must until advanced science has fully settled the question. Prior to the wonderful advancement in knowledge during the last sixty years, but little was known of electricity or its gigantic power. When Morse flashed the news of the nomination of James K. Polk for the presidency, from Baltimore to Washington, in 1844, telegraphy was unknown to the people. Said an old farmer, discussing the subject a little after: "I can understand how the saddlebags may be compelled to glide along the stretched wire, but for the life of me I can't see how they get it over the poles that support the wire."

And the idea of an ocean cable to Europe, a little later, was ridiculed, and esteemed the project of a wild enthusiast. What followed is a matter of history, and the present generation, with its morning news, flashed through an ocean and across two continents, relating the horrors of a few hours earlier of another Jewish massacre, by professed Christians, at Odessa, on the Black Sea, in Asia, compel us to realize we are living in an advanced age, with the brutality of the barbaric ages still on us.

Though electricity is now harnessed to the car of progress, as seen in its propulsion of machinery, and in our trolley railways, yet knowledge is in its infancy in regard to its capabilities, and but a feeble conception is entertained by the most advanced scholars, of the wonders it has wrought in the construction of worlds and the wheeling of them in space.

Upward of fifty years ago Prof. McIntosh, an advanced English scientist, published a volume in which he maintained the electrical theory of light, heat and motion. He insisted light coming from the sun is electric; that it is without warmth until it enters our atmosphere, when its rapid passage of 186,000 miles a second, produces friction, and, incidentally, heat. He claimed the heat increases the greater the distance it passes through a resisting substance, being intensely cold as it enters our atmosphere, but not warm enough to melt the snow on the summit of the loftiest mountains, so they remain covered with perpetual ice.

Since McIntosh wrote, knowledge of the dynamics of electricity has made wonderful progress. Now the entire solar system is considered an immense dynamo, ever generating electricity and distributing it through space.

The current that illuminates and heats the planets is ever active, while all life is nourished from the great central orb, the sun, whose power knows no diminution by age, decay or waste.

A Mr. Greenough, in the Humanitarian Review for September, discussed this question very briefly, from which we extract part of three paragraphs:

"It seems absolutely irrational that the planets of the solar system receive their light and heat from the radiation of an incandescent central orb that has existed [countless] millions of years without diminution. The authority on which this view is based is the apparent phenomenal display of burning gases—raging fires seen in the sun's corona, developed by the spectroscope and other instruments. Knowing, as I do, how deceptive appearances may be, and how often man has been deluded by them, causes me to view these appearances as misconceptions of the reality. Men thought, until a recent day, that the earth was permanent and immovable, and that their senses gave them absolute assurance of it; they now know their error. Now men see the sun's corona and miles of apparently ignited gases exploding and flaming around the sun, which produces the assumption that it is a highly heated body, but which may be but an exhibition of harmless phenomena, such as we see on this planet in the phenomena of the aurora borealis, that, while making a wondrous exhibition, produces no tangible effect on the world we live in. This elucidates what may be expected in the case of a planet a million times larger than the earth and revolving with infinitely greater speed.

"I account for the force that keeps the solar system in action to the excessive velocity of the sun's revolution, which generates an electric force ample, when brought in contact with any of its satellites, to produce light, heat and revolution on its axis and around the central body."

The writer concludes:

"The sun may be inhabited, while all its satellites, receiving about the same degree of heat, are equally fitted for habitation."

If the planetary system is heated, as suggested, by the friction of the light passing through the gaseous surroundings of a planet, then the most distant, as Neptune, may receive equal warmth with the nearest to the sun, so all may be inhabited.

Is not this practical common sense, and in harmony with all the great processes of Nature, when properly understood?

Original with Paine.

Wrote Thoman Paine, first published in his Age of Reason, in 1794:

"The most formidable weapon against errors of every kind is reason."

Thomas Jefferson, in his first inaugural address as president, wrote:

"Error of opinion may be tolerated where freedom is left free to combat it."

The idea is the same, but Paine was six years in advance of Jefferson in giving currency to it.

A Lost Art Greatly Needed.

That the ancients were in possession of many valuable arts which have been lost by the mutations of time there can be no doubt. Many which would be useful in this more progressive age are no longer available. The great monoliths, single blocks of stone used in the construction of pyramids, aqueducts and temples, are frequently mentioned as marvels of engineering skill, difficult of accomplishment with our modern appliances.

There was one wonderful device, probably it would be known as a wind instrument in this age of great achievements, which would defy the mechanical wizards of to-day. Its action is described in Joshua 6:20:

"So the people shouted when the PRIESTS BLEW WITH THE TRUMPETS; [there were seven of them, as related in verse 6] and it came to pass, when the people heard the sound of the trumpet, and the people shouted with a great shout, that the wall fell down flat, so that the people went up into the city, every man straight before him and they took the city."

We venture the statement, there is no device in modern warfare equal to those rams'horn trumpets, however numerous the accompanying voices, which could have prostrated the entire walls of a city so every assailant, wherever located, could have gone straight into the city. Modern marvels could have made breaches in the wall, while little else than an earthquake could have thrown down all the walls at once, as the text, properly interpreted, conveys the idea, was done in this instance.

Jericho, a walled city on all sides, felt that terrible vibration, produced by seven priests blowing on seven rams'horn trumpets, so the inerrant record tells us, when the walls fell, then—verse 21: "And they utterly destroyed all that was in the city, both man and woman, young and old, and ox and sheep, and ass, with the edge of the sword."

The brutal slaughter is no wonder. Such acts were common with those favorites with God at that time. And in this instance, as will be seen by verses 2 and 3, they were acting under the Lord's immediate direction. But it is the instruments used that excites wonder. It is not probable wind instruments with such terrible force were ever known before or since, these being the only instruments of like kind and power mentioned in all history. If the incident had occurred at any other time or place, or had been related in any other book than the Bible, no credence would be given it.

Scholars tell us what has been can be done again. Here is a field that has been neglected, in which Edison or Tesla can profitably display his genius. The stock will be inexpensive. The principal cost will be in giving tone and volume, though a blowhard priest may supply the latter.

Some patron was anxious we should search the Holy Book, pass by the objectionable features, and only select the useful. We have done so, and here is the result. Now our only ambition is to modernize the rams'-horns and substitute them in place of dynamite or lyddite in assailing walled cities and impregnable fortresses.

The Secular Press Generally Just.

Aside from teachings alleged to come from the spirit world, there is a wonderful amount of literature constantly floating through the secular press bearing on the subject, showing there is either a magnificant conspiracy to foist an imaginary error on the world, else the modern thought has a substantial foundation. If fraudulent, it would be supposed the critical press, ever alive to war on what it conceives false, each of whose readers approximates to hundreds of thousands, would turn its keen searchlight, with brightest ray, upon it. The press does expose individual frauds, and we all thank it most earnestly for such service. It is wished it would drive into obscurity the last one of the fake mediums—impostors, in fact—who practice deception in giving their pretended revelations.

Eliminating all frauds, back of all jugglery, there is a vast amount of unquestionably truthful matter, like the case told of by the ship's physician, of the little girl, published in the Chicago Record-Herald, which was copied into The Progressive Thinker of August 31, first page. If a single patron failed to read it, we beg him to open the paper and lose no time in becoming acquainted with the case. It is only one of many like occurrences met with almost daily in our numerous exchanges.

Such articles, beside spreading the truth, show the drift of public thought. Fifty years ago the press was very shy of giving any countenance to Spiritualism. Those editors who opened their columns to discussion of the new thought were ridiculed and frequently maligned. But the day of the scoffer is passed for believing our loved dead have only laid aside the rude habiliments that encumbered them for a time, to revel with other dear ones who have gone before, in a world of unalloyed bliss. The more thoughtful clergy, in all their funeral discourses, show belief in a continued life. Slumber in the grave until a general resurrection at the end of all things is now never heard of in the pulpit.

LILY DALE REDEEMED.

Wonderful Success of the Camp this Year.

One of the most successful camps of the season of 1907 has been that of Lily Dale. The love feast in the closing hours of Sunday evening, September 1, was an occasion of genuine joy. Mrs. Humphrey, the president, occupied the chair and presented the gentlemen of the official board, one by one, as "her boys," confirming her hold upon every one by her gracious words and manner. She paid a hearty tribute to the work done for the Camp by the retiring and absent secretary, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, which was generously applauded. When the treasurer, Dr. Warne, was introduced, his financial figures fanned the enthusiasm of the unusually large audience to a white heat. The entire $10,000 due the Pettingill interests had been provided for, $3,945 of it having been raised this summer. Besides that, the current expenses of the Camp had been paid and a surplus of $1,500 remained over in the general fund after $600 of necessary expenditures between the seasons of 1906 and 1907 had also been met. What other one of all our camps can point to over $2,000 cleared this season, besides providing for practically $4,000 of debt?

We congratulate the Spiritualists of the United States upon having such a Summer Assembly as the one upon the shores of the Cassadaga Lakes. We also congratulate the stockholders and friends of Lily Dale upon having so efficient and straightforward an official board as the present one. The trustees themselves give much of the credit for the outcome to their president and treasurer. The confidence and co-operation of the people made the glorious victory over discouragements possible. The season of 1908 will be a "hummer" at Lily Dale! Godspeed to the toilers there from the East and West. In the union of all sections lies strength and breadth of accomplishment.

A NOTABLE WEDDING.

Warne-McKeever Nuptials.

Among the early fall weddings in Washington was that of Mrs. Minnie C. McKeever, one of the best known women of Washington, Pa., and the widow of the late Robert McKeever, to Dr. George B. Warne, professor in the Hahnemann Medical College, Chicago, last night. The ceremony was performed at 8:30 o'clock by the Rev. Dr. William E. Slemmons, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington. The bride is a daughter of Mrs. A. B. Caldwell, East Wheeling street, at whose home the nuptials occurred, in the presence of the immediate friends and relatives of the bride and groom. Beautiful decorations in green and pink prevailed. Mrs. Warne is the oldest member of the A. B. Caldwell firm, having for many years been in the office at the establishment. She has a large acquaintance among the people of Washington. Dr. Warne is a man of wide reputation in his profession. Dr. and Mrs. Warne left Washington last night immediately after the wedding and will reside in Chicago.

We take great pleasure in publishing the above from a Washington paper. Dr. G. B. Warne is prominent as a professor in the leading homeopathic medical college of Chicago, president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, vice-president of the National Spiritualist Association, treasurer of the Lily Dale Assembly, an eloquent, logical lecturer, and one of the foremost and most efficient workers in the ranks of reform. The bride is a cultured lady, one whom it is a pleasure to meet, and the two leading factors in the home of The Progressive Thinker take great pleasure in congratulating the happy pair, and are pleased to announce that their future home will be in Chicago.

Each Sect Has a Basic Text.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father.—John xiv:12.

Each of the varying sects of christendom, to the number of over 1,000, from the beginning until now, have some pretended saying of Jesus on which they base their faith.

The passage above quoted is the corner-stone of Christian Science, as expounded by Mrs. Eddy. It seems to fully support her claim. Not one of the sect is willing to accept the doctrine of "Hate," as expounded by the Master, Luke 14:26, without which he cannot be a disciple of Jesus. Disguise it as we will; try to explain it away; say the word "hate" in its original did not mean hate; let priest, prelate, pope, or a good Methodist exhorter try to get rid of the awful text, with its hateful meaning, it is still there, and will remain there, and convey the Anglo-Saxon idea of "intense aversion, animosity and malignity" so long as the book is accepted as the inspired word of God. The millions of Bibles printed and circulated with a lavish hand extend this doctrine of "hate" to all its multitude of readers.

Keep it constantly before the world, that Christianity is not a doctrine of love, as the preachers want us to believe; but its foundation corner-stone, from the words of the great teacher, is HATE!

THE FINITE AND INFINITE.

Analytically Considered as Applied to God.

The unknown of to-day which becomes the known of to-morrow is just as finite as any of our acquired knowledge. In other words, the finite does not end with the known, but extends out beyond our present limits of knowledge into the unknown.

The finite, then, not only legitimately includes that which is known, but it may also embrace all that man is yet to learn throughout the course of his future progress, here and hereafter. Indeed, all knowledge that has been, now is, or will be, may very properly be called finite knowledge.

With this understanding of the finite, the question naturally arises, would there be any remainder after all the finite was subtracted from the universal? Either something or nothing would remain, but which?

Anyone who is willing to assume the risk of a choice may postulate either one of the propositions, but if anything really is left over, it seems to be impossible for man ever to verify the facts. Therefore, throughout all the future years of spiritual existence the fact as to whether there is a surplus will remain indeterminable.

But there is a possibility of NO remainder after subtracting the finite—the possibility that the finite completely exhausts the universe. In this case, if distinctions are to be maintained between the finite and the infinite, the former might be regarded as anything with definite extension or intensity, and the latter as that which has indefinite extension or intensity, or that which may be said to have endless possibilities of growth.

This kind of infinite is not so much the infinite, according to metaphysics as it is the infinite according to mathematics. In metaphysics the infinite corresponds to that—if there is any such thing—which lies beyond the finite in thought or fact. In mathematics the infinite designates "a quantity conceived as always increasing so as to exceed any other assignable quality in value. The latter is sometimes called a functional infinite.

This eternally unanswerable question as to which of these infinites is real may be of service to man in helping him suppress conceit and cultivate humility. Otherwise there seems to be little justification for there being such a problem.

Now there seems to be some confusion in applying these terms, finite and infinite, to God. If the infinite is considered as the remainder left after subtracting all the finite from the universe, then there is a difference in kind between the finite and the infinite. If the infinite is considered as the finite indefinitely extended, then between the finite and the infinite there is no difference in kind, but only a difference of degree.

In applying the former idea of infinite to God, the outcome is a transcendent God; by applying the latter idea, the result is an immanent God.

The transcendent God is held to be outside of the finite universe. He has, therefore, no attribute that man in any degree can comprehend. For any thought that man could think would be a finite thought, so not applicable to this kind of a God.

One inference from this would be, that as man can have no idea whatever of such a God, it may be seriously questioned whether this God knows anything whatever about man. That is to say, if the finite cannot touch at any point an unknowable infinite, can this infinite find any point of contact with the finite?

Another and more interesting inference is to the effect that any notion, however vague, which man may form of God cannot be an idea about a strictly transcendent God, but is one about an immanent God. For if every notion that quivers in the consciousness of man is finite, how is it possible for man, either now or in eternity, to form even the most indefinite notion of anything really unknowable? When he claims to know anything, his knowledge is alone concerned with that which is knowable, or in other words, with the finite and the functional infinite. And as the only God that can be imagined as coming into contact with his universe is one who comprises it, at least in part, we may reason that when man has any notion whatever of a Supreme Being that is more than mere nothingness, it is an idea of an immanent God and not of a transcendent one. Therefore, may we not postulate an immanent God with less risk of error than a transcendent one?

Man, by persistently looking upward to an immanent God to whom he can rationally accord any exalted attribute, may thereby acquire a devoted spirit, and finally, faith in an ever-present and humane Father of all mankind.

SEPARATION.

How oft in sorrow's darkest, gloomiest hour,
When those we fondly cherish say the word adieu,
When separation leaves her saddening power,
An all our brightest hours are fled than once we knew,
Grieved and alone in this wide world of sorrow,
Alas, we sadly turn for some responsive heart,
Fearing despair awaits the coming morrow,
'Tis then our hopes and dreams of happiness depart.

Our brightest days are ofttimes turned to mourning,
And we forget each cloud a silver lining bears—
And that the darkest hour is just before the dawning
And Nature, after Winter's frosts, bright verdure wears.
Then let us cherish all the good around us,
And all the ills of life adjust as best we may;
Then love divine within the heart will guide us—
And lead us on and upward to a perfect day.

Definitions of Terms.

Correction and Further Elucidation by Hon. Charles R. Schirm, of Baltimore, Md.

By way of correction I wish to call attention to the fact that the word "subjective" should be "objective" in the first line of section (a) of paragraph 18 in the article published in the issue of September 7th and 14th.

In this paper I hope to submit all the data I have left under the subject of clairvoyance. This work expands as one gets into it and takes more time than was at first realized. I have been spending much time at public libraries, delving into dictionaries and encyclopedias as well as devoting much time in the evening reading works of Spiritualism. Should I be unable to continue this search, I will try, nevertheless, to get before the Spiritualist the matter contained in the letters turned over to me by President Barrett.

Under the 18th section of the article published in last week's issue, I endeavored to give a definition of "objective" and "subjective" clairvoyance. These definitions assume the more or less conscious condition of the medium, or, to be more accurate, the, at least, partial dominion and control of the mind of the medium over his physical body. After careful reflection it seems to me that two definitions of trance clairvoyance should be added as follows:

18 (c)—There is a clairvoyant state in which the control of the physical body of the medium is assumed by a spirit intelligence, and the consciousness of the medium is for the time being dethroned. In this case the controlling spirit is really the clairvoyant, and simply uses the medium's body as a means of communicating to us what the spirit sees.

To some persons who go to mediums for readings, and who may become witnesses at legal trials, it may not appear that, under the trance control, the medium is, to all intents and purposes absent; therefore, in dealing with definitions of clairvoyance to be used for the enlightenment of courts and others, it seemed to me necessary to refer to this phase, which may, for convenience, be called clairvoyance under trance control.

18 (d)—There is another form of clairvoyance which occurs when the body is in a trance state: when it is in a passive condition like sleep. Under this form the spirit leaves the body and is able to travel to remote places and see clearly what is transpiring in the places it visits. This trance state may be induced by the hypnotic power exercised by an incarnate spirit over the medium, or it may be induced by the power of the decarnate spirit, or it may be spontaneous. While in this state it sometimes happens that the thought expressions of the spirit of the medium in its travels are expressed by the lips of the physical body. This may be due to the fact that there is a spirit cord which connects the body and the spirit and transmits vibrations between them. As long as this spirit cord is not severed, the spirit may return to the body; but should it be severed, then what we call death would at once ensue. This form of clairvoyance may be called cataleptic clairvoyance.

19—"Clairvoyance is defined as the power of perceiving without the use of the organ of vision with its natural powers alone, or under conditions in which the organ of vision with its natural powers alone would be useless. Various methods of clairvoyance are accounted by direct vision of things at a distance (opaque substances being no hindrance), by looking into a black surface, by looking into water, into a crystal, etc., or by laying the object to be described on the forehead or chest of the clairvoyant; but clairvoyants now usually represent the cerebral region as the seat of illustration."

"From remote antiquity the possession of such powers by favored individuals has been believed."—The Americana, Universal Reference Library, Vol. 4.

20.—"Clairvoyance: A term applied to a condition of the mind or the 'mind's eye' usually induced by a mesmeric influence, in which it is alleged the mesmerized person can see not only in the dark, but the most intricate internal arrangements of his own or of another's body, and even the remotest objects, though separated from the clairvoyant by interposing walls or mountains."—Pronouncing Medical Dictionary. By Joseph Thomas, M. D., L. L. D., p. 137; 1886.

21.—"An alleged ability to see in a trance state objects and occurrences which are not discernible in the normal state. Belief in the clairvoyance of the hyppotic trance is as old as history. Socrates, Apollonius, Cicero, Pliny and Tertullian, all furnish records of the prophetic visions and utterances of clairvoyants. In later times the visions of Swedenborg and Davis have become widely known."—New International Encyclopedia, p. 682; 1902.

22.—"Clairvoyance: It presents many gradations from semi-consciousness to profound and deathlike trance. Socrates and Apollonius predicted and were conscious of events transpiring at remote distances. Cicero mentioned that when the revelations are being given, someone must must be present to record them, as 'these sleepers do not retain any recollection of them.' Pliny, speaking of the celebrated Hermotinus of Clazomenae, remarks that his soul separated itself from the body and wandered in various parts of the earth, relating events occurring in distant places. During the periods of inspiration his body was insensible."—Hudson Tuttle's Article in Johnson's Universal Cyclopedia, Vol. 2, p. 313; 1894.

WHAT IS SPIRITUALISM?

A Definition Tending to Elevate the World to a Higher Plane.

Spiritualism is not alone the belief in the phenomenon of spirit return (though it is most often supposed to be that), but it is really the opposite of materialism. To be a Spiritualist should mean, first and last, one of a spiritual nature; one who has reached out above the quagmire of material things into the heights of the realms above; one who has begun to realize his kinship to a higher source, his relationship to the fountainhead of the universe; the recognition, in other words, that he is truly a child of God, and with this recognition will also come the responsibility engendered by this fact.

Once we have truly realized our position in the universe in regard to God and his creatures, we will rise nobly and earnestly, and with the utmost zeal, and endeavor to try to live up to the obligations thus placed upon us. We will see that our possibilities for good are boundless; that our only limitations are those conjured up by our lower self; that the divine part within us cannot fail or falter, but that we can climb to any heights we may desire; that we will so cleanse and purge our nature of undesirable things and spiritualize it that it will be a shining light indeed to those about us and with whom we come in contact, so that our very presence shall radiate love, kindness and good-fellowship to all, and that our deeds and actions, rather than words, shall teach the world our Spiritualism, and that it shall be a beacon light to those struggling in the slough of despond and despair, and in the turmoil of daily life and strife of existence, and those who in moments of weakness have gone down to the depths, where they believe themselves irretrievably lost, as in the quicksand of sin and crime they have even given up the struggle of trying to extricate themselves.

Go to them and tell them there is hope for all, no matter how deeply they may have fallen, if they will but make one last effort and appeal to that divine spark within, which, though apparently black and dead in the ashes of the soul, will yet come back and be fanned into life again at the first faint instance of desire. Hold out a helping hand to them and let them know that just as deeply as they have fallen, so are they capable of rising and lifting themselves to any height they may wish.

Let us show them that we are indeed "our brother's keeper," and are ready and willing at all times to help him over the rough places, and show him the way and give a word of encouragement, and not only to remember that we are children of God, but brother or sister to every one of his creatures, be they man or beast, and that we must let our light shine according to our understanding. This, friends, is what we would term our Spiritualism.

'Tis this which helps the world along,
And sheds along the weary path
A ray of light, a flower or song,
A gift which every mortal hath.

THE MOVING POWER.

She Thinks It Consists Solely of Mind.

Professor Larkin says: "I believe the time will come when matter will be moved by mind."

In my opinion every atom of matter always has been, and always will be, moved by mind. Without mind matter could not exist. Mind moves the universe, from the greatest to the smallest. It is the power which creates forms, colors—all that exists—and moves them.

The worlds which move in space are endowed with life, therefore mind. They move in unison and harmony as they sing, although our ears are rarely attuned to hear "the music of the spheres."

Mind, the Great Spirit, God, Om, of which we and all things are a part, both animate and (so called) inanimate, is over all, through all.

The invisible in Om, God, or Nature, is ever the most potent, and Mind, the controlling, moving power we know, is invisible.

CONSISTENCY.

As Elucidated Briefly by Mrs. C. K. Smith.

In the fourth chapter of St. John's Gospel in the New Testament are the words: "Come, see a man who told me all things which ever I did. Is not this the Christ?"

What is telling a woman all things which she ever did but a "life reading," for doing which mediums are persecuted and arrested to-day, and this by Bible Christians who are preaching and exhorting people to follow Christ and daily do as Jesus did?

Do the majority of so-called Christians follow Christ, or read the Bible enough to know in what the following of Jesus consists? A babe is sprinkled in infancy, a church ordinance, confirmed at the age of twelve years, kept in Sunday school as a pupil until old enough to teach a class, feeling quite at home in the church, and whatever his present more liberal views may be, he finds it easier to remain than to withdraw.

But Spiritualists must not be so ignorant or conceited as to suppose that they are the only people who believe in progression; not only believe in it, but actually do progress, and when a church member attends for the first time a Spiritualist meeting he expects to hear Spiritualism propounded and explained, and if instead of Spiritualism being the theme of the speaker he should tell you what the orthodox churches are at present teaching, and what they taught in the past, the latter would look like ignorance, and the Spiritualists better go to church and learn that orthodox ministers do not preach to-day as they did many years ago, but are largely imbued with Spiritualism.

A friend of mine in Illinois, when solicited to join a Methodist church in her vicinity, frankly told them that she was a Spiritualist. The response was, "That don't make any difference; many of our members believe that way." Spiritualism taught in an orthodox church is very acceptable.

As Spencer G. Russell wrote me not long before he died, in Illinois: "I am a Spiritualist, and take The Progressive Thinker, but am a member in good standing in the Baptist church.

No doubt the majority of the members of that church are Spiritualists.

"Beware of religion," says a Chinese mandarin, meaning beware of superstition. "Missionaries come here who know nothing about Confucius, and we think them ignorant." The word "religion" would not be objectionable if separated from superstition. Some people think religion is only superstition, and interpret the symbolisms, allegories and parables to suit themselves.

WONDERS OF THE HEAVENS.

Evening Star Visible to the Most Penetrating Telescope is a Hot Sun.

"Twinkle, twinkle, little star," no one wonders what you are, for the astronomers say you are not. Stars have gone out of fashion. They have no astronomical meaning and should be omitted from astronomical literature. The astronomers have arrived at the conception that all the structure visible in the most powerful telescopes is made of space, suns, planets, moons, nebulae, comets, meteors, and cosmic dust. Every star visible in the most penetrating telescope is a hot sun. They are at all degrees of heat, from dull red to the most terrific white heat to which matter can be subject. Leaves in a forest, from swelling but to the "sere and yellow," do not present more stages of evolution. A few suns have been weighed and found to contain less matter than our own; some are of equal mass; others are from ten to twenty and thirty times more massive, while a few are so immensely more massive that all hopes and bases of comparison fail. Every sun is in motion at great speed, due to the attraction of all the others. They go in every direction. Imagine the space occupied by a swarm of bees to be magnified so that the distance between each bee and its neighbor should equal 100 miles. The insects would fly in every possible direction of their own volition. Suns move in every conceivable direction—not as they will, but in abject servitude to gravitation. They must obey the omnipresent force, and do so with mathematical accuracy.

An Important Question Asked by D. Edson Smith.

To the Editor:—If Prof. Lockwood is wrong in his idea that the potentiality of all that pertains to any individual organism is contained in the two uniting cells, male and female, at the time of coition, will Brother Dawbarn, or some Theosophist who knows, please tell us where the "Selfhoods" are before entering the personality?

If the origin of man's selfhood is outside the origin of his personality, is it not so with all other animals? If not, why not? Are not the selfhoods of some elephants, dogs and horses of a higher grade than that of some men?

Do not selfhoods finally become perfected so they do not have to be re-embodied in earthly bodies?

Then will not the supply of selfhoods sometime run short for the personalities begotten?

Yours for more light,

Stanford-Bailey Seances.

Held at Melbourne, Australia, and Visited by the Pilgrim, Doctor J. M. Peebles.

Barely had I reached home in Battle Creek, the dust of many lands upon my garments, before I received several letters to this effect: "Did you see that wonderful medium Bailey in Australia?" "Is he genuine or a fraud?" "Is he what the Spiritualist press has represented him to be?" "Has he no confederates?" "Does he not purchase these apports and through sleight of hand drop them upon the table?" "Is he ever coming to America?" "Is it really true that ancient manuscripts, Babylonian tablets, oriental head-dresses and amulets, old coins in Caesar's and King Asoka's time, plants unknown in Australia, live fish, live birds, etc., are brought into seances, through the solid walls, doors being locked?" etc. Yes, yes! All these, and then the one-half has not been told.

Of Mr. Stanford I have only to say that he is the brother of the late Hon. Leland Stanford, builder of the great California University. This Melbourne brother of his, formerly our vice-consul in Melbourne, is an influential and wealthy citizen, a keen observer, a scholar and an extensive business man, honored by thousands for his strict moral integrity. He gives these seances free, paying the medium from his own purse; and be it said to his honor, he never sneakingly, cowardly denies being a Spiritualist. Everybody in the city and the regions around about know and respect him just as highly therefor.

A few years ago the churches of Philadelphia inaugurated the movement of a house-to-house canvass to ascertain "the status of religion" in the city, and, sad to say, only 129, according to the report, "stood up," willing to be counted as Spiritualists; and yet there were thousands upon thousands of respectable, royal-souled Spiritualists in that Quaker city of William Penn. Reluctantly, yet truly, do I state that the Spiritualists of Scotland, Wales, England and her colonies, are more brave and independent in their religious expressions than Americans, summering and wintering under their floating flag of freedom.

But to return to the Stanford-Bailey seances. This mediumistic sensitive has submitted to every possible test seemingly to satisfy materialists and agnostic spiritists. He never steps into the seance room until carefully examined by one or more of the sitters. He has been stripped to the skin and has gone into the room in other men's garments, the marvelous phenomena occurring just the same.

Dr. McCarthy in Sydney put him, as reported, under this test: He placed a netting over him, nailing it fast to the floor, a strap just above his elbows, buckling it behind him, put boxing gloves upon his hands—tying them tightly around the wrists, and still the phenomena continued, though somewhat more exhausting to the medium. Once inviting Mr. Bailey to my room at Mrs. Fletcher's, I sat with him alone, my knees fairly against his, my hands holding his (broad daylight), and, when entranced, rusty coins fell upon my hands, and two dry, sand-sprinkled ancient manuscripts fell at my feet. These manuscripts, soaked and unrolled, were covered with hieroglyphics.

From my notebook, March, 1907, I take the following:

"Twenty-seven present this evening, and among them physicians, lawyers, and one Presbyterian preacher. Mr. Bailey was examined by Mr. McKenner (a press reporter) and myself. Seance opened with singing and prayer by a spirit through the entranced Bailey. The light was subdued, or partially softened, when the phenomena commenced. The three planes of consciousness and sphere-life were manifest. Apports were brought by the Hindu spirits. A beautiful lecture was given by Dr. Channings, but what interested me most that evening was the bringing in of a live bird unknown to Australia. The room was quite light; I could easily see the time by my watch, when the medium arose, entranced, walked half way around the large table, and looking up for a few moments, stretched up his right arm, the hand vanishing for the moment. We saw distinctly the medium and his arm stretched up, without hand or wrist, when, like a flash, the hand came back to the wrist, holding in it a beautiful bird, known in India. Mr. Stanford put it in a cage to keep. Its mate was brought afterward.

The unvarnished truth is, genuine, phenomenal Spiritualism is NOT "on the decline," though not as noisy and militant as a generation ago. It has become an established fact. It is no longer on trial with the enlightened and the inspired. The Court of Proofs is less and less in session. The ex-witnesses number millions. Preachers are on the run. The verdict of results is now awaited—results relating to the physical, mental and moral salvation of the individual and of all tribes, races and nations.

The Spirits Questioned.

Tired of this dreary sing-song talk of the subliminal, the super-subliminal, the subjective subliminal, multiple personalities, etc., to get around a solid, rational Spiritualism, it was refreshing and uplifting to go into one of Mr. Bailey's seances, meeting a score or more cultured people, and watching Mr. Bailey going into the trances, every contributing intelligence causing a different facial expression, using different gestures, a different voice, and speaking from a different sphere of consciousness. His attending intelligences occupy three different planes of spirit consciousness. Though only an ordinary man in his normal state, when entranced he becomes transformed, transfigured, and the discourses through him from Dr. Robinson upon Babylonia, Assyria, Egypt, the Toltecs and Aztecs, the employments of spirits in the great hereafter, are grand beyond description.

One evening when some of those terra-cotta tablets and other heavy substances fell upon the table, I asked the controlling spirit how they could pass such weighty substances, even live birds, through heavy and solid walls. The prompt reply was:

"To us there are no solid walls. How little you understand—how little you comprehend the chemistries of the heavens. What you call solid walls is to us comparable to what you on your plane would term thinnest, subtilest vapor or mist. If you will tell how a sunbeam passes through a pane of glass, or how the X-ray can pierce wood and brick, impressing an image upon a sensitive plate beyond the brick, you will have gone a long way toward answering your own question. Remember that investigators, artists, chemists and scientists pursue their studies in the ether spheres after the event that you term death, but which in reality is the beginning of, so far as we can judge, a never-ending life."

Mr. Bailey was stronger last winter and his general health much better than when I met him six years ago. He is a poor man, and his good wife as a helpful bread-winner does a small laundry business. Let us not be unjust, but generous, to our sensitive mediums and their families. I do not know when he will come to America. He spoke of it, in my presence, and also of again visiting Milan and Rome.

Having never seen a perfect person, I have nothing to say of Mr. Bailey's alleged peculiarities and eccentricities. Slanderers and assassins of character, that feed and fatten on filth, should hold a mirror before their faces before they stab their kin. Such characters are the moral offal of this planet. It is no light thing to ruin a reputation, even by insinuation. In all my travels I never saw a perfect character nor met a Christian, as I understand christianity, and I never read nor heard of, but one, and Him they crucified some 2,000 years ago in Palestine.

The Plague in India.

Judge Wilson, of Duluth, writes me thus: "As you have just returned from India and adjacent hot countries, permit me to ask you concerning the plague. Has it been subdued? . . . I have a son in Allahabad."

Personally I saw nothing of the plague, and yet, according to the newspaper reports, it prevailed extensively in some parts of the country. During the first three and a half months of 1907 the deaths from the plague in India totaled 494,000.

The plague for the ten years, October, 1896, to December, 1906, shows that there was a large annual increase from 1901 to 1904, the deaths numbering 274,000 in 1901, 577,000 in 1903, and 1,022,000 in 1904—the worst year in ten years until now.

The total deaths for the whole ten years numbered 4,411,212. The improvement which was shown in the two years 1905 and 1906 has not, unfortunately, been maintained.

The Bombay presidency has suffered the most. This Indian plague is a filth disease. The mortality is greater among the poor and the uncleanly. Those who maintain good habits, who are punctilious in their bathing, and who adhere strictly to the vegetarian diet, are seldom attacked.

Books and Books.

Very many complaints have been brought against me during the past two years and more from people who could not procure some of my most important books. While there was justice in their complaints, I plead "not guilty." For many years Colby and Rich, of the Banner of Light, had been my publishers, and the plates, owned by myself, were in care of the now extinct Banner of Light. In its decline the Banner was financially unable to bring out new editions, and I could not for a long time get my plates from Boston, but after a long correspondence, and through the efforts of my friends, Isaac B. Rich, Dr. Lane and others, I procured my plates by paying a heavy storage bill on them and also the freight. They reached Battle Creek only a few days previous to my leaving for the 'round the world missionary journey, and I could not supervise new editions of "Immortality and the Employment of the Spirits," and two, probably three, others of my books out of print. I shall bring out new editions of several of my books this fall and winter.

Communications from a Mohammedan Spirit.

When, in one of the Stanford seances, just before leaving Australia on a previous visit, and conversing of going to Tasmania and New Zealand, Mr. Bailey was, unexpectedly to us, caught in a trance, and kneeling—as do Mohammedans at prayer—said in rather broken English:

"Allah! In the name of God, peace be unto you, the great white teacher, Peebles. There is but one God and we are all his children. Go forth, traveler, and teach other people the great truth, the holy truth, that we are all brothers. This will be clearly seen by all when death lifts the veil. We inspire and help you in your work for Allah's children. The labors of many years have whitened your hairs, but you shall be guarded and your strength renewed until your work is finished. The holy Koran declares that there is no God but one; that he is self-subsisting, creating all men for His pleasure. This truth, with man's brotherhood, you teach. In our spirit life there are no distinctions of race. All are the children of Allah, the Merciful. Then go to your native land, shielded and guarded by angel helpers. No ill shall befall you. Your Aryan brothers of the Islam faith, knowing you, will welcome you on High when your work is done. Our Koran says, 'We will cause you to enjoy a plentiful provision until a prefixed time, and to everyone that hath merit Allah will give an abundant regard.' Peace be unto you, brother, in the name of Allah, the most Merciful."

All felt a calm, sweet spiritual influence during the utterance of these words. Mr. Stanford always has in his seance room a shorthand reporter and stenographer.

Denials of Any Orthodox Teachings. The Influence of Spiritualism.

Every aged Universalist in the land, every intelligent and well-read Spiritualist, knows that for over sixty years I have valiantly fought the soul-crushing creeds and theological dogmas of orthodox theology—such dogmas as the "fall of man" in mythic Eden, the orthodox Trinity, the atonement through blood-shedding, the existence of a personal devil and endless hell torments. And while Unitarians and Universalists have done noble work in this direction, it is only justice to say that rational, religious Spiritualism has been the mighty instrument in remodeling, revising, widening and liberalizing orthodox creeds that now are declining, or dying, or dead, awaiting burial.

Personally, all that I know of a future life and the conditions and employments of those peopling it, I know through mediumistic phenomena; through multitudes of beautiful messages from the realms of the invisible, and from my own psychometric unfolding and clairsentience. Never can I forget the magnificent addresses that I have heard from the dwellers in the heavenly life through Lyman C. Howe, J. J. Morse, E. W. Wallis, W. J. Colville, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Lillie, Mrs. Sprague, Mrs. Kates, Mrs. Russegue, Mrs. Cooley, Mrs. Wallis (of London), and others. These are God's living witnesses of immortality. They are among the anointed that the old prophet said, "Touch not"—that is, touch not to undermine or destroy their influences for human good.

I hope to heaven that Spiritualists would so awake—so rise to the necessity of the occasion—that from conscientious convictions, from the love of divine truth, as to see that such comforts, such conveniences and such finances were supplied these sensitives and message-bearers that they would be free from all worry, and so be enabled to devote their whole time and talents, and energies and vital forces to the good and grand work of present-day angelic ministries.

J. M. PEEBLES, M. D.

TRUE METHOD OF CRITICISM.

With Special Reference to Jesus and His Purported Teachings.

Whenever one of the old-school Atheists, what few there are left of them, takes up the subject of Jesus, he seemingly does it as though having a grudge against him. Why this should be it is difficult to understand, as one would seem to have a right to suppose that those who assume the attitude of this class of thinkers, should at least have tolerance, and likewise a fairness in stating a premise.

The only fair, as well as profitable way to take up a subject with a view to positive adverse criticising is to first give its true supporters the full benefit of their views and position in the matter, and then point from his opposite standpoint of view just wherein he deems them wrong. This is the way to grind out truth for truth's sake.

When an atheist addresses the public on any of the views he cherishes, he usually does so through some Spiritualistic or other equally tolerant and free-minded publication, and this because Atheistic publications are chiefly conspicuous by reason of their non-existence at the present day; and secondly, because no orthodox Christian publication will give him space. This then results in two things that such a writer might well in fairness take into consideration, namely: That he gets public hearing through the liberal-mindedness of those who believe in spirit, and that his remarks reach such class only, in the chief, at least, and not the orthodox Christians who fear and abhor such reading.

Now, inasmuch as Spiritualists, Theosophists, Faithists, and other kindred Free-Thought people (to whom an ultra Materialist or Atheist is a direct opposite in belief), have one distinct view of the Jesus character, and the Jesus or Christ Teachings, it would seem but fair to so concede, before launching out in indiscriminate condemnation of all that Jesus is credited with as having taught.

In other words, the true from the false, the genuine from the spurious, should be accounted for and considered. Many sound thinkers, Scholars and careful delvers after facts of the past, who are not orthodox Christians, and therefore in one sense not "Christians" at all, firmly believe, and show fair reason therefor, that a character such as Jesus is said to have been, did exist in the country and at the time claimed, and that in common with the order of occult students to which he belonged, he did teach the doctrine of non-resistance, and many other self-abnegating virtues. That he was a man and a human being of rare spiritual qualities and soul-light, is all that is claimed for him by Spiritual Free-Thought people.

At this point comes in a matter that all fair-minded disputants should look into, that is, how much of the sayings attributed to Jesus, as given in the Bible and forced onto the world by Constantine and his Nicean conspirators, is genuine and how much is spurious. Books and monkish tales, some perhaps as reliable as a report of the Los Angeles Times of a labor movement, were voted in and voted out by the members of the Nicean Council, until finally they cooked up what has since been claimed by orthodox Christians as verily the literal word of God, and the result was a conglomerate of statements that to this day furnish basis, such as it is, for every sect and ism in the land that calls itself Christian, including Mormons, Holy Jumpers and What Nots.

If Jesus truly taught non-resistance and mildness, forgiveness and tolerant self-abnegation, then it follows he could not have advocated nor threatened use of the sword at the same time.

There are those probably as wise and far-seeing, and who have investigated as deeply, as any modern-day Atheist, who assert positively that all contained in the present orthodox Christian Bible which makes of Jesus an advocate of the use of the sword, is false, interpolated and spurious, purposely put in though such, to give ostensible authority for all war, bloodshedding, oppression, and coercion practiced and done in the name of Christ, but of most un-Christian-like nature.

Constantine and his advisers laid the foundation for establishment of a kingdom on Earth, for power and aggrandizement of its head and other leaders, and with fire and sword, and rack and thumbscrew, it has built up what "Christianity" now represents, and the great mass has for two thousand years, about, been whipped into line by this physical force, and their minds have been terrorized by the fear of the biblical hell, or soothed and lured by promise of its heaven.

The mammonized church of to-day, sunk into materiality, is dominated by the false Christ set up by trickery of the Nicean Council, represented by the spurious and the interpolated in the biblical history of Jesus, and the practices of its followers are so foreign to the true teachings of Jesus as to be astounding. Were the real meek and lowly Jesus to present himself in Colorado to-day and preach as Jesus is said to have preached in Palestine, Governor Buchtel (himself no small 'Christian" to hear what is claimed for him), would have him bull-penned and deported in no time, and if he returned he would likely shunt him into Idaho between two days, "never to leave the State alive," as Governor Gooding was fond of saying about the mining boys.

All Spiritualists and kindred free-thought people, not enslaved by modern "Churchianity," know one Jesus character only, and that the one who taught non-resistance, love, peace, good will and brotherhood. These, then, are not responsible for the false Christ of Churchianity, nor do they uphold his alleged sayings and doings threatening vengeance and damnation upon all who do not fall down and worship him.

Whatever is true and in accordance with eternal fixed principles is always the same wheresoever found and by whomsoever uttered, and with due understanding of and allowance for oriental figures of speech, imagery, parables and occult meanings, in contradistinction to our western literalness and blind materialism there is so much of the alleged sayings of Jesus that embraces the Wisdom Religion, that no earnest searcher after truth can afford to let prejudice, bias, nor other mind-clouding influences to cause their ignoring, and as all free-thought people must choose that which to them appears good and true, no good reason can be seen for assailing Jesus indiscriminately because of misunderstanding of spurious matter worked in deliberately by a false Christ religion, for purposes of world-power and aggrandizement.

The position assumed by a late writer in No. 926 of The Progressive Thinker, who avows he is an Atheist, that the "Resist not evil" doctrine as taught by Jesus, means a forbidding to protect an assailed woman is therefore as far-fetched as it is illogical in the premises, and turning the other cheek when smitten on the right, is a figure of speech that ought to be considered from higher standpoint than that of the prize-ring. Taking no heed for to-morrow has also, of course, a deeper meaning, spiritually and philosophically, than attributed to it by our Atheist fellow-man, and so on along the line of his argument.

The occult writings of the day, some very profound, such as "Secret Doctrine," Oahspe, and the works on the Spiritual Philosophy, have much that bears on subjects such as these, which, owing to deep research and psychic insight certainly throw much light on the Jesus character and his occult teachings.

As all words, wherever and by whom employed, are but more or less imperfect vehicles carrying the spirit or idea therein, for purposes of conveying the same to other minds; and further, as all books, whatever their attributed source, are after all but the expression of some Intelligence, to be taken for what truth they may contain, what benefit is there in damning the vehicle or the intelligence?

If a piece of mineral rock assays $10 per ton, that ten dollars when segregated represents no less than the same amount taken from a rock carrying $1000 per ton.

"Search all things, and hold fast that which is good."

The toiling, patient miner breaks and carries out hundreds and thousands of tons of country rock, debris and barren substance in the getting of a few ounces of the genuine gold, He segregates and leaves the refuse on the dump, and spends no time damning the latter, as he sees the uselessness thereof.

Philosophic truths have to be garnered and extracted in the same way, a little here, a little there, and many mistakes are no doubt made in the siftings, but after all, this is the only way knowledge or rue values are gained, and though the process be laborious, slow and painful, yet we have it to do, or remain idle and get nothing. This is the way mind and soul must be strengthened and made more selfreliant and wise, and in the end truth stands serene and unchangeable, wheresoever gotten or whence derived.

Good Words From Pine Grove, Niantic, Ct.

To the Editor:—Our camp has closed a very successful season. Spiritually and socially much interest has been shown in our weekly meetings, as well as at the Sunday services, which we have held twice on each Sunday, followed in the evening by conferences where the different mediums and speakers for the day have taken part. Through July Mrs. L. L. Hand of Bridgeport, Ct., was our speaker, giving us each Sunday grand and helpful thoughts; her messages were clear cut and given in a dignified manner. We were so well pleased with her good work, that we have engaged her for July, 1908, and as she has purchased a fine location here on our grounds, we shall hope to have her the entire season.

Mr. Wellman C. Whitney of Springfield, Mass., was with us two Sundays in August, doing good work, both in his lectures and his messages. His spirit messages we can truly say are sincere and honest.

Mr. Edgar Emerson of Manchester, N. H., one of the tried and true, came to us for one Sunday, and Mrs T. C. Cunningham of Cambridge, Mass., also created great interest with her powerful lectures and messages.

Your grand and valuable paper came to us every Saturday, and we sincerely thank you. They were gladly received at the close of each service on Sunday, and our President, Mr. Thompson, spoke many good words for it, and I hope many new names may be added to your list.

This is a very beautiful spot; beautiful trees, grass and flowers, and the salt water nearly encircles us; fine bathing and all the pleasures of life are here. We are social and welcome all honest hearted people, knowing they will say, "We are glad to be here." MRS. H. C. BODEN.

The Wonders of Life.

By ERNEST HAECKEL, Author of "The Riddle of the Universe." This book is confined to the realm of organic science, and treats of "The Knowledge, Nature, Functions and History of Life." Price, [illegible] 50.

Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage, in this book of 243 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A Very Suggestive Work Which Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What is unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1.00.

Good Books OF ELIZABETH TOWNE.

JUST HOW TO CONCENTRATE.

This book tells how to use the wonderful forces of being to promote a happy, harmonious and healthy life. It is practical, helpful. Tells how to develop and practice concentration, train the emotions, improve the memory and direct all powers for the betterment of conditions. The very thing for those who feel tied to a life of barren drudgery. Contains the key to better conditions of mind, body and environment. Bound in dove color and green heavy paper; 31 pages. Price, 25 cents.

HAPPINESS AND MARRIAGE.

If you are looking for cut and dried advice on marriage and harmony in the home you won't find it in this book. Most books on marriage are about as much alive as salt codfish. This book isn't that kind. "Happiness and Marriage" is alive, and deals with life. It treats of the every-day problems that confront all married people, and tells how to solve them successfully. It is not a book of theory, but of practice—based on practical experience. Altogether this is one of the most original and striking books the author has yet produced. "Happiness and Marriage" is well printed on heavy laid paper, and contains a portrait of the author. Paper covers, 80 pages. Price, 50 cents.

JUST HOW TO WAKE THE SOLAR PLEXUS.

This unique booklet teaches that the Solar Plexus is a Center or Storehouse of Energy and Power. When this center is normally active it Radiates Life, Health and Strength to the whole body, as the sun radiates warmth and life to the vast system of worlds of which it is the center. The Solar Plexus may be called the Sun Center of the Human Body. The Hindoos of India say that the soul functions through this center The book gives deep breathing exercises of great value, and teaches how to awaken the Solar Plexus to fuller life and mortal activity. Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the most famous woman author in America, says of this book: "It contains a fortune in value if you practice the simple exercises given. It is complete in itself, and is not an introduction to, or advertisement of a larger work. It contains in itself the full teachings of the author upon the subject of the Solar Plexus. Price, 25 cents.

JUST HOW TO COOK MEALS WITHOUT MEAT.

The Multum in parvo of cook books up to date. If you want to know how to live without using animal food this book will help you. It is the result of the author's own actual experience in adopting a vegetarian diet. Space is devoted to the consideration of Soups, Salads and Deserts and several practical menus are given. A booklet for every-day people. It does not tell how to cook elaborate course dinners, but for every-day living it is just the thing. You need the book whether you are a vegetarian or not. Price, 25 cents.

WEST SIDE SPIRITUALISTS WHO ARE WILLING TO TAKE PART IN ORGANIZING A SOCIETY IN THE DISTRICT OF HUMBOLDT PARK, WILL PLEASE SEND THEIR NAMES AND ADDRESSES TO E. J. CARE OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, 40 Loomis Street.

E. W. Sprague and wife are now at their home in the city of Detroit, Mich., where they expect to remain in the missionary, and other fields of work for the grand cause of Spiritualism. Mr. Sprague's services may be secured for Sunday or week-day meetings, weddings and funerals, anywhere in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, or Canada, in places not too far away from Detroit. Mrs. Sprague will also respond to calls for meetings and seances. They are both well known platform test mediums. Individuals or societies desiring their services can address them at 1082 Trumbull Ave., Detroit, Mich.

George E. Corpe writes from Coover, Ore.: "Rev. G. C. Love, of Portland, assisted by Mrs. M. E. Paul, of Walla Walla, Wash., has just closed a very interesting and instructive series of lectures and seances lasting ten days. In his lecture Mr. Love very ably told the people the philosophy of the religion of truth, and at the seances dozens received messages from their loved ones gone before, thus demonstrating the truths told in the lectures. Mr. Love answered an attack of the Adventist minister against Spiritualism in a way to silence him completely. Through these meetings many people of the cove have become interested in the work, and all look anxiously forward to the time when they may again be favored with such an intellectual feast."

Mrs. Hamilton Gill has returned from Onset and can be found at her residence 891 W. Adams street. The usual circles Tuesday afternoon for ladies, and the public circles every Thursday at 8 p. m.

Minnie E. Hanvey writes thus: "Sunday afternoon, September 8, the meeting of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, held at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue, was well attended. There was a short talk by James E. Coe, a veteran in spiritual work, and messages by the well known mediums, Mrs Weaver, Mrs. Harper, Mrs. Hild, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, and Doctor Burgess. In the evvening the speaker was Nora E. Hill, pastor of the Golden Rule Society. Her subject was Life Earthly and Spiritually." Message bearers were Mrs Addie Clybourne, Nora Hill, and Doctor Birgess. A fine lunch was served in the hall between meetings. Speaker for Sunday night, September 22nd, will be the Hon. Charles Hughes."

Dr. P. S. George, of Lincoln, Neb., will leave within two weeks in company with a splendid mental and physical medium, and would like engagements enroute to the Pacific Coast. Address a letter to 1815 K. street, Lincoln, Neb.

Mr. Merkle writes: "On Sunday, September 8, another large audience attended the services of the Students of Nature Society, at Van Buren Opera House. All were more than repaid for their visit in listening to the spiritual truths which were given out by Sister Schumacher, the pastor. Quite a number of skeptics were in the audience, and received communications, and it no doubt will be the means of bringing them into our ranks."

Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, President of the Texas State Association, writes from Fort Worth, Texas: "I lately returned from the second annual camp-meeting at Mill's Park, Hubbard, Texas. We had a nice meeting, and it was decided to enlarge upon what has already been done, and it is the intention to let the public know through the press, that ample facilities will be provided for all who care to visit the camp next summer. It is the intention to organize a camp-meeting Association, and have everything ready so that all who come can be accommodated. It is an ideal location, and to the other attractions the pleasure of boating, bathing, and swimming will be added. Mills Brothers, who own the park, have at their own expense, held the camp for two years, and will have the grounds in perfect condition by the date of the next meeting, which will be some time in August, 1908. There will be tents for those who engage them, and everything done to add to the comfort of visitors. The society in Ft. Worth is moving along, and I have remarkably good audiences."

John Wallace writes from Ashtabula, Ohio: "We have been obliged to postpone the dedication of our Temple until October 6, when all the preliminary work will be disposed of. The 5th and Sunday, October 6, will be devoted entirely to the dedicadory service. We are putting forth an effort to have everything in readiness. An excellent program is being arranged, and some of our best speakers and workers will be with us."

Prof. James H. Hyslop and three children stopped off in Chicago for a few hours while on his return from a lecturing tour to the Pacific coast. He reports increased interest in psychic matters among the scientific and university people of the Coast, as well as a substantial increase in the endowment fund for the American Institute for Psychic Research."

"HARRY'S PHONE TO PAPA."

The above is the title to an impressive song by Mrs. Addie L. Ballou, set to music by John Martin, and published by Weber & North Music Pub. Co., Chicago. For particulars as to price, address Mrs. Ballou at No. 408 Thirtieth street, San Francisco, Cal.

Mrs. Mamie Helyett, a well known medium from Boston, is now located at 634 West Adams street, this city.

Mrs Georgia Gladys Cooley Started for Portland, Oregon, Sunday, Sept. 15, at 10:55 p. m., to remain at her old home for a short visit before starting on her ocean voyage, which begins from San Francisco, October 9. Her first stop will be Yokohoma, Japan, where she will take in much Japan. She will take in that country for some little time, then to Hong Kong, China, Manilla, Australia and New Zealand, where she has an engagement for six months, or up to January 1, 1908. From this place her route around the world has not yet been determined upon. Suffice it to say, however, the good will of united Spiritualism goes with her wherever she may roam, and America's Spiritualistic stamp of "Genuine" is upon her soul as a medium and representative woman of the West. Adieu, but not good bye. The many friends will look anxiously for her return in one year, more or less, and welcome her again to their hearts and homes.

The Chicago Examiner says: "Edward W. Vanderbilt, the aged retired merchant of Brooklyn, N. Y., who married May S. Pepper, the Spiritualist medium, is incapable of managing his affairs because of lunacy, according to a verdict returned by a sheriff's jury in Brooklyn. The proceedings to have Mr. Vanderbilt declared incompetent were brought by his daughter, Miss Minerva Vanderbilt, after Mr. Vanderbilt had married Mrs. Pepper several months ago, and had given to her a large portion of the real estate which he owned in Brooklyn, including the house in which they lived. A brother and sister of Mr. Vanderbilt subsequently joined her in the appeal to the courts. The hearing was held before a jury and a commission consisting of a physician, a lawyer and a banker."

Emma A. Ellis writes: "The first regular meeting of the Band of Harmony will be held in room 309, Masonic Temple, on Thursday, September 26. Everybody and their friends are invited in order to give our President, Mrs. Richmond, a hearty welcome home.

The Illinois Sunflower Club will hold its next tea party on Tuesday, September 24, from 2 until 5 o'clock, at Fraternity Hall Building, 70 East Adams street. As the proceeds of this tea party are to help defray the expenses of a medium who has been ill. We hope for a large gathering, and that the mediums will come and help their sister workers.

S. J. Huntington writes from Malden, Mass: "Sunday evening, September 8, Mrs Annie M. Coggswell of Lowell, Mass., was the speaker and message bearer for the Progressive Spiritual Society, 138 Pleasant St., She spoke briefly on "Let Us Open the Doors of Our Souls, that the Loved Ones May Enter." She then devoted over an hour to beautiful message work. Mrs. Annie K. Chapman of Brighton, Mass, will be the speaker on the 15th, and Fred. B. Niles of Marlboro, Mass, on the 22nd. Our annual business meeting and election of officers for the ensuing year will be held on Monday evening, September 30."

M. Parmenter writes from Lawton, Ohla.: "The Church of Spiritual Light held its first meeting last Sunday in the W. O. W. Hall, Rev. Alice Baker lectured in the afternoon and her son Milton Baker, in the evening. Mr. Baker followed with spirit messages from articles that were laid upon the table by the audience, which was a goodly number. They are located here for the season, until next camp time."

John W. Ring passed through the city this week, on his way to Shelbyvville, Indiana, his permanent address. Direct all letters in care of R. R. 12. Mr. Ring has done a most excellent work in California.

O. Merritt writes from Genoa, Ill.: "Mrs. Georgia G. Cooley, one of our most efficient workers in the ranks of Spiritualism, was with us Wednesday evening, September 4, and delivered a lecture in the I. O. O. F. Hall, taking for her subject, "The Declaration of Principles of Spiritualism." She gave her audience a thorough understanding of what Spiritualism stands for Her readings were exceptionally good, every description being recognized by some one in the audience. It was also pleasing to note that among those who recognized the description were people who are still skeptical, or were at that time. The audience was large, showing that there is a growing interest in this city. It doesn't seem to me to be just the right thing for as good a teacher as Mrs. Cooley to leave this country and go among strange people, when she is wanted so much at home."

Dr. George B. Warne has consented to address the Church of Progressive Spiritualists (colored) on Sunday evening, September 22, at their hall, 3329 Vernon avenue. He should have a packed house, and doubtless will. These people are in earnest, harmonious and enthusiastic.

Mrs. Dr. Cross started for a visit to her old home in the East, Sunday, September 15, and will attend the N. S. A. Convention in October before returning home.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth $1.50.

TO LILY DALE.

Read by Georgia Gladys Cooley to the Assembly.

I know thou art the beauty-spot of all this world to-day,
For thy lovers are so many and I hear their spirits say:
"O, Lily Dale! Dear Lily Dale.
There is beauty in thy shadows, in thy sunshine, in thy breeze,
And within thy very spirit there is such a restful ease,
O, Lily Dale! Dear Lily Dale."

I have never seen thy beauty, only down within my soul,
But my brothers and my sisters have partaken from thy bowl,
O, Lily Dale! Dear Lily Dale.
And I sense their deep emotion as it floats upon the air,
When they feast upon thy beauties in the summer-time so fair.
O, Lily Dale! Dear Lily Dale.

When the earth is bathed with dew-drops and the stars are all aglow;
When the sun is at its zenith and the breezes gently blow,
O, Lily Dale! Dear Lily Dale.
I am dreaming, ever dreaming of the dear ones clustered there,
Of the soul-feasts they are having, and I long to get my share,
O, Lily Dale! Dear Lily Dale.

Aye, my soul of souls is happy in the knowledge that the weal
That is given to my brothers and my sisters I can feel,
O, Lily Dale! Dear Lily Dale.
And it fills my soul with pleasure of the sweetest, purest kind,
When I mingle in the spirit with thy spirit so refined,
O, Lily Dale! Dear Lily Dale.

DR. T. WILKINS,

OUR MENAGERIE.

Interesting Particulars in Regard to the Same.

An old and respectable book tells us that the animals were created on a certain day. That this ancient work on zoology is incorrect, in some particulars, is proven by the fact that the mule is a comparatively modern invention and never was pastured in the Garden of Eden at all.

Curiosity led men to experiment and brought them trouble, along with the mule. While not altogether a product of the imagination, yet when war fires the imagination of men, more mules is the result. Rumors of war always bull the mule market. Lion-tigers and other strange animal freaks are constantly being created by accident and experiment; but no prediction, even, of such things was made in the record. The revisers and publishers of the present seem strangely averse to bringing the new editions up to date. Then, again, the animal species of to-day are not those of previous ages.

There was a time when monkeys did not exist, nor did horses or cows, or any of the species of the present age. There were the prehistoric dinosaurs—those gigantic creatures with teeth, jaws and appetites big enough to eat up a barn along with the hay. Then those awful flying reptiles, pterodactyls, a flock of which, either afoot or aflight, would have made the Garden of Eden unhabitable for man. When enormous reptiles dragged their warehouse bellies over the meadows and gigantic lizards and turtles crawled through the marshes, there would have been no feed for modern species, and so they were left for a later day.

These former immense creatures, with their fearful appetite, bankrupted nature and died of starvation. They gave place, in the evolution of things, to the smaller creatures of to-day. The geologists tell us that instead of the animals being created in a day, they have gone through a course of evolution extending over millions of years. First, there was the simple cell of protoplasm; then molluscs, fishes, reptiles, then prehistoric mammals of gigantic size.

Then came the lemurs, the apes, then pithecanthropus erectus, or the missing link, discovered in Java, about 1900. Then the prehistoric savages of 240,000 years ago. After them the present savage tribes; then the various civilized races.

We expect the human race to develop to a still higher degree on this earth. The greatest philosophers now think that death is but a step in evolution. Strange telepathic powers, latent in the human soul, prove that man is but the embryo of a higher creature. DR. C. C. CARTER.

Judge Lindsay on Woman Suffrage.

A good deal of comment has been stirred up by the statement made by Judge Lindsay of the Denver Juvenile Court, in his recent Chautauqua address, that political affairs in Colorado are very corrupt and growing more so. Some people claim that this is due to equal suffrage, but Judge Lindsey himself does not think so. On the contrary, he writes: "While many bad men have been elected in spite of woman suffrage, they have not been elected because of woman suffrage. If the women alone had a vote, it would result in a class of men in public office whose character for morality, honesty and courage would be of a much higher order. Ninety-nine per cent. of our election frauds were committed by men, without any assistance, direct or indirect, from women."

"How to Train Children and parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than in buying the book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

"The Attainment of Womanly Beauty of Form and Features. The Cultivation of Personal Beauty, Based on Hygiene and Health Culture. By twenty physicians and specialists. Edited by Albert Turner." Of special interest and value. Price, $1.00.

GEORGIA GLADYS COOLEY.

Glowing Tribute to This Worthy Lecturer and Psychic—Her Last Work Before the Hyde Park Occult Society, Previous to Leaving for Europe.

Our meeting of last Sunday night, September 8, was made a special occasion by Georgia Gladys Cooley consenting to give us one of the few nights she has at home previous to leaving us for a trip around the world.

It is not often we listen to a discourse that for logic satisfies us of its truth and for sentiment gives us a new ambition in life.

When the practical and the metaphysical are shown to us as both being beneficial, and the one necessary to the other, we find the better way of accomplishing the one thing in life worth while: spiritual unfoldment.

We listen to so many learned people who assert this and that of things that are for our good, without giving us a hint of how to begin, that we grow weary of the disappointments, the failures our trials bring, and we follow along in a rut indefinitely until someone who knows can set us right.

In this case, Mrs. Cooley was the one who knew, and she cheerfully passed the glad word along.

To have fully appreciated it, one needs have been a listener—not only to have received his quota of benefit, but to have seen the change of spirit with each one of the audience as he grasped the truth of his situation and his brow cleared with the understanding.

Mrs. Cooley's discourse was neither a relation of incidents, nor a long-drawn story, nor a compilation of statistics; it was a rare lesson beautifully taught while every one in the packed hall was an interested pupil.

Mayflower followed with messages characteristic of the preceding addresses, reaching nearly every one in the hall. Every message given demonstrated to the recipient the spiritual fitness of things as each one recognized his own with the tone of assurance and gratification.

Mrs. Cooley and her guides held us nearly three hours, leaving us better for having met and eager for her return that she may be with us again.

Not the least of this good meeting, however, was the support given by our good sister, Mrs. Henrietta Lichtig, at the piano. Mrs. Lichtig is herself a worthy woman and one of our honest workers who is rapidly coming to the front in a way few are capable. She is always ready to assist where she can, holding to the thought that to give is divine, and this explains the cause of her success.

Dr. Wilkins, secretary of our State Association, read as one of his poems, for which the world knows him, also helping the inspiration of this memorable evening where all was well.

MRS. O. B. WILSON,
President Hyde Park Occult Society.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About 7 words constitute a line.]

Passed to the higher life, from the old home, Mrs. Louisa Alger Brundage. She was born in Hillsdale, N. Y., in 1818 and came to Berlin, Ohio, in 1838, and married Captain Brundage in 1840. She has, with her husband, been identified with the interests of the town ever since that time. Both were independent thinkers, and Mrs. Brundage, by reading and study, reached an enviable stage of culture. She had prepared with great care a paper to be read at her funeral, and engaged Emma Rood Tuttle to read it on the occasion. She also desired Hudson Tuttle to deliver the discourse. The impressive service was attended by her extensive circle of relatives and friends."

Passed to the higher life, from his home at Balbec, Ind., September 2, 1907, Orlando J. Brown, age 40 years. An aged mother is left without the bodily comfort of her loving son. The large assembly of friends who attended the transition service, gave evidence of the high esteem in which he was held by those who knew him best. He was secretary of the West Grove Society of Spiritualists, and an honored member of the Mason's and Red Men's orders. The transition service was conducted by Sarah A. Crossfield of Muncie, Ind.

Passed to spirit life, from Lynn, Mass., Leonard Williams, a loyal veteran of Spiritualism, and of the G. A. R. Unswerving in his devotion to his religion and country, he never lost interest in any thought that brought good to either. With his devoted wife, through sun and storm, they have for years given their services freely for the benefit of others. For fifty-three years they have lived happily together, and many joined in their Golden Wedding celebration. He met the change cheerfully, and made arrangements for the last services to the Temple he had inhabited on earth. Mrs. Williams and her daughter will feel that though he has joined the ranks of the unseen, that in spirit he is still near. Services by the writer. C. F. ALLYN.

Mrs. Hannah J. Sharp passed to spirit life, July 21, after weeks of suffering, enduring patiently until she was called to brighter spheres. Services were conducted by Lilian McCormick, pastor. Pallbearers were composed of six sisters, all in white. Friends remembered her with beautiful floral offerings. The Olive Rebekah Lodge, No. 40, said the last rites at the grave. The Spiritualists sang "Sweet falls the spirit's message," as the casket was lowered in the grave. CARRIE SMITH.

The funeral services of Mrs. Laura Richmond, wife of James Richmond, was held Friday evening at 7:30, August 23, in the Spiritualist's Temple. Mrs. Richmond had been a member of the Spiritualist society and its ladies' auxiliary, The Sunflower League, only during the last two years, but she was one of the most faithful members. The pastor, Mrs. Lily M. Thiebaud, delivered the address.

Queen City Park Camp.

On the shores of Lake Champlain, in this ideal spot, there is rest for the weary—for the time being at least, and that rest, peace and strength indrawn from the beautiful influences in which the place is steeped, goes with us like a benediction—like the benediction one of the speakers here began thus: "Our fathers and mothers, who art in heaven"——— It carries its own message to the answering heart.

Just now we are again sensing the miracle of sunset—its splendors doubled in the mirrored waters below, making a picture which nothing on earth can excel. The interlacing of branch and bough, the piney and health-breathing zephyrs, bid worry and ill depart, and yielding to her insistence, we dream we are young and care-free once more, with successes and fame within easy reach—no height impossible. Out of the treasure-garden of the past come golden memories—for what is life but picture and memory, over and over. We fancy they are with us once again—those so loved and longed for—we live it over with quivering heart,—then—with a start, realize the chill of reality, even as the west has already faded, and the gilded waters are dull and dun, once more. What to cheer now?—another sunset, a future reunion. Surely in this, one of the dear old Mother's most beautiful places, one's better self comes uppermost, and thought comes thick and fast.

Are we in the right groove? If not, why not? Do we love our neighbor as ourself? No, and it is not expected of us, but we can urge on "a word in kindness said," glad to serve him, if such serving necessitate our own self-sacrifice, and whether or not he appreciates the favor has nothing to do with the help uplift it gives us. Do we allow envy and malice and jealousy to soil our soul? Do we always speak of another in the same way we would enjoy their speaking of us? Have we by word or action insinuated slander?—than which meanness I believe there is no parallel. Are we narrow and sordid enough to believe a divine, wise, just and fair Father will reckon money and fine clothes any higher than poverty (of purse) and plainness? Go they not hand in hand with love for all mankind? Will that same fair-dealing Father love one of his children more than another. Is it words or deeds, lives or creeds, that tell? Religion is to me the one beautiful structure of all good and pure motives, kindness and unselfishness, charity and love. Too grand, too perfect, too sacred, to be sliced up into creeds, or belittled by form. It is the one great perfect truth, embracing the here and the hereafter—divine, infinite. Does not individual honesty and sincerity with one's self create liberality of thought and purpose? Do we not long for and DO the right, and that it is our duty, from an honest standpoint? If we do NOT, then indeed we ARE in a wrong groove, and must work ourselves out of it, with all dispatch, for one who would do right through fear, or for the sake of a reward by and by, leaving the LOVE of right in the background, is a craven coward. I once heard a self-satisfied deacon ask God in prayer meeting to lead him in whatsoever thing He chose, in any way He chose, that in some great day to come the crown should bedeck his brow. That man had not a feeling for his fellow man. He was known as a SMALL man in dealing—selfish to the core, for he thought of no one's interest but his own, as his wife and children could well testify, yet to himself he was a perfect being.

Another case where "ignorance is bliss"—and the world teems with such. A clergyman was with great fervor exhorting at a camp meeting, when one of his hearers, a neighbor, arose and electrified the audience with—"Sir, God has no need of a man whose religion lets him see his horse starve to death, as you did yours last winter." Certain. Let us be consistent, true to our convictions of right, "true to ourselves, tho' the heavens fall," and if our view should prove a mistaken (?) one, we have wronged no one, and lived conscientiously; neither do we believe that because we do or do not sign our name to any church document determines our eligibility to the continued existence of the spirit after our mortal shall have put on immortality. If it is due one it is due all, and if we do our level best, in "love to God and love to man," we need fear no judgment, which is but the voice of conscience, and the judgment of human beings should affect us no more than a weight of thistledown, when we know we are battling for the right, for

"Not to the man of dollars,
Not to the man of deeds,
Not to the man of cunning,
Not to the man of creeds,
But unto him who labors,
Heedless of foe or crown,
Unto the KINDLY-HEARTED,
Cometh a blessing down."

A GOLDEN SHEAF.

To Our Friends: — October next will bring the 50th anniversary of our marriage, and nearly the 55th of our labor in the field of Spiritualism. In the first years we published a volume, "Blossoms of Our Spring," thinking that should the time come in the autumn of life, we would have a volume fitting the occasion of the closing years, of fruitage. A half century has almost gone by, and this 50th anniversary gives the occasion for the issuance of this volume, which we have entitled A GOLDEN SHEAF. It will be made up of selections from matter not before published, in prose and verse; selections of the best sentences and paragraphs scattered through our various books; a new spiritual song with music; illustrations of fac simile automatically written manuscripts; photogravures of our home, birthplace, and brief autobiographical sketches

We propose to make the book in paper and binding as superior as the price, $1.00, will permit. Every copy will be numbered and contain our autographs.

The number of copies will be strictly limited to the number of subscribers, and the book will not be placed on sale after publication. As we have reached the conclusion to publish at a somewhat late date, if you favor the undertaking you will confer a favor by sending your name, by card or letter, at once (the price is not now wanted).

A list of namos of subscribers will be published in the volume.

We thank you beforehand for your favor in inviting our book to your homes. HUDSON TUTTLE,

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Having been directed to carry on the work of Editor-at-Large in connection with the N. S. A., I am desirous of obtaining all press notices for or against Spiritualism, and reliable information with regard to attacks upon our movement that may be made by preachers. I respectfully request all Spiritualists to forward the same to me at their earliest convenience.

From Dream to Vision of Life

By Lilian Whiting, Author of "The World Beautiful," "The Spiritual Significance," "The Outlook Beautiful," etc.

This book finds its keynote in the question asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury—"The Life Beyond,—what it it? What is its bearing on these present working years?" To the discussion of this vital problem Miss Whiting brings the results of modern scientific research and that peculiar spiritual clairvoyance which has been remarked in "The Life Radiant" and some of her other books. It is written with a certain joyous vitality that communicates itself to the reader in a certain radiance and liberation of new energies. Price $1.00 net.

UNIVERSAL SPIRITUALISM

Spirit Communion in All Ages, Among All People—by W. J. Colville.

This work has two distinctive features: (1st) A resume of the Spiritual faith and practice of Egypt, India, Persia, Greece, Rome, China, Japan, and other ancient nations, not excepting Europe during Christian centuries. (2) A summary of recent experiences in America, Great Britain, Australia, France, Germany, Italy, and other modern lands, all tending to show the persistent continuity of spiritual revelation. Clairvoyance, Telepathy, and Psychic Phenomena in general is dealt with in separate chapters at the end of the volume, making it a highly useful textbook for all who are interested in the great question of human immortality. The Author says: "The libraries contain a large number of extremely valuable works dealing with every imaginable phase of Spiritualism and occultism, but I have searched in vain for a single portable volume, issued at a popular price, which gives a brief and lucid statement of the claims made in all ages and in all countries on behalf of the mighty truth of communion between inhabitants of earth and dwellers disrobed of flesh in the one vast spiritual universe. The enormous and ever increasing interest in "Psychic" problems and the eager, constant demand for historic information coupled with a rational setting forth of intelligible spiritual philosophy, has led me to appear once again before the public with a book." Price $1.00.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

T. J. J.—Q. Recently your answer regarding estates and money in England, for which American heirs were striving, said that there were no such vast estates, and that the looking up of heirs was a fraud. As one deeply interested, I want to know if you are sure of your statements, which appear to me to be too strong, severe, and unsupported.

A.—I reconsider this question because of its importance to so many who have been persuaded to indulge in great expectations, only to be met with disappointment. It is the duty of the newspaper to instruct the people, and warn them against this class of sharks who thrive on their rascally schemes; and there has been none more productive than this of plucking the "heirs" to these mythical estates.

When Mr. Lowell was minister to England he directed Mr. Henry White, Secretary of Legation, to investigate this subject and prepare a paper to be presented to the government at Washington.

The swindlers had grown so bold and were so diligently cultivating this field that the government thought it a duty to investigate, and warn the dupes.

The report was sent to Congress by the president. That was as long ago as 1884. It was long and exhaustive, and left no doubt that blackmail and swindling was about all of the fraudulent schemes. To quote: "I am told by respectable solicitors that not one claim in a thousand of all those referred to by the legation has had any validity whatever, and very few during their long experiences of claims from America have been successful."

Among the most exploited "estates" are the "Jennens," "Hedges," "Hyde," "Horn," etc., all of mythical character. The Jennings' Association was one of the largest and adroitly managed by sharp lawyers. The members were periodically bled by "assessments." It was stated in previous answer that there were no such vast amounts unclaimed as represented. In confirmation I quote from a letter written by the chief accountant of the Bank of England to Mr. White: "There are no large amounts of unclaimed stock or dividends standing on our books. Speaking generally, ... there are very few amounts of 1,000 pounds, and probably none that exceed that sum by more than 100 or 200 pounds." And as to the fabulous fortunes locked up in chancery, the report, after referring to the fact that the legation is constantly receiving letters of inquiry from those who think they are heirs, says that the opinion seems to prevail that the wealth is untold. "It is very rarely that in any communication sent us on this subject a smaller sum is mentioned than 'several millions,' and frequently our correspondents state that they are entitled to twenty-five or more millions. It will doubtless cause surprise and disappointment to such as these to be informed that the whole amount of money in charge of the Court of Chancery at the present time is about 84,000,000 pounds, of which 83,000,000 belong to owners who are known, leaving about 1,000,000 pounds only of unclaimed or dormant funds."

Moreover, were there such estates and sums held, the statutes of limitations would cut off all claimants. To quote again from this report: "Any attempts, therefore, to recover . . . after a lapse of twelve years (which may be extended to thirty under certain circumstances), and personal property after a lapse of twenty years, however valid the claim of the person making the attempts may have been originally, is certain to end in failure."

I have taken considerable time to look up this unequivocal evidence from a desire to save the victims of these swindling "estate" promoters from loss and disappointment.

Henry Brown.—Q. What is the meaning of the word "infidel," aside from that given in the dictionaries?

A.—An infidel is an unbeliever in the beliefs of the one who calls him by that name. A Christian is an "infidel dog" to a Mohammedan, and a Mohammedan to a Christian; a Chinaman is an infidel to a Christian and the latter to the Celestial.

Specifically the application is to disbelief in the Christian religion, and the term is used as one of opprobrium, and disgraceful. Every reformer, from the most ancient days, has been an infidel to his time and age. Christ was an infidel to the Jewish faith, as Luther and Calvin were to Romanism, and Theodore Parker to theirs.

J. J. Galloway.—Q. A young man, upon being summoned home by the death of a member of the family, retired that evening in a room directly above the death-room. He was suddenly awakened during the night and beheld the dead person standing before him; the room was in "inky darkness," but the form was perfectly and plainly visible, being surrounded by a cloud of luminiferous substance.

What was this luminous cloud? Is it common with all such manifestations?

A.—Such appearances are not rare, and it may be remarked that in every recorded instance the elements are the same, showing a common source. It may be taken as a fundamental truth that no person ever sees a spirit form, or this luminosity in his normal state. The sensitive, receptive condition must be gained. This state may be attained without direct effort or knowledge; grief, anxiety or sickness sometimes produces it—in fact, anything that weakens the physical and thus emphasizes the strength of the spirit is favorable. To the person in this state of semi-trance, or clairvoyance, the spirit appears as a vapory, self-luminous cloud, with more or less distinctness of form and features.

In the instance described by this correspondent, weary with travel, and agitated with grief, and sympathy with his relatives, in his sleep he becomes sensitive and perceives the "cloud of luminous substance." With the shock he awakens, passes out of the seeing state, and the vision passes, because the senses are again alert. "Inky darkness" is favorable to this manifestation. Physical light is not reflected from spiritual substance, and hence its presence or absence is of no consequence to the spiritual vision. Physical light may be damaging by exciting the vision of physical objects and thus obscuring the spiritual.

All spirits, in mortal form or decarnate, are surrounded by a sphere which, to spirit eyes, appears as a cloud, varying in size and color with the character of the individual.

MOST EXCELLENT.

The Electrical Wonders of To-Morrow.

Electricity's day is only dawning. Mr. Edison thinks that within the next ten years the world will see as many marvelous developments as during the last fifty. Before long he predicts, science will enable the farmer to enrich his lands by means of nitrogen from the air. He expects to see at an early date the direct generation of electricity from coal by a cheap process. Locomotives will then be thrown to the scrap heap, all trains will be run by electricity, no longer will coal be transported laboriously to cities, but there will be great power plants established at the mouths of mines, from which electricity will be sent over the country by wire. There will be no horses in the streets, no stables; no flies; wagons will be propelled by electricity, houses will be lighted entirely by electricity, for it will be so cheap that it can be used by the humblest tenant dweller. Ships no longer will be driven by steam. They will cross the Atlantic in three days with electricity as their motor power. At the present time nine-tenths of the power obtained from coal is lost by the use of boilers, wheels, and dynamos. With the direct generation of the electric current, therefore, the world will have ten times more energy than now.

JOHN A. HOWLAND.

Voted Three Hundred Times in One Day.

In Bohemia, women tax-payers have the municipal vote on the same terms as men, but they must cast it by proxy. Louisiana is the only one of the United States that provides for a proxy vote by women, and the men of Louisiana, more courteous than those of Bohemia, when they gave women tax-payers a vote on questions of local taxation, left each woman the option of casting her vote in person or by proxy, as she chose. The right was given in 1898, and the first important election under it took place soon after, when New Orleans voted on the question of a special tax levy for improved sewerage and drainage, and a pure water supply. The women carried the day for the improvements. It was found that most of them preferred to vote in person, but Miss Kate M. Gordon, president of the Women's Sewerage and Drainage League, collected proxies from about 300 good but timid ladies who shrank from going to the polls, and cast their votes herself. She is believed to be the only person in the United States who ever voted, legitimately, several hundred times in one day. Miss Gordon is corresponding secretary of the National American Woman Suffrage Association. Her sister, Miss Jean Gordon, is Louisiana's first woman factor inspector.

Questions Viewed.

Sententiously and Philosophically Considered, by Henry Morrison Tefft, of Norwich, N. Y.

"IT IS SAID THAT THERE IS A SIRITUAL BODY AS WELL AS A MATERIAL BODY—THAT OVER AND AGAINST EVERY MATERIAL FACT IS A CORRESPONDING SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATION. OUR SENSES CAN TAKE IN ONLY A FEW OF LIFE'S REALITIES. THE UNSEEN IS JUST AS REAL AS THAT WHICH IS SEEN. TRUTH IS CARIRED TO THE MIND BY TYPES, SIGNS AND REPRESENTATIONS. THE SYMBOL IS UNIMPORTANT. WORDS ARE SIMPLY SYMBOLS REPRESENTING IDEAS. THERE IS NO VALUE TO A FLAG EXCEPT WHAT IT REPRESENTS; THE SAME IS TRUE OF RELIGIOUS LITURGIES, SACRAMENTS, AND ORDINANCES. IMAGINATIVE CHARACTERS IN FICTION HAVE HAD AS MUCH INFLUENCE IN MOULDING THE THOUGHT OF THE WORLD AS REAL ONES; THEY ARE OUTLINED IN THE MIND AS PLAINLY AS THOUGH THEY HAD ACTUALLY EXISTED. IS NOT MRS. STOWE'S "UNCLE TOM" A REAL PERSON? WAS NOT SHAKSPEARE'S "HAMLET" A LIVING MAN?"

Progress means destruction; it may mean suffering. Tyndall says, "As a rule, every advance is balanced by a partial retreat, every amelioration is associated with more or less destruction. No great mechanical improvement is introduced * * for the benefit of society at large that does not bear hardly on individuals." In every community there is a certain following which always stands against any innovation, change or betterment. If its advice was taken there would never be a street paved, nor a new building erected. The old, with them, whatever its condition, is good enough. The proposition to build a new church, a new school house, or a public building of any kind is considered as an extravagance. Progress is waste—inertia is economy. Truth, to some minds, dwells in the past, not in the future. Age, custom, habit, possess marvellous sanctity. To change an old thought for a new one is sacrilege. But society never stands still; it is always moving. It is either growth or decay. There are no broken links in history. If our vision was broad enough we should see that one condition in life succeeds another in natural order. Communities, states, nations, are growths not creations and are governed by natural laws the same as the physical world. Every joy, every blessing, every great benefit is purchased at a sacrifice. Just measure is meted out, the scales must balance. The gift of the child adds to the burden of the parent. We speak of independent action; there is no such condition either in nature or life. Society is bound together; it resembles a chain—each living soul forms a link. "The brilliancy of a given star in the physical heaven is dependent upon its relation to all other stars." The individual yields up a portion of his substance, a certain amount of his liberty and freedom of action for the public good.

Life is dual. Action and reaction are equal. Want and supply go hand in hand. One new invention demands another. As soon as a bullet-proof armor for a battleship is made—a projectile is produced to pierce it. Even the burglar keeps pace with science, for whenever a burglar-proof lock is invented he devises a way to open it. The universe is upheld by the balancing of opposite forces. It is not certain but the lowest form of life is as necessary in the plan of the world as the higher. Kings are mere figure-heads. Public opinion is a stronger moral safe-guard than either the church or legislative bodies. It makes and unmakes laws. Statutes are made operative or inoperative according to its mandate. Governments are powerless unless backed by the judgment of the people. Rulers may declare war but they cannot fight the battles unless they are sustained in their course by the popular sympathy of their subjects. It is the unnumbered, untold, obscure workmen that build up the prosperity and civilization of a country the same as "Billions of insects in the sea and on the shore are tiny workmen, instrumental in the construction of islands, peninsulas, and continents." The common duties of life require just as much bravery, tenacity of purpose, and high moral resolve as the more exalted ones. Nature, environment and education fix our character and not our calling or profession. It needs as true a heart, as firm a principle to be an engineer on a railroad as it does to be President of the United States. True manhood is everywhere demanded. There is no station in life that can be filled by a false man; there is no demand in the world for false weights and counterfeit coins. A man can deal in sophistry, subterfuge and evasion until he has no convictions, no opinions, no beliefs on any question whatever. Duplicity becomes a habit; habit in time becomes nature. Lying to some people is a fixed fact. They indulge in prevarication and deceit until a straight-forward statement on any subject, or a straightforward act is impossible. There are men who never believe fully in any principle, they never believe fully in any man; there is always, whatever matter is under consideration, a hesitancy, a residuum of doubt, a balancing of adverse conditions, which neutralizes and sterilizes whatever effort they may put forth in any cause or for any proposition. There are negative natures and positive natures. Positive evil commands more respect from the world than negative good. All things have their opposite. There could be no shadow if the sun was not somewhere shining. The magnet attracts at one end and repels at the other. On one side of a man's character his sins may be as scarlet, on the other his virtues may be as white as snow. Some men are intellectually great and some morally great; there are those who combine both. A person may be rich in purse but a pauper in heart. We speculate, we moralize, we draw ideal pictures of life—but it is all in vain; cold, hard facts rule the world. Beauty exists only in the imagination—as an ideal, not as a reality. Experiences turn all our joys to sorrow, hopes to disappointments. Science has destroyed miracles; in time it will explain all spiritual manifestations. Most of our ideas are castles built in the air; like a mirage they vanish with a change of atmosphere. The highest civilization fades out. Brute force in time wins. Barbarians destroyed Rome—the greatest empire the world ever saw. Even now there is darkness enough in Asia, crowding for admittance against our frontiers, to blot out the light of the Cross and the hope of the world. Who knows what is good or what is evil? They are both matters of time, place and circumstance. War has been productive of as much good as evil. No nation ever came out of darkness into light without its aid. Victor Hugo says: "We talk of peace and plenty, and of peace and civilization, but I found those were not the words which the muse of history coupled together; that on her lips the words were; peace and sensuality, peace and corruption, peace and death. I found in brief, that all great nations learned their truth of word and strength of thought in war; that they were nourished in war, and wasted by peace; taught by war and deceived by peace, trained by war and betrayed by peace—in a word, that they were born in war, and expired in peace."

The essence of crime is the intent. The prescription that at one time kills, at another time cures. What is right or wrong depends upon circumstances and conditions. Words are arbitrary symbols and only express ideas by common consent. There is no inherent quality of good or bad in a word— not even in those words which are regarded as most sacred or most vile. There is no profanity or vileness in a word. The sin rests in the spirit that prompts its use and not in the term used. Matthew Arnold says:

"Strictly and formally the word God, we now learn from philologists, means, * * simply shining or brilliant." All things are proper in their order. "Dirt," it is said, "is only matter in the wrong place." A man may donate a million dollars to a Christian or charitable purpose and be entitled to no credit. The widow's mite, given in the name of the Master, will outweigh a ton of gold given in the name of ambition, or for self-glorification or in deference to a public sentiment. There is no passion, sentiment, feeling, or desire in the mental and spiritual make-up of man but what is necessary and useful for his full development. The most poisonous herbs, the most venomous reptiles, have their uses. What ignorance fears, intelligence studies and masters; what superstition deems miraculous, knowledge reduces to natural phenomena. The sun was once worshiped as a god, but now science is trying to make it a servant. In a picture the shadow is just as necessary as the light; both are required to produce the effect of beauty. Nature makes no mistakes. Sin and righteousness, beauty and ugliness, come from the same source. Before a building is commenced the architect draws the plan which shows the structure exactly as it will appear when completed. Could the Creator of the Universe do less? Was not the history of the world all laid out at the beginning? Was not each individual life calculated upon? And can man change the ordinances of God? Some questions will never be answered. The ideal life will never be realized; if it should, as far as mortal calculation goes, progress would end and the world would be a blank. If the forces of good and evil were always equal, society would stand still; there would be neither advancement nor retrogression. "Two waves of light or of sound of equal amplitude and intensity, when brought together from diametrically opposed directions, produce respectively darkness and silence." There is a philosophy too exalted for human attainment. When Christ proclaimed that one should love his neighbor as himself, he placed the standard of conduct on a plane higher than any mortal ever reached. Every man stands accused; somewhere his conscience condemns him. In the silences—where no ear hears, no eye sees—he sees himself in the light of a just judge. Thousands of people live their lives and die without ever, by word or deed, lifting a burden from a human heart. On every hand can be seen the undeveloped powers of the mind, the unused talents, the deadened sensibilities of the soul—all dwarfed by never being brought into action. Negation is weakness—affirmation is strength.

Every muscle of the body, every faculty of the soul, is strengthened by use. Still water stagnates. It never purifies itself until it gets into motion. Creative moments are always moments of unrest. The waters have to be troubled, otherwise they possess no healing virtue. A writer does his best work under some strong necessity, some oppressive burden, some hope denied. It is in the convulsions of Nature that new continents are formed. The ardent mind always takes to the extremes; it never travels in the middle of the road, but always walks on either side of the beaten track. The great religious, political and moral reformers of the world have been called fanatics. Peter the Hermit, Mohammed, Cromwell, Paul, Luther, were born enthusiasts. Perfectly even balanced minds never produced revolutions, never bring about reformations, never discover new lands. Instead of advancing they always stand still. There is an irresistible force that carries individuals and society along. Whether we would or not, we move with the current. As the whole body of the people change, so do we individually change. No form is permanent, either in Nature, art or life. The words with which the most sublime and beautiful thoughts are clothed to-day, will lose their meaning and become unintelligible ages hence. But it is only the vesture that is destroyed. Whatever in literature, religion or sentiment that appeals to the universal feelings and instincts of mankind will never die. The monuments, the architecture and all the material grandeur of a nation perish, but the spirit with which it was imbued lives. "All that is visible of a nation dies," says T. Starr King, "but its soul survives; the truth it discovered and illustrated is preserved; its essence passes into civilization, improves society, and becomes the common property of aftertimes.' Intelligence is fundamental. Thought organizes matter. "The word is made flesh." Truth comes to men by intuition, by inspiration as much as by reason and logic. Some writers will give a better description of a country they have never seen, just by reading about it, than others who have explored it. Being color blind did not prevent John Greenleaf Whittier from writing beautiful poetry about flowers. Knowledge is not confined to the great. The common minds have done so much to elevate humanity as the most learned and cultured. Education does not necessarily make men see clearly. Hamerton says, "A man may have the finest scientific faculty, the most advanced scientific culture, and still believe the consecrated wafer to be the body of Jesus Christ." Truth is the goal for which mankind is striving. Falsehood goes at a discount, but there are no stakes or stones marking the boundary between the two. A doctrine may be false in fact but still carry truth to the soul. To one person religious forms have no significance, but to another they are substance and life. Every line drawn on the map of the world is imaginary. All divisions of time and space are artificial. The rules governing human conduct admit of no hard and fast lines. They vary with age, climate and condition. What we call weakness in a man may in fact be the source of his strength. Many historic characters are gods or demons, saints or sinners, according to the point of view from which they are seen. Unless more emphasis is laid upon the public services than upon the individual lives, the names of some of the world's most noted heroes and benefactors would have to be erased from the scroll of fame. As we pass along, little notice is taken of our daily experiences, but each and every one leaves its impression and gives direction to our future years. That which seems the most grievous and hardest to be borne often proves to be the greatest blessing. "We are conscious of wrongdoing," says H. W. Dresser. "We deliberately sin sometimes. * * Yet a time comes when many of these experiences yield up their meaning. We justify mistakes in the light of their outcome. Each hour of conflict had its place in teaching part of life's great lesson. A world of truth flashes upon us through the memory of some wrong act; and we question the wisdom of the slightest regret." Faith, credulity, ignorance and superstition are all factors in social life that have to be taken into consideration. The orator, the priest and the physician make use of these agencies in carrying forward their purposes. There is as much glory in romance as in truth, in fable as in fact; yet every dream, every vision of the mind, is only a picture of some reality.

It is said that there is a spiritual body as well as a material body—that over and against every material fact is a corresponding spiritual manifestation. Our senses can take in only a few of life's realities. The unseen is just as real as that which is seen. Truth is carried to the mind by types, signs and representations. The symbol is unimportant. Words are simply symbols representing ideas. There is no value to a flag except what it represents; the same is true of religious liturgies, sacraments and ordinances. Imaginative characters in fiction have had as much influence in moulding the thought of the world as real ones; they are outlined in the mind as plainly as though they had actually existed. Is not Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom" a real person? was not Shakspeare's "Hamlet" a living man?

Gods and heroes are imaginary personages. There is no glamour over actual experiences. It requires distance, perspective, and age to make them interesting. "Familiarity breeds contempt." We only admire what we cannot understand. We only covet that which we cannot get. The value of a commodity is its scarcity. A weed in one country becomes a costly flower in another. If gold had been as plenty in the world as iron we would never have heard of the "gold standard." On all great lines communities move as one body—they advance or recede together. States have their youth, old age and death the same as individuals. When a nation commences to decay no individual effort can save it. Everything tends towards completion, perfection and finish. Matter in time becomes mind. Both plant and animal are continually converting matter into life. Nature, art, custom and habits move in a circle. Whatever has happened will happen again. This must be so. Natural laws are uniform in their action. No new principle or material has ever been added or subtracted from the world. Death is disintegration—a returning of substance and forces to original conditions. There are no discordant notes in life. Nature is harmony. Every creed, belief and doctrine has its value. It is continual friction that wears away the rock and converts it into fertile soil. "All doctrines, philosophies, religions, become merely a bunch of keys in the hands of the wise man, which he tries in succession upon every problem presented to him, seeking for the right one to unlock the secret."

THE PATHWAY of the Human Spirit, or the Pathway of the Spirit Traced, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Price 75 cents; postage 12 cents.

LIFE and REMINISCENCES OF Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

By Edward C. Smith.

"The Record of a generous life runs like a vine around the memory of our dead, and every sweet unselfish act is now a perfumed flower."

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL was a great and brilliant man, he was the greatest genius of his age. His place is beside Shakespeare, Voltaire, Goethe and Shelley. He was a great Lawyer, Politician, Reformer, Orator, Critic and Philosopher. His wonderful gift of language touched with the spirit and charm of poetry aided by his powerful gift of wit and humor, made him the most formidable foe the church has ever had.

He was great because he was honest. He shook the world with his eloquence and reasoning. His arguments were never answered. As a Lawyer his arguments were always so convincing that he won his case.

He knew many things by learning and more by intuition.

He was an intellectual Giant, and it is very probable that the wonderful combinations he possessed, the world will never see again.

The author who was a close friend and great admirer of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, was assisted by near relatives who collected a great amount of valuable data, and in no other way could this information be obtained. The writing of the "Life and Reminiscences" was purely a labor of love; and it is useless to say has been written in the fairest and kindest spirit, every detail having been carefully recorded. Much of this data was collected and revised before the Colonel's death, and great care was taken in only recording after careful research.

This valuable edition has been aptly illustrated with many beautiful half-tone illustrations of the Colonel in different periods of his life. Also portraits of his sisters and brothers, family, father and mother, together with a genealogical chart, also many valuable reminiscences. The work is well written, handsomely bound, and beautifully printed. All admirers of the Colonel will welcome its publication.

THE NATURE CURE

BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS, ILLUSTRATED.

A Bridge from the Old to the New; the Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. A Clear, Short-Cut Treatise on the Cause and Cure of Disease.

By MARVIN E. CONGER, M. D.
Assisted by ROSA C. CONGER, M. D.

The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of THE NATURE CURE.

The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as in NATURE CURE.

Our Definition of Medicine.—Any method or remedy that will remove, alleviate or modify pain and restore the sick to normal condition, is practical medicine.

Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. NATURE CURE will lead the way to certain success.

The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

The book contains 375 pages, and is finely illustrated; the mechanical and artistic work are the very best. Bound in fine English cloth, marble edges, $2.00; common cloth $1.50.

Nature Cure teaches how to heal by simple home remedies.

It teaches how Nature cures.

It does not use poisonous drugs.

It does not endorse dangerous experiments with the surgeon's knife.

It will save money in every home.

It is entirely free from technical rubbish.

It teaches how typhoid and other fevers may be cured at once.

It teaches how pneumonia, la-grippe, diphtheria and other forms of disease considered dangerous, may be cured in twenty-four hours.

It is, as a medical book for homes, THE BEST, and is up-to-date in every particular.

There is no similar book, no medical, hygienic or reformatory doctor book that compares with THE NATURE CURE.

"THE LANGUAGE OF THE STARS,"

A Primary Course of Lessons in Celestial Dynamics.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LIGHT OF EGYPT."

This important primary work is the first practical exposition of the Astro-Magnetic forces of Nature—in their relation to man—that has yet been issued by the American press. It contains fourteen special lessons, embracing each department of human life, in such plain, simple language that a child can understand the elementary principles laid down. And in addition to these lessons is an Appendix, containing a full explanation of all technical and scientific terms in general use upon the subject, thus forming a brief, yet practical Astro Dictionary. This work is illustrated with special plates.

new and greater demand on life, to yield a higher and purer expression. For like any other force or energy, the stream of life follows the lines of least resistance. Hence, as in any present mode of existence, the pursuit of the purely supersensual—thought and feeling, uncontaminated by sensational representations—offers less resistance to the soul than any other line of advance, it follows that the growth of any divine nature is irresistible, even though the process of unfoldment proceeds slowly and under the stress, not to say the agony, of a veritable spiritual birthgiving. For what is growth but a series of birth-givings, by which the old modes and expressions of life are giving way to new and higher ones, more adequate to the enhanced and intensified presence of spiritual consciousness.

"Now Gerald, I ask of you a favor of friendship and faith. Be my conscious and unfaltering companion in this soul-stirring, life-refashioning solitude. Send me thoughts of cheer and hope—in fact, be with me as soul. Form in your mind a strong picture of my situation, and place yourself in thought by my side. Tell our mutual friends to do the same. I almost feel too weak to carry out the task of my glorious evolution. Like a plant removed to unfamiliar environments with which it has to struggle to re-establish its elemental adjustment, so my soul in its new environment feels itself trembling in the balance, between something new, urging its right to live, and an old, refusing to surrender its hold on life."

The last words came to me as if in a whisper. The force enabling her to sustain the undoubtedly very severe strain involved in her concrete communications, was exhausted, and with a gesture of parting and a smile of hope she withdrew from the scene, floating away in a sphere of subdued light, evidently to resume her trail of conquest and discovery along avenues of undreamt-of realizations.

And this forms my last direct communion with that released soul. Yet twice afterward I have had glimpses of her presence, though for each time she appears more remote from my stage of evolution. Each time her garments seemed brighter and more ethereal. The last time I saw her she appeared to me like a being of light, transfigured and luminous, "trailing clouds of glory," as she floated seraphically in the radiant zone of an indescribable superspectral azure, seemingly in possession of the "blue flower" of immortality—the imperishable price of spiritual life, for which she had been suffering so much pain with so much patience.

But must we consider this departure of the human soul into new and undreamt-of spheres of life as identical with a final closing of the individual's mundane experience? Shall our lives henceforth be spent under unequal terms of evolution and remain incapable of yielding new opportunities of love and service through personal identification?

With regard to this momentous quest—propounded by every feeling, loving heart during all time and ages—I feel unshakably calm and affirmative. I have her promise of reunion, somewhere, somehow. She has whispered in my heart that such a union may not require for its immediate theater the ethereal beyond, but be reached on this earth, in the very midst of concrete life. I am inspired with the consciousness that we may meet, and shall meet, in the mutual pursuit of new truths, new ideals, new realizations, new possessions which may require corporeal conquests for their attainment; face to face and heart to heart, with the palpitating, surging, rising and falling waves of an inner moving ocean of humanity. For may it not be that the priceless pearl of truth is to be found only at the bottom of life, in the crevices and nooks of personal, concrete, face-to-face experience?

Back of every price is conquest; and there is something in the depths of my consciousness that affirms that Earth, with all its sadness and sorow, its tragedy and farce, has possessions—vital and indispensable—which can be won only by a conquest of treasures, bound up and hoarded in the very bosom and vortex of mundane vicissitudes. It is the old legend of Siegfried, the Nibelungen, having to pass over slain dragons and outwitted giants to find his Rheingold. And while earthly existence, even in its highest form of evolution, may never yield evolution, may never yield opportunities for final perfection, yet it may furnish conditions and modes of existence, without which the towering eminence of spiritual self-consciousness, with its timeless and changeless consummation would only remain airy abstractions.

And furthermore may it not be that in the recurring phases of alternating concrete and abstract existence—objective blossoming, subjective fruition, with the soul drawing sap and sustenance from its organic and vital contact with earthly conditions by repeated evolutionary sojourns—is found the modus operandus by which the soul is enabled to transmute the crude elements of human virtues into the imperishable powers and felicities of changeless, timeless, and deathless beings. MINNESOTA SPIRITUALISTS' ASSOCIATION.

Reports of the State President and Other Officers.

Minneapolis, Minn.,
Sept. 6, 1907.

To the Officers and Delegates of the State Spiritualist Association of Minnesota in Convention Assembled:

In compliance with the Constitution and By-Laws of the State Association, I have the honor to submit my 10th annual report as president of the organization.

In the earlier meetings of this State Association it was predicted that the State Association would fall by the wayside; but we are here again, and here to stay—stronger, bigger and brighter than ever, and on our banner the words are becoming more illuminated: "Come, let us get together," for never in our history as an association have we seen the necessity of organization more than in the year just closed. From all over the country has come the cry of "unjust legislation," and Minnesota has not escaped. At the last meeting of the Legislature the following bills were introduced:

File 241. 35th Session. No. 638.
Introduced by Mr. Gates, March 6, 1907. Referred to Committee on Public Health and Pure Food. Reported back March 14, 1907.

File 264. 35th Session. No. 696.
Introduced by Mr. Stokes, March 9, 1907. Referred to Committee on Crimes and Punishment. Reported back March 16, 1907.

File 264. 35th Session. No. 696.
Introduced by Mr. Stokes, March 9, 1907. Referred to Committee on Crimes and Punishment. Reported back March 16, 1907.

As soon as these bills came to the notice of the officers of the Association they took steps to have them annulled as "unconstitutional and class legislation"—the bills being referred to the Committee on Crimes and Punishment. The president, vice-president, Bro. Whitwell, Secretary Irvine and Trustee G. W. Rush being the Committee to call upon the members of the Committee on Crimes and Punishment and state their side of the question. Allow me to say here that we were very courteously received by this committee, and after hearing our statements in opposition to the bills, they expressed the sentiment that they did not wish to infringe upon the liberties of any religious organization. After consultation with them they consented to put the clause in their bill which reads: "Provided that nothing in this act shall apply to ordained ministers and recognized workers in the cause of the religion of Spiritualism who are affiliated with the N. S. A. of the United States and of the State of Minnesota, and who are holding ordination papers of competency from the State Association of Minnesota." When this bill was presented to the Senate it was laid on the table and in the rush of business was never brought up again. I wish to say that perhaps it was not the arguments before the members of the legislature that gave us the recognition we received, but I attributed it greatly to the Constitution and By-Laws of our Association, which governs the recognition of mediums and the requirements to be fulfilled by them before they can be recognized, and so in order that we shall become a united people and that the rights of all may be protected, and that we may be able to gain that standing which is necessary to any religious body of people, the recognition by the community at large, and not to be met with bills before the legislatures and councils after each election, I urge upon those who claim to be working for "pure Spiritualism" to join our local organizations, comply with the rules and regulations thereof and become identified with this movement, as there is nothing outside of organization in which they can be officially recognized, but in unity to call the attention of the workers of the Minnesota State Association to the necessity of learning and giving strict attention to the definition of the terms that are associated with our religious movement, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience, inspiration, mediumship, etc. It is as we found, and seen, the necessity of being able to define clearly the meaning of these words. There is an article in The Progressive Thinker of this week, from the Hon. Charles R. Schirm, who is one of the committee that was appointed by the National Association, at our last convention. There will be, possibly, from time to time, now or until after the N. S. A. Convention, articles of this kind appearing from different members of the committee. Recognition is a necessity—not for the lay members so much as it is a necessity for those who claim to be its bannerbearers and its workers.

Perhaps at no time in the history of this Association, or of the Spiritualists' movement in this State, has there been such general interest as in the past year. Our local auxiliary bodies have all held meetings during the months from September, 1906, to June, 1907, and are in a strong and healthy condition, having been well attended and strengthened by new members. The harmonious, united action of coming together as one body in mass meetings and anniversaries, and on other occasions when the call has been made, stands as a mark of improvement. Not alone has this been marked by the different societies coming together, but also by the cordial manner in which the speakers and workers responded, as a unit, and gave of their best efforts to make all of these union meetings a success. And I see in this the welding together of all interests in the organized movement to build an organization that will stand for all time, and the fact that all the local societies are closing their meetings for the month of September in order that they may join with the State Association in making the engagement of Miss Harlow here a success, is appreciated by the State Association, and let me, at this time, thank you for the "Come-let-us-get-together" action that we are getting on ourselves.

Missionary Work in the Field.

At the last annual convention the board of officers were instructed to keep up the missionary work and, if possible, to put four missionaries in the field. They have tried to carry out these orders in full, but we have been handicapped on account of finding workers who were free and had no responsibilities resting upon them, so they could go into the fields and continue actively in this work. We have, also, been gradually retarded in pushing our missionary work on account of the apathetic attitude of the people in responding to correspondence sent out pertaining to our missionary work. But we have had in the field Mr. H. Hegdahl, Mrs. Catherine McFarlin, Mrs. P. Beuhler, Mrs. H. Courtney and Mrs. Frances Wheeler whenever opportunity allowed. This missionary work will be covered in the report of the Missionaries. As a result of our missionary work we have awakened those societies that were dormant and chartered some new ones, and we are now beginning to receive many requests for missionaries, I also wish to speak of the splendid notices given by the press in regard to the work done in the towns and cities where our missionaries have visited.

Mass Meetings.

The mid-winter mass meeting held in St. Paul and participated in by the Spiritualists of Minneapolis, St. Paul and the towns throughout the State, was largely attended, and through the generous assistance of the different workers and friends it was made a "GRAND SUCCESS," and I wish, at this time, to thank all who participated, in making it a success. Financially it was the best mass meeting ever held by the State Association.

Lyceum Work.

In my report of former years I have urged an interest in the Lyceum work and the proper interest in the welfare of the children, and I am pleased to report that during the past year our worthy Bro. C. W. Bush has taken great interest and worked to the building up of the lyceums, and that special credit is due him for his untiring efforts. The Progressive Lyceum of the Band of Peace Society, under the able management of its conductor and teachers—the St. Paul Alliance, The Crystal Bay and the North Star Lyceum are all doing nicely, and are represented in this convention by their delegates.

Young People's Societies.

In my annual report of the last convention I urged that a Young People's society be organized in Minneapolis and St. Paul—that the young people who had formerly been connected with our lyceums as scholars were drifting away and losing interest on account of their age. I believe that there was some effort made along these lines but the result has not been satisfactory; we must not sit down and let it go at that, but we must get up and act and keep acting and getting together until we have in each of these cities a Young People's Society that will give us a much-needed source of strength and assistance.

Men's Club.

I would suggest to this convention that a Men's Club be formed for social, educational and fraternal benefits, that would meet monthly and that at these meetings papers should be prepared and read, or some one instructed to bring in topics for general discussion. This would give us an opportunity of becoming acquainted and having a social evening once a month, and I would suggest that the club be open to anyone to become a member; this club to work in connection with the Ladies' Auxiliary of the State Association, which has helped this organization so ably from a financial standpoint the past year.

The Press.

The State Association of Minnesota is under special obligation to all the Spiritual papers. All notices of our meetings, and letters of our secretary to them, have been gratuitously and cheerfully published, and I would recommend that due acknowledgment be sent, under the seal of the State Association of Minnesota, to the editors of the Light of Truth, The Progressive Thinker, and The Sunflower, and also to the press of the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis for their liberal notices of our meetings from time to time, and the free, liberal and unbiased reports of spiritual happenings in general.

In closing, I wish to say that we have done well and laid a good foundation for the coming year. In this connection I wish to extend my hearty thanks to the workers and friends of the cause—to the officers and trustees of the State Association for the very hearty manner in which they have so nobly sustained me in my position as president, and I wish to urge upon you, each and every one, as delegates, the necessity of giving your views and of speaking on any subjects or questions before this convention, to the end that the officers who may be elected for the ensuing year may know your wishes and desires, and that out of the whole the very best may be taken as a working basis for the coming year.

Fraternally yours,
J. S. MAXWELL,
Pres. S. S. A. of Minnesota.

Secretary's Annual Report.

Minneapolis, Minn.,
Sept. 7, 1907.

Mr. President, Delegates and Co-workers in the Spiritual Cause, again it gives me great pleasure to herewith submit to you the annual report of your secretary for the year ending September 1, 1907.

The officers and board of trustees have worked in harmony for the good of the cause and the great need and benefit of the organization and the usefulness of the State Spiritualists' Association and its Auxiliaries.

Never in the history of our cause has the cry for concerted action been more loud and clear, the necessity greater, the opportunity better, the prospects brighter, than now.

Never has it been more clearly pointed out that every Spiritualist should put aside all personal feelings and, in a right way come together, and with an eye single to the best interests of the whole, work and pull together for the common good of the common whole; and the greater our love for our fellows, the broader and more charitable our conduct, the greater will be our own happiness. Then, and not until then, will the cause advance as it should.

Organization is not only a good watchword, but individual organized efforts should now be the rule of perfection of every Spiritualist in the land, to help spread the gospel of glad tidings to humanity.

Your secretary desires to publicly thank the president and each one of the officers and board of trustees for their kind and willing co-operation in the work he has had in hand the past year, and their never-failing helpfulness and advice.

Report of Committee on Resolutions.

Minneapolis, Minn.,
Sept. 7, 1907.

To the Officers, Delegates and Friends of the State Spiritualists' Association of Minnesota assembled:

Your comittee, to whom was submitted the work of preparing a series of resolutions for this convention, beg to submit the following:

Whereas, Modern Spiritualism has been before the world more than half a century and has proved itself an important factor in the progress of humanity. It has also revolutionized the religious and scientific world,

Therefore be it resolved, That it is our duty to use every legitimate means to place Spiritualism upon a higher philosophical and intellectual plane, and to this end we urge every society and individual to adopt more scientific and thorough methods in investigating the phenomena.

Resolved, That as education is the only process by which we can make ourselves competent investigators and wise teachers, we must support and upbuild an educational system; therefore we endorse and sustain to the best of our ability the Morris Pratt Institute and similar schools.

Resolved, That as mediumship is the process by which the knowledge of the continuity of life is brought to humanity, we recommend that the State Association, through its officers, establish a circulating library of such books as are calculated to assist investigators and students in selecting mediums, and establish conditions that will bring about the best results.

Resolved, As we realize that mediumship is the foundation fact upon which we become a demonstrated truth to the world, therefore be decided and steadfast in our procedure against those who in any way imitate it, or add to the phase they may have, knowing, as we do, that all unjust legislation against us has come because of these impostors;

Therefore, let us see to it and positively refuse to in any way countenance or employ those whom we know do this. Also that we assist in bringing them to justice before the law, the same as other criminals, realizing that past methods of simply asking them to leave town has only been to invite them to new and larger fields of operation. We recommend that the State Association keep a record of such, and its chartered societies be informed along these lines, and they in turn refuse to employ them.

Resolved, That we tender our thanks and support to J. R. Francis, editor of The Progressive Thinker, in the great work he is doing in this line.

Resolved, That the State Association make an effort to induce the secular press to refuse the publication of the flaring advertisements of traveling fakirs assuming to be mediums. Also that we warn the general public against all such advertisements.

Resolved, That as the practice of capital punishment has not proved a safeguard against crime, and as we cannot restore the relation between man and his material body, we have no right to destroy the same.

Resolved, That the future depends entirely upon the children; therefore we MUST make great effort to carry on the lyceum work, and the system of procedure must be educational as well as entertaining.

Resolved, Whereas we realize the great need of more money to carry on the work of this Association, we therefore recommend that every family have a penny-box and drop in one cent per day, which be presented to the Association at its next convention.

Resolved, That we, as a State body, put ourselves on record as endorsing and upholding by all legitimate means all other bodies who are interested in the liberating of man, woman and child from the industrial enslavement of to-day. Therefore, the secretary be instructed to send Fraternal Greeting to the equal Suffragists of the State.

Resolved, That as the presidency of the State Association is a position of responsibility and hard labor, we recommend that this convention take into consideration the advisability of paying the president a stated salary. Also the State Association recommends that a stated salary be paid the president of the N. S. A., and that he be kept permanently in Washington, D. C., to look after the growing needs of our cause. That this resolution be presented at the coming National Convention.

Resolved, That the Angel of Birth is bound to appear now and then in our midst, and has done so since our last meeting, and has borne three of our most gifted workers into the next realm, we do not mourn them, although we miss them, we realize and appreciate as never before the leadership of Moses Hull, the songs of our Jennie Hagan Brown, the teachings of Albert Tisdel, the assistance and counsels of Theodore J. Mayer, treasurer of the N. S. A., therefore in reverence and respect, we commemorate their lives and work and wish them Godspeed in their larger fields of activity. But it is not only the great, but the lesser, as well, which are kissed by this angel; therefore we tender our heartfelt sympathy and strongest thoughts of love to our co-worker and officer, Mr. Frank E. Irvine, in the birth of his companion to this larger life.

Resolved, That as Spiritualism is the study of life, we recommend that this Association be alert and decidedly active against any legislation that will constrict our rights. Also that we recommend the taxation of all sectarian property, and that no sectarian school shall be supported by public funds.

Resolved, That this Association establish the circuit system for the purpose of conserving energy, finance and time, believing that the results will be far superior to past methods. Also we recommend that every Spiritualist make as great effort to test the philosophy of Spiritualism in the living of their daily lives as they have to test the phenomena of the continuity of life, knowing, if they do, that the results will be such that the world cannot question our motives or morals; then will be proved the usefulness of Spiritualism and its greatness in human needs.

Respectfully submitted,

The Psychic Riddle.

By I. K. Funk, D.D., LL.D., Editor-in-Chief of "The Standard Dictionary"; Author of "The Widow's Mite, and Other Psychic Phenomena," "The Next Step in Evolution," etc.

A book full of psychic suggestions, supported by startling experiences, all told in a wonderfully conservative way. It harmonizes with the judgment pronounced by The Review of Reviews, New York, on the author's previous publication of this subject: "A very sensible, cautious, level-headed piece of work all through;" and also with the judgment on the same book pronounced by the Cleveland Record: "There has never been so fair and painstaking a book put forth on this subject as this one." Price, $1.00.

"Immortality, Its Naturalness, Its Possibilities and Proofs." By J. M. Peebles, M. A., M. D., Ph. D., Contains the address rejected by the Philosophical Society of Great Britain, with Introduction and Explanatory Letter. Price 10 Cents.

Marriage and Immortality.

As usual, whenever the theologians get around to the old question of immortality, they think that science is just learning what the Bible teaches. How strange that science is so far behind the times!

Modern thinkers realize that "Belief in an unseen world of spirit, which is the sole sustenance of the best spiritual life, must be based on evidence of a more substantial kind than the one of tradition; and that without credentials of a scientific character, the belief must inevitably waste away." We want better assurance than unbridled imagination It is strange that an inspired book should be so deficient about two vital questions.

The Bible has very little to say about matrimony. It rather disparages it. About the best it has to say, is: "Marriage is honorable in all". The Mormon believes this means that the more a man is married, the more honorable he is, so he favors plural marriages. Some people think that the oftener they get married the more honorable it is; so they keep the courts busy.

The Bible does not say that marriage is desirable.

Whether it is or not depends on the points of view of the contestants. The under dog has no pressing interest in a future life. The great question before the unmarried public is: "Will we want to live forever if we get married"? The Bible is vague and unsatisfactory about immortality. It does not satisfy logical men. There is no scientific evidence in it. So deficient is it that many Christian theologians are doubtful about immortality.

The London Society for Psychical Research has spent 20 years and $75,000 in studying the mediumship of Mrs. Piper. There have been discovered seven other Americans of equal power. The new American institute for Scientific Research is asking for an endowment of $1,000,000 to carry on their great work of investigation of all kinds of psychic phenomena Many believe that scientific evidence of a future life has already been secured, but they are seeking for more proof; enough to convince everyone. Will not our wealthy people contribute to this great cause, which will overthrow materialism, creed and greed?

OUR SPIRIT HOME.

I have read of a wonderful country,
Just beyond our material sight,
A land of unfading beauty,
Flowing with boundless delight,
Where the light shines with undying splendor,
More brilliant than earth's fairest noon,
Shedding beams of ineffable glory
Dispelling all darkness and gloom.

Surrounding that wonderful country,
Are countless millions of suns,
Guarding with majestic grandeur
The land where no night ever comes.
Where the beautiful hues of the rainbow
Ever span the celestial dome,
And blend with the golden sunbeams
Of that radiant Summerland home.

I have read of a wonderful river,
Winding through that bright summerland,
Its crystal waters are rippling
Over a shining strand.
The shores of that glorious river,
Are glittering with jasper and gold.
And jewels of marvelous beauty
Whose value can never be told.

Each side of that clear flowing river
Are pastures of eternal green.
Where flowers are always blooming,
And wondrous verdure is seen;
The air with sweet fragrance is laden
And wafted o'er meadows and shore
By gently murmuring breezes,
Bearing tidings of peace evermore.

There are beautiful groves near that river,
With foliage exquisitely fair,
Shading those evergreen pastures,
Giving rest to all weary ones there,
And flitting among the side branches,
Singing joyously all the day long,
Are birds with wonderful plumage,
And wondrously sweet is their song.

Along the banks of that river,
In view of those gleaming strands,
Are many, many Mansions,
All built by heavenly hands.
They are homes of exceeding beauty,
Far beyond our most charming dreams,
Where grief never enters, nor sorrow,
And unselfish love reigns supreme.

On the banks of that rippling river
That winds through the sweet summerland,
Beneath those wide waving branches,
And over that glistening strand.
They say our own precious loved ones
Are lingering in rapturous delight,
And smiling to think the splendor
That will greet our bewildered sight,

When we reach that wonderful country,
And gaze on that shining shore,
While we hear the glad words of welcome,
From those who have gone on before,
Who will tell us with radiant faces,
As they wipe all our sad tears away,
Of the blissful existence before us,
In that land of unending day.

For every leaf the loveliest flower
Which beauty sighs for from her bower;
For every star a drop of dew;
For every sun a sky of blue;
For every heart a heart as true

For all the toil at honest fame,
A proud, a pure, a deathless name;
For all who love, who loving bless,
Be life one long, kind, close caress;
Be life all love, all happiness.

Evolution Before Darwin.

Professor Huxley, in an essay in "The Life and Letters of Charles Darwin," says:

"Within the ranks of the biologists at that time [1851-8], I met nobody, except Dr. Grant, of University College, who had a word to say for Evolution, and his advocacy was not calculated to advance the cause. Outside these ranks, the only person known to me whose knowledge and capacity compelled respect, and who was, at the same time, a thoroughgoing Evolutionist, was Mr. Herbert Spencer, whose acquaintance I made, I think, in 1852, and then entered into the bonds of a friendship which, I am happy to think, has known no interruption. Many and prolonged were the battles we fought on this subject. But even my friend's dialectic skill and copiousness of apt illustration could not drive me from my agnostic position. I took my stand upon two grounds: firstly, that up to that time the evidence in favor of transmutation was wholly insufficient; and, secondly, that no suggestion respecting the causes of the transmutation assumed was in any way adequate to explain the phenomena. Looking back at the state of knowledge at that time, I really do not see that any other conclusion was justifiable."

It was Darwin's "Origin of Species" which converted Prof. Huxley to the doctrine of Evolution. It was natural that he should think the evidence which had been adduced before he became acquainted with this work "insufficient," and, of course, a man of his intellectual integrity could not give adhesion to any theory until he was satisfied of its truth. But, while Prof. Huxley's statement, considered as an explanation why he and other men of science did not accept Evolution earlier, is objectionable; it does scanty justice to those who were Evolutionists before Darwin made his great contribution to the world's knowledge.

A thinker who reaches correct conclusions in regard to complex problems under the disadvantage of possessing a small amount of data upon which to base his inductions, may thereby show a knowledge of the relations of things, an appreciation of the evidential value of known facts, and a comprehensiveness of view which denote a high order of intellect.

In the higher sense, the man of science is he who has not only powers of observation, but ability to take the facts which are known and to arrange them so as to explain their meaning by discovering the principles which underlie them, as Newton explained the cause of the fall of the apple, when he conceived that the same force which brought the apple to the ground also held the planets in their orbits.

Mere observation and collection of facts would never lead to a great discovery. There must be reason, imagination, insight; power to understand the significance of groups of phenomena and to think beyond what is actually known, as well as care and caution in verifying what is conceived and held tentatively until it is fully established by a larger knowledge. Imagination, as someone has said, is to the scientist what to the miner is the lamp on his cap; and it enables him to see a little beyond the position occupied.

The work of Darwin in laboriously collecting evidence of organic evolution, and in showing that Natural Selection was an important factor in the transmutation of the species, was a stupendous work which cannot be overestimated. The "Origin of Species" was an epoch-making book, which has revolutionized zoology, and has led to radical and wide-spread modifications and reconstructions of thought in every department of research. And for the work he did, Darwin has received his full meed of praise; has been honored as no other man of science in this age has for the work which his genius and labor accomplished. But Darwin was not the originator of the Theory of Evolution, which itself has been evolved through many centuries. Facts which were a matter of knowledge long before the "Origin of Species" appeared had led many acute thinkers to believe that species came, not by special creation, but by gradual transmutation through natural agencies. Goethe, St. Hilaire, Lamarck, Erasmus Darwin, Herbert Spencer, Ralph Waldo Emerson (who was acquainted with Lamarck's writings), Robert Chambers, and many others, so believed, and their work and influence contributed to prepare the way for Darwin's success.

Years before the "Origin of Species" was published, Herbert Spencer brought forward some of the strongest evidence in support of Evolution. His facts are incontestable, and his arguments are as valid today as they were then. The force of his reasoning, which failed at the time to convince men like Huxley, who required more evidence, is now acknowledged by them, showing that Spencer's earlier acceptance of Evolution was owing to his truer interpretation of natural phenomena and greater freedom from the influence of traditional beliefs and authorities, while their inability to accept the theory was due to their limitations, and not to their more correct judgment of what the evidence should be to render the theory probable.

Spencer conceived Evolution, not merely as a transmutation of species, but as a universal process, as presented in the system which he afterward elaborately worked out in his voluminous works. In "Principles of Psychology," published before Darwin's "Origin of Species" appeared, Spencer assumes the truth of organic evolution, and applies himself to the task of showing how the mind has been developed from low and simple to high and complex conditions.

Whether we accept all his views or not, as Evolutionists we must acknowledge the force of his arguments, based upon facts, for the doctrine of Evolution, in distinction to the conceptions which prevailed when he began writing on this subject. Prof. Huxley, after his acceptance of Evolution, repeated many of these facts and arguments which before, though they had convinced others, had failed to convince him. Had he posessed that larger range of vision, that philosophic grasp, that synthetic power, and that wonderful faculty of dealing with problems in the algebra and geometry of thought which distinguished Herbert Spencer among thinkers of the nineteenth century, Prof. Huxley would probably have accepted Evolution prior to 1858 upon such evidence as was then accessible.

I do not under-estimate Professor Huxley. He was a man of scientific attainments and literary accomplishments of a high order, a careful investigator in several departments of knowledge, a brilliant and fearless expounder of scientific truth, and an admirable character; but this fact, with his tardy conversion to Evolution, should not be construed to the discredit of those who accepted the doctrine upon evidence which he regarded as "insufficient."

The facts of embryology, of homology, of rudimentary parts, etc., known before the publication of the "Origin of Species," were to some minds as strong indications as they are now of the transmutation of species; but to them had to be added more facts, and some method suggested by which species could have been changed, before men like Huxley could declare in favor of Evolution.

This shows how important and necessary was Darwin's work to the wider acceptance and progress of Evolutionary thought, but it does not in the least abate from the soundness of the general reasoning of those who, from the facts then known, arrived at the conclusion which Professor Huxley reached at a later date.

The "rigorous methods of science," which save us from a priori speculation and many unwarranted inferences, may sometimes be applied in a way to delay the acceptance of a truth seen by a great thinker long before he can satisfy others that the objections are irrelevant or unsound and that the evidence justifies his conclusions. Many scientific men and teachers of science in the colleges were very confident that Darwin's conclusions were not "justifiable," several years after Huxley accepted and, like a brave knight, defended them against scientific and theological assailants.

Among observers and thinkers there are always some who are in advance of others in accepting or in anticipating newly-announced truths. It is doubtless well that the majority, subject to the influence of custom, authority, and associations, change slowly; for thereby is maintained that stability which is the safeguard of society and a condition of progress. But it is desirable that we recognize the merit and service of those who are the first to understand and assimilate a new idea or to adopt and work for a great principle, for they are the pioneers of those changes in thought and method which are necessary to overcome the tendency to conformity, uniformity and conservatism which steal like a mist over a nation, resulting in "intellectual peace at the price of intellectual death."

THE WORD "RELIGION."

As Explained by Dr. J. A. Marvin.

To the Editor:—I notice that several seem to have serious objections to calling Spiritualism a religion. Under the narrow definition given to the word "religion" by the orthodox churches, and the narrower conception many of them entertain of man's religious duties to his fellow man, all liberal thinkers might object to the term "religion" being applied to the progressive, up-to-date teachings of to-day; but surely we are not confined to the definition given to it by the orthodox church, but may very properly formulate and adopt a practical and more liberal definition, and one which it would seem that we, as Spiritualists, can all agree to, and here is one to which it would seem to me there can be no substantial objection:

1. Religion is that which tends to the best development of the Spiritual within man, and brings him into more perfect sympathy and harmony with his fellow man.

2. That which has in view, and helps to, the unfoldment of the good within the human soul; and seeks the most perfect development of that which is best in our posterity.

3. That which by thought and deed lifts man onto a higher plane of Spiritual life and places uppermost in his mind an exalted ideal, and thus brings him more fully in touch with, and susceptible to, the vibrations of the higher spirit realms.

Here is no pandering to old ideas; no declaration of a dogmatic creed or religion that would tie us to the teachings of the dead past, but one so liberal, so truly spiritual as we see and are taught by the spirit world to-day, that in substance it would seem to meet the wants of not only Spiritualists, but of all the advanced thinkers of to-day.

In accepting this and insisting on our teachings being the religious teachings of Spiritualism, we will bring our mediums and healers within the scope and protection of our National Constitution.

FUNDAMENTAL RELIGIOUS TRUTHS.

Emphasized in Modern Spiritualism.

We hold it to be true that the way is now open for all men and women on earth and in heaven to acquire freedom to think and judge in their own way. On account of this truth, and also because of the fact that no man can actually learn for another, each one shall in his own way dispose of whatever comes before him.

Claiming for ourselves this extreme liberty of thought and investigation, and believeing, as we do, that some of the saddest pages in history have been written beeause there was undue intermeddling with man's freedom to think; therefore we would strive constantly to hold toward the opinions of others that same toleration and freedom from bigotry which we desire them to hold toward whatever we ourselves believe. Whenever we rise above our disagreements into a consciousness of brotherhood, we are thereby enabled to recognize, more clearly than we could otherwise, the indebtedness of progress to honest difference of opinion.

Next after liberty of conscience for all, comes the constant adjustment of the individual to his highest and best knowledge, whereby he rises upward and onward forever in wisdom, love and power. The spirit of man is like the seed of a beautiful tree which has been planted by the Creator. If this seed is provided with good soil, space for growth, and with sufficient sunlight, then its blossoms and fruit will glorify both God and man.

If in our search for God a few here and there have been disappointed and have failed to find him, nevertheless others are able to see him in the manifold beauties of Nature, or hear him in the music of the woods and in the sounds of flowing waters. One person finds him by means of love and adoration, and believes that he reads God's messages in the soul's holiest aspirations. Still another feels the hand of God leading him whenever he is moved to extend a helping hand to an unfortunate brother, or whenever he is strongly impelled to labor for his fellow man by trying to raise him up out of darkness and ignorance.

Without an All-Highest to whom individuals may attune themselves, they cannot labor and dwell together in the fullness of peace and harmony. Only when man is responsive to the note sounded by the All-Highest, which to his conscience is the nearest perfect that his mind can detect, will he, like a tuned instrument in some great orchestra, which mingles its harmonies with the music of all the parts, find a sympathetic unity between himself and God, and between himself and his fellow man.

As man cultivates a love for the highest ideal, he will by degrees come to believe in the personalness of God. At length this sense of personality, though feeble at first, will sufficiently develop to enable him to say, "I will behave toward my brother as I would have the ever-present Ideal Person act toward me. By this means man inspired with charity and loving sympathy will be able to affiliate with others for the accomplishment of good work.

True religion is a worship of this Great Spirit so profound that man, dissatisfied with the expression of mere words and sentiments, seeks to manifest it in his deeds and behavior. And any person who has learned to clothe his worship not only in forms of words, but also in deeds of loving kindness, has learned the art of true religion.

In public worship meetings are held both for the purpose of devotion and to teach religious truths; but at the same time we would not forget that public worship is related to applied religion only as the color and fragrance of the blossom is related to the ripened fruit of the tree.

In the great truths of Spiritualism we find a new and world-wide power for uplifting the race of man. No longer can any act be done in secret, or without the fact becoming known to our spirit friends. Because of this, man perceives that there is not only nothing to be gained, but much to be lost through delay in obtaining forgiveness for wrongs committed. This fact, together with the heavenly joys of the spirit world that await the pure and true, can give an incentive to righteous activity of infinite consequence to man.

In our religion we seek to avoid idolatry. Therefore we worship no God, Lord, or Savior who in the figure of a man sits on some heavenly throne. One God only do we worship: the ever-present Great Spirit.

To the unbeliever who may doubt or deny the existence of God, we extend a brotherly hand whenever he sincerely desires to co-operate in doing good works unto others. Whoever cannot live in the spirit of peace and love on earth, cannot expect soon to find it in the spirit world. While to affiliate for love and good works on earth, this is like the organic hosts of heaven.

The religion of Modern Spiritualism, therefore, may be said to consist in a live appreciation of the spiritual value of growth in character, of good works done unto others, of a belief in spirit communion and in an ever-present and beneficent GREAT SPIRIT.

I know the path I ought to go;
I follow fearlessly;
Inquiring not what deeper woe
Stern duty stores for me.

So foes pursue, and cold allies
Mistrust me, every one;
Let me be false in other's eyes,
If faithful in my own.

The Boy Clairvoyant of Norway

Remarkable Feats of John Floettum, an Ordinary Country Boy of 13, Have Within a Few Short Weeks Made Him Famous—How He Closes His Eyes and "Sees" into all Sorts of Mysteries.

At Singsaas, in Guldalen, a mountain district, about 480 kilometres by rail from Christiania, and only a short distance from Trondhjem, lives a boy who, in the last few weeks, has become the most-talked-of person in Norway. Up to about three months ago this boy, John Floettum, attracted no special attention. John is now between 13 and 14 years old and looks like the average boy of his age and station. His father, who is dead, was a small farmer, and the wonder child is the fourth of six children. His bringing up has been like that of other farmer children in the district. His education he has received in a public school in his home parish. The teacher speaks of him as a boy of average brightness, but that he has never until lately shown that he possessed any extraordinary abilities. At school he could not be called studious, but, aided by good mental qualifications, he has always managed to maintain a fair average. For drawing, however, he always showed a special liking and fitness.

On the return home from a funeral of a relative of the boy, some three months ago, a girl of the funeral party lost a key, but did not know where. Coming to the house where John lived she told of her loss. The boy, like the rest of the listeners, gave it a moment's thought, and, as John did so, he happened to close his eyes, and there and then he could see how it happened that the girl had lost the key and where it was to be found. The boy, half frightened by his own vision, told what he had seen with his closed eyes. Nobody believed it to be anything but a joke, but the unaffected w[illegible] in which the boy told his story carried enough weight to make the unbelieving listeners go with the boy to the place where he said the key was to be found. Arrived at the spot, the key was found exactly in the place on the road where he had told them it would be. Still this did not convince the people that John was a true clairvoyant; they all thought he merely happened to guess it right. The story spread, however, and John was soon given many opportunities to locate lost articles, and he has done so in the most satisfactory way and in a manner that excludes all doubts as to the genuineness of his clairvoyance.

His performances have already been too many to enumerate here. One of them may serve. A man disappeared from a neighboring district, and after he had been gone seventy men searched the forest where the man was supposed to have gone, but in vain. No trace of him could be found and they finally gave up in despair. The news of the wonderful John had, in the meantime, reached the place and it was suggested that he be sent for. John arrived eight days after the man had disappeared. He had never been within many miles of the place before and knew absolutely nothing of the missing man nor of the district he had come through when leaving home.

Arrived at the place John looked about the house and scrutinized a photograph of the man. Then he went out, walked around the house once and twice without anything seeming to make any special impression on him. Suddenly he stops walking, goes into the house, sits down and begins to draw on a paper the route the man had followed when leaving his home. This work seemed to tell heavily on him. He leaned his head against one hand, while he drew lines with the other—piece after piece—often with long pauses between each time he made a line or part of it. The perspiration was dripping freely from his brow.

The sketch of the route was made in this manner. John, through his inner or second sight, saw the lost man as that evening eight days before he had wandered away from his home. It was a very crooked route, and every once in a while he could not follow the man, and then there was a stop in the drawing. At last there came a vision of the lost man resting under a large tree near a river. Further he could not see, and he therefore thought the man was still there. Then a searching party went out, following the sketch of the route made by John. This was a Saturday, but they did not reach the tree indicated until Sunday. There they found the man's handkerchief and could easily see traces of the resting place he had found there. But the man himself was not there. Then John again began to "see" and he saw the man wandering toward the river, called Glommen. On the march toward the river the boy became so exhausted, however, that they had to return home. Once again, having rested up a bit, the boy declared that he now could "see" where the man was. The next day they again set out, following the route indicated by the boy until the river was reached. There a boat was set out and piloted according to John's directions. Suddenly the boy stands up in the boat and says: "Here he lies." Down in the water the man's corpse could be seen on the bottom of the river, from where it was later taken up by grappling hooks.

Since then his ability as a genuine clairvoyant has been assured. It is not only in direction of locating things lost—some that he has located have been lost for thirty years—that he possesses this remarkable power. He is also a thought reader. Thus when a man only thinks of the furniture of his home in Christiania, for instance, where John has never been, he is able to describe that particular flat or room with all that there is in it with minute exactness. This has been tested time and again by men whose statement is above all doubt as to veracity.

It requires no special conditions for John to be able to "see." He simply has to close his eyes and he sees the thing or person requested to be seen. He says that when he sees objects with his eyes closed, or rather with his inner eye or second sight, they look about the same as when seen with his natural sight, only a bit cloudy—that is all. The only difference that he has discovered in this respect is that when he sees a match ignited in a vision, the flame is always green. He does not make all his drawings or sketches blindfolded; he occasionally opens his eyes and draws a line or part of it, according to what his vision has shown him of course, because he can work faster that way he says.

Two months ago a six-year-old girl mysteriously disappeared from her home ni Christiania. She was the daughter of a printer, and as they live on a street not far from the harbor it was thought probable that she might have gone down to the docks, falen into the water and been drowned. The police were notified and dredging was done extensively but without any results. It was also thought likely that she might have been stolen by gypsies—"taters," as they are called in Norwegian. The police officials, from one end of the country to the other, searched all the gypsy boats and camps they could find, but the missing girl was not found in any of them. The public therefore gave up the idea that little Gudrun Klausen had been kidnapped by gypsies; all, even her heartbroken parents, believed that she had fallen into the water and met death in that manner.

In the meantime the wonderful power of the young John Floettum became known and he has been consulted in regard to the missing Gudrun. He says that he "sees" a man come up, pat her on her head and lead her away to a boat where there is a woman and several children. He describes the looks of the man and his dress, which indicates that he is one of the boat gypsies. There are also men around the docks who claim that about the time the girl disappeared, they saw a "tater" answering the description furnished by John. As far as John could "see" from his home, the girl was taken on board the boat by the man and the boat sailed away out of the bay and mingled with other boats. Being a boy from an inland and a mountain district, he knows next to nothing about boats and maritime matters, but the skech he has made of the route from the little girl's home in Christiania down to the place in the harbor where all the gypsy boats are permitted to land is absolutely correct.

In order to test what this wonderful lad is able to do in order to locate the missing girl, he has been brought to a place on the bay near Christiania where he has ample opportunity to familiarize himself with boats and the sea, and w[illegible]e has rested up, further attempts at finding Gudrun will be made. If he succeeds, his fame will be world-wide. Already he has to be hidden in order to keep him away from the hundreds who want to consult him, and from enterprising managers who want to exploit him at a princely salary.

A Good Woman Gone to Her Reward.

Mrs. Mary E. Johnson, a resident of this city, born in 1830, passed from earth to her spirit home, September 12, 1907, after an illness of several weeks. Her life work deserves more than a passing recognition. A volume could be filled and the half not told of her good work for the past 20 years in relieving suffering humanity, she being a gifted healing medium, possessing wonderful clairvoyant vision, by which she was enabled to closely diagnose many internal diseases that baffled many skillful physicians. Not only did she devote her time and strength to relieving humanity, but better still, was always a living example in every deed and act of a true Spiritualist. It was my good fortune to know her intimately the past 20 years In all that time she has been an outspoken adherent to the cause of Spiritualism. Her outstretched hand was ever ready to greet you, with a smile and a word of good cheer. No inharmony ever found a dwelling place in her home. No word ever passed her lips to wound or offend any person. All neighbors are unanimous in saying she was the best they ever had. Our pastor of the Progressive Spiritual Society, Mrs. Annie Throndsen, officiated and spoke words that touched our hearts and inspired us to better things.

As I grasped her hand for the last time, a few hours before her transition, her face was wreathed in smiles, and thethought came to me: What a beautiful end to a pure, honorable and worthy life.

Her remains are resting in the beautiful cemetery of Crown Hill, alongside of that of her father and mother. If I felt worthy to write her epitaph, it would be: "Here reposes the remains of a devout Spiritualist."

A FEW MODEST REMARKS.

To Our Brothers and Sisters Assembled at the Convention of Spiritualists at Washington, D. C., October, 1907.

When honest, intelligent people embrace a good cause, we expect them to stand by it without fear or hesitation, and try to further its advance by any means at their command, financially, mentally or otherwise, never lacking the courage to forward their honest opinions at the right place and at the right time. Happy those who can do so personally!

The writer of this regrets to stand aloof, a lonely fighter for our august cause, thrown upon a far-off, lonely island. May she offer her mite in writing?

The Progressive Thinker, "the champion and trusty guardian of Spiritualism, is again sending out loud notes of alarm: there is danger ahead for our mediums." It looks, indeed, as if the municipal forces all over the land were planning a combined attack against mediumship. This is, no doubt, a direct consequence of the fraud epidemic. It furnishes the authorities a good pretext to SWOOP DOWN upon Spiritualism in order to protect the public against the vampires who manipulate under its cloak, and incidentally to gather license fees.

To be sure, the trickster will be able to pay license, and the fun will continue under the old name, while true mediums must go to the wall, not being able to compete, for good reasons.

The question now arises: WHAT SHALL BE DONE?

There is no outside help. Spiritualists must help themselves by decided and radical measures.

But who shall take the lead?

Scattered hosts cannot accomplish anything; it needs organized forces; and thus we must expect salvation from the hands of our much overburdened yet always strong and faithful N. S. A., acting in harmony with our many efficient State and local societies. They alone can sever the "Gordian knot" of the fraud question; they alone can loosen the "millstone" of dishonesty forced upon the neck of Spiritualism and DRAGGING IT DOWN TO PERDITION.

And how can the societies do it?

By breaking entirely with the statu quo of mediumship and establishing it on a new and healthy basis.

Of course, we cannot tear down the "shingles," which are a disgrace to Spiritualism, putting it at a level with common business, honest or dishonest, as the case may be, when sheep and wolves in sheep's skins are in the same pen and discrimination becomes a problem.

But we can discountenance them and withhold our support, leaving them to take their own risks, along with fortunetellers, sleight-of-hand performers, etc., etc.

Such a resolution, taken by organized Spiritualism, should be published throughout the country, and people will know where we stand.

Mediums, indeed, must be protected and allowed a decent living, but the public must be protected as well, and our cause advanced and not be left at the mercy of unscrupulous or incapable individuals; therefore, all mediums should pass a strict examination and require endorsement as to honesty and competency, and work under the auspices of some organized society, at a fixed salary and during fixed terms, like orthodox ministers. Lectures and message-bearing should be kept apart, not follow each other. Mediums in position should not give private seances, except without pay. The dime-show admission fee ought to be discarded, and contributions be solicited in a more dignified way, which will be granted, no doubt, when good lectures and reliable messages will attract intelligent people, who must find it natural to contribute, as no cause can be upheld without money.

Whatever we may feel about initiating church forms, and however much such initiation may antagonize our independent philosophy, it confronts us as a matter of expediency.

Forms adhered to by average people through centuries have become part of their mental composition. To shake them off at once arouses antagonism and creates prejudice against the best cause, even among people desirous of progress.

If evolution is the law of the universe, then religion cannot be excepted; it must develop step by step, dropping old forms and views one by one, until at last it will have attained those perfect heights where all the worn-out rags of previous periods have disappeared and a truly ideal state of mankind will have been reached. Whether this be religion, or science, or philosophy, or a nameless mixture of all together, what does it matter? And, by the way, what does it matter at present if other religious bodies appropriate some of our principles and plume themselves with original thought? To see the truth spread, this should be our main ambition. Pride and conceit will never bridge over the chasm that yet separates us from the millions whose way of thinking differs from our own.

Still, all those different shades of thinking emerge from the same source: The aspiration of mankind toward truth, toward eternal happiness.

Spiritualists, may it be our highest aim to gather those various shades into one harmonious rainbow of human brotherhood. It will be the purest, the most brilliant and the only never-fading rainbow that ever spanned between earth and heaven.

Vital Process.

Will It Become Possible to Check the Ravages of Age?—Attempts to Control or Reverse the Natural Forces That Bring Death, and Their Hopes of Success.

One needs a lot of bottle feeding in the nursery of science [as set forth in Worlds Work,] before it is easy to discuss such ultimate questions as control over advancing age. A host of queries arises: What is life? What is the process by which a little cell 1-124th-inch wide can grow into a big, complex creature like a man or an elephant, or a whale, or a humming-bird, as the case may be? What is it that causes a senseless, unconscious bit of life-producing putty—protoplasm—to move? Why do the pale and sickly shoots growing from potatoes in a dark cellar reach toward the only light that comes through the cellar door? Why will entire limbs grow out from stumps of amputated limbs in some forms of lowly animal life, while man is given but one chance to sue a railroad for the loss of his leg? What is this seeming intelligence that causes newly hatched chickens with absolutely no experience, to move unerring to food? Is instinct becoming defined? What has crystallization to do with life formation? What part in the great drama is assigned to the activities of bacteria?

For man to stay the hand of time, to extend the condition of youth or to check growth in any living thing, he must be able to interfere with an apparently universal law of Nature—that every individual growth has a limited era in which it can build faster than the ferments will pull down. This he can do to some extent. To be able to do this is almost to be able to create life out of chemicals. This has been done to some extent, but these wonderful achievements are a long way from controlling the advance of age in the human being. But though the functions of a man, compared with those of an angle-worm, are enormously multiplied, yet the variety of materials is very slight.

Chemists had believed that the power to so combine inert into living matter lay in an unknown, mysterious influence called "the vital force." Rather concisely stated, we might say that all vital growth and action are founded on chemical stimulations—ultimately electrical; that what looks like the hand of Providence, mysteriously guiding the unintelligent cells, the brainless plants, the wholly inexperienced and helpless new-born mind, the homing pigeon—what we call "instinct"—is but the expression of a certain chemical and electrical forces, the unconscious response of certain appetites to particular stimulants. Snyder has interestingly explained the operation of these forces in the following statement:

"A flower standing in a room turns its petals towards the light. To the birds we ascribe intelligence, to the flower no more than the attraction of light. Yet it seems as if the self-same forces rule over both. When the new-born caterpillar climbs to the end of a branch where it may find the fresh bud on which it feeds, it seems as if some dim intelligence were at work. When it is satisfied, it climbs down again. A fly will lay its eggs on meat, whereon its larvae may feed but not on fat. Dr. Loeb showed how all these wonderful adaptations to an end could be explained in a very simple way. Young caterpillars, for example, will follow the light, so long as they are hungry. If they find no food, they will keep on climbing, conceivably until they die. When they are cold they will not move. When the warm sun comes up in the spring, they begin to crawl upward. All that is needed to assume is that in the hungry conditions which cause the animal to move, just as it sets up a reaction in the photographic plate, or explodes a mixture of hydrogen and chlorine gas. Certain chemical stimuli from meat cause a fly to lay its eggs. In the fat these stimuli are lacking. They can be produced artificially.

In short, the influences of light, heat, acids, alkalies, pressure, gravity, electricity, etc., can be rightly applied, not only can the actions of living creatures be varied and directed, but their protoplasmic or cellular formations and growths can be more or less controlled, for they are all working under similar forces. And so are the vast majority of the actions unconsciously occurring in our bodies. Our conscious intellects can control many functions, yet have no glimmering sense of the extensive chemical stimuli, responses, and consequent alterations which compose the field of cellular growth and nutrition in our bodies. We are familiar with the marvelous variations in flowers, fruits and vegetables, accomplished artificially by Burbank and others. Many equally interesting "controls" have been accomplished in the animal kingdom. Two classes of such controls, specially interest the public; reproduction independent of the male and checking the processes which bring decay and death to the adult. We might add a third—reversing the trend of physical life, by which one would "grow" from age to youth.

The life process is discovered. It is electro-chemical, and the delicacy of detail in construction of the wonder cell of reproduction has followed the same influences in varied characteristics as applies in producing all the varied forms, colors, sizes and individualisms of full-grown animals. Heat will alter the color of the rabbit's hair, of the butterfly and the chameleon; light will redden the apple, tan man's skin; arsenic at the roots will dye green the blossom of the pink; pressure will check the growth of a limb in the unborn embryo; animalcula need no brains to keep from swallowing food and trash alike—food stimulates the action of swallowing, while trash does not.

Every vital process, whether it be the absorption of oxygen by the blood corpuscles in the lungs, or the digestion of starches, or the abstraction of urea from the blood by the kidneys, or repair of the body in any way, is secured through the action of ferments.

Ordinarily ferments are destructive; but brilliant discoveries have shown the existence of constructive ferments. Everyone knows that a dose of certain drugs will poison, while small amounts stimulate. Ferments behave in the same way. Add malt to starch and it will become glucose. Add sugar to this and it will change back to starch.

The nature of these physiological ferments is largely a mystery at the present time; but some of them are being chemically imitated, and the next step will be to learn how so to balance the constructive against the destructive ferments in the body that, instead of progressive decay of the upbuilding cells by destroying ferments, they can continue equalizing loss and repair. Aside from the destructive influence of certain ferments, there is apparently no limit in the years of growth capacity of cells, which is another mystery. Possibly the gradual wakening of the body is not due to increase in the amount of production of the constructive ferments. The lines of attack will not materially change. Nature is nowhere so prodigal as in her supply of reproductive cells, and for every being created there are thousands of such cells destroyed. Under wild ing created there are thousands of fruits and berries produced fall in early decay, or remain stunted. The skillful horticulturist can work such adjustments through ferments as greatly to avoid such failures and add to the quality of the total crop. What could be accomplished with man, if he could be bred and trained under the same "controls" that are so successfully applied with fine stock.—

DR. EDWARD A. AYRES.

A Successful Convention.

To the Editor: If you could have been with us in our recent Oregon Convention yesterday, September 8, in our all-day meeting, you would have forgotten that the Oregonians were slow.

Such an outpouring of spiritual food, a baptism of spirit such as "Old Oregon" has never realized before Oregon once more stands to the front. Fine roses filled our large hall to overflowing, and were banked high up, giving out their sweet perfume. The richest blessing of spirit was made manifest in every worker through the long day and evening.

And again, just to revive us from our reverie, we find in our morning Oregonian, the leading paper of our city, a "Successful Convention" recorded, and occupying space side by side with our Christian brethren's account of sermons and their tendency. We, at least the thinking class of us, know what good that will do for our cause.

We have much to be grateful for. One of the particular events was the adoption by the convention of the entire spiritual code of Chesterfield Camp.

Your new code, brothers and sisters, which has been so carefully set forth, will be placed on our records and given to our daily press as the good work goes on, that our people here may have some more light set before them as a study to lead them onward and upward to the highest goal, the true love of the soul.

THE INNER CHAMBER.

Selected from the Writings of Mrs. Hale.

What seems obstacles are always opportunities. There never was an opportunity put in the pathway of any human being that it was not his chance to show what he was made of, and of acquiring something more.

The body is greatly abused through the ignorance of humanity, and human progress is impeded by turning the creative electrical fluids out of their course. It is not understood that every little channel should have its electrical current vitalizing, vivifying, energizing the machinery. That is, the spirit. The fluids of the body are manifestations of the inflowing of the spirit.

In your silent chamber you may so so sensitize your machinery that thoughts, like messengers, will beat into your brain, and out into the world. That is inspiration, only you will have built your chamber around you, and made its walls strong. You can go into the world and stand in the midst of the densest crowd; you can look through the windows of your chamber and see and hear all that is going on; you can open the doors and window of your chamber and let in all that you desire; you can keep out all that you do not wish, by this same means.

You wonder why it is that you cannot do more. Be not impatient. Grow sweetly, steadily. Do not waste the silent hour in which you rest in the arms of the spirit. Grow like the plants and the trees, and as you grow in the spirit, your work, your duties, will be presented to you. Let the spirit wind you up in the draperies of your soul.

Make it a point never to worry about a single thing. There is a higher power than you, and when you have done what you can, with the help of that higher power, your duty is done. Do what you can simply and well. Be content.

Where do we find ourselves? How do we get to ourselves? How may we know? Go into the inner chamber. Silence! All is still. The outer faculties sink into oblivion. The celestial creations come in one by one till all is unfolded before us. We see the why. We see the how. Do we degrade it? No. We but add to it. The temple of our purest thoughts is silence!

THE CAUSE AT SEATTLE, WASH.

A Letter of appreciation, Followed by a Communication From Helen Rice Burleigh, Giving an account of Her Treatment at the Hands of City Officials.

To the Editor;—I have received the Premium Books, seven of them, with The Progressive Thinker. My husband and I are more than pleased with the books. We now have food for our minds for some time. I wish more people would read The Progressive Thinker, it would be such a help to them.

I enclose a letter written by one of our mediums and published in the Seattle Times. She is one of the best, a fine lecturer and test medium, I have been attending her meeting for the past three years, and I know what a world of good she is doing, but between the city officers and the ministers, there's no peace nor justice to be had in this city.

I hope you will have space in your grand paper to publish Helen Rice Burleigh's letter.

FRANCES E. BROWN.
Seattle, Wash.

Letter of Helen Rice Burleigh.

If the well known minister, who goes in so strongly for reform, would direct his attention to the filthy and unsanitary condition of the city jail, instead of attacking everything that makes for advancement in ethical thought, Christian Science, Spiritualism, Theosophy and other cults, he would contribute more to the public good.

His bitter attack on mediums, whom he characterizes as "infamous frauds and fakirs," I would consider largely responsible for my arrest and imprisonment last Saturday. I spent two hours there while my attorneys were arranging for bail and the grave need of reform was obvious to me. I am pastor of the Seattle Psychic Society, and stand in the same relation to my congregation that Matthews does to his. They come to me for consolation and advice, and the philosophy I teach is their guide for their conduct in life.

It is plain that Matthews has not given this thought even the most superficial investigation, and he is strangely lacking in breadth or Christian charity when he wastes his eloquence in invective and abuse upon a class who are literally followers of Christ. It is not my purpose to enter into a theological discussion with the learned Doctor Matthews. He has loftily refused to dignify Spiritualism or any of its followers by debating with them, and I do not aspire to the glory of defeating him in argument. One of Christ's teachings was humility, but I have failed to detect anything Christ-like in this minister's attitude.

Standard of Ethics.

I have never attacked the church nor orthodoxy in any of my lectures, but I claim we have a belief sweeter and saner than theirs, because its essence is the oneness of humanity. The failure to recognize this solidarity is causing the churches to lose their hold. They preach a doctrine of separation while the great tendency of the age is toward oneness. The people of my faith have a standard of ethics higher than this. They believe in a God of such infinite wisdom and gentleness that he could no more spare the soul of he lowest creature than the soul of a bishop.

We have come into such a sense of brotherhood that hell is a falsity. The knowledge that our brother was condemned to everlasting torment would be intolerable to advanced souls.

Because I reject certain creeds, because a belief that teaches the damnation of a guiltless babe when unbaptized appeals neither to my heart nor my reason, because I deny a religion that is a compound of myth and fable, and cleave to one that is a glorious trinity of wisdom, harmony and love, I do not fear damnation. Neither am I willing to believe that men like Emerson, Huxley, and Spencer are lost.

I have my work and my mission among the people here, but an obsolete law that I contend has no reference to spiritual mediums has been revived and directed against me with terrible malignity. Heretofore I have avoided publicity, but I feel there is nothing to be gained by a negative course, and I would be remiss in my duty if I failed to call attention to my recent experience.

Chamber of Horrors.

I was arrested and taken without warrant to that chamber of horrors, I need the language of Victor Hugo in describing the sewers of Paris to fitly depict this scene. In the prisoners' room, reeking with an odor indescribably vile, was a young woman who had spent six days there and was sentenced to remain twenty-four more.

Anyone familiar with plumbing will realize the condition of a room when it is explained that there is no apparatus for flushing the closet, and the floor and bowl were in a state unspeakably filthy. I regard this as a greater menace to health and morals than many things inveighed against in the Sunday sermons.

I am not without influence, and felt that my stay would be short, but my heart went out to this unhappy young creature whom my belief in the oneness of humanity claimed as a sister. I endeavored to cheer and strengthen her, and she responded with a flood of words. Her own sad story, the coarse and suggestive remarks made by the police officers and employes about the jail, and above all her desire for a better and purer life.

One evidence of our kinship is that we grow constantly more sensitive to the pain of others, and I could not hear the recital of this unfortunate girl's wrongs without a pain in my throat and a hot mist before my eyes. I see her now confined in that hideous place, which I regard as a festering sore on the fair city. Why is no voice raised against this evil when we hear such violent clamor against lesser ones?

Why should the city authorities arrest and imprison me when my only offense is that I teach a doctrine of spirituality and humanitarianism and love?

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." Demonstrates the continuity of life and our environment of spiritual influences. Free from all theories of superstition. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 25 cents.

A Mysterious Power.

Signor Zuccarini, an Italian Expert, Lays Claim to a Mysterious Power, as Set Forth in That Great Daily, the New York World—He Floats in Mid-air During His Leisure Hours to Oblige His Friends Who Are of Inquiring Mind.

It is only a disposition to oblige which impels Signor Zuccarini to raise himself into the air and stay there for twelve seconds between heaven and earth like Socrates in his basket. He is an amiable young Italian of Bologna, whose exploits as an amateur medium have set all the savants of Europe to talking and the investigators of the occult on this side of the water to wondering if he really can levitate himself in that remarkable manner.

Photographs which appear in the August number of the Annals of Psychical Science indicate that he had the faculty of aerial balancing, although the psychists and psychologists in the United States would actually like to see Zuccarini suspended in air without any visible means of support before they give their opinion.

To those who ask him how he does this seemingly marvelous feat of defying the laws of gravitation, the gentleman from Bologna replies that he has not the slightest idea, as he is in a trance, and that he does not especially care about the exercise and would just as soon refrain. He is not a professional medium, but is employed in one of the government offices in Italy adding up figures. He levitates his own figure only during his leisure hours to oblige those of a scientific and inquiring mind.

Nine seances arranged by the Corriere della Sera to give scientists an opportunity to watch the flying medium were arranged in Milan. The sitters at these nine seances were men of the highest standing in Italy and included men of science, jurists, members of the Italian Parliament, and journalists. Several of them have written accounts of what occurred and others took photographs by flashlight of the medium while he was sustaining himself in the air.

Impelled by Dr. Pascal.

Professor O. Murani, who has written one of the accounts, describes Amadeo Zuccarini as a young, healthy man, well proportioned and of genial disposition and polite manners. Zuccarini says that he is impelled by two entities to perform his feats, one of whom is Dr. Pascal, who died in 1600. The other is called John. The seances took place in a room on the second floor of the offices of the Corriere, an apartment thirteen feet six inches long, eight feet wide and nine feet in height.

In the short wall, looking out on the courtyard, there is a window, in front of which was erected a cabinet for the medium. The cabinet had sides of wood and the front of it was covered by a double curtain with black and white stripes. It was fastened by means of rings to a thin iron bar. The witnesses sat about an ordinary pine wood table which weighed fifteen pounds. The medium was at one end of the table in front of the cabinet and the spectators formed a chain, holding one another's hands and the hands of the medium. The room was lighted by two small electric incandescent globes of red glass, which were so arranged that the photographic plates would not be affected by the light.

Zuccarini at the first seance asked that even these lamps be turned out, and the only light was a little red thread of radiance which passed through a partly closed door that led into the next room. The medium moved his hands about on the table for a while and then sent for a larger one. He was in a trance within forty minutes, and after a few movements along the table top he certainly gained fresh vigor and went about the serious business of levitation.

As though suddenly lifted by a mysterious force, he got his feet upon the table. Throughout these experiments he still clasped the hands of a man at each side of him, who formed a part of the chain.

"A strange thing is," writes Professor Murani, "that not only the medium did not rest any weight upon the two controllers who held his hands, but he seemed to drag them up with him. When once on the table he bent his left leg backward, so that it was hidden behind the curtain, and he remained resting only on the right foot, like a man about to fly in air. On the first occasion we were obliged to content ourselves with tactile control only, because the light was so faint; but afterward, in order to verify the position of the medium's feet to the sight, we put upon each of the shoes a little phosphorescent tablet, held in place by an elastic band."

It was stated by the Professor that although the left leg of the medium was thrust out into the air and behind the curtain, there was no possible object to support it. As the body was bent forward, the foot on the edge of the table first contracted in a remarkable manner, then rose by degrees, and the body of the medium remained poised in air for from ten to twelve seconds.

"This phenomenon," continues Professor Murani, "was very interesting. On the first impression one would say that the body of the medium does not obey the laws of gravity. It is necessary to suppose that another force opposed to that of gravity prevents the fall. It might be suggested, indeed, that the hands of the two controllers, without their being aware of it, may have served as points of support for the medium. We also thought this and pointed it out to him. The medium, in order to convince us that this suspicion was without foundation, repeated the levitation at once, asking us to form a chain only with the little fingers of each. The medium, it should be stated, weighs 147 pounds.

It is no doubt a strange comparison, but the impression came to me spontaneously that some mysterious spring had been compressed between the feet of the medium and the table. Another strange fact is that sometimes one of those who made the chain tried the effect of breaking it by letting go quite noiselessly and in complete darkness the hand of his neighbor. The medium perceived the fact at once and ordered the circle to be again closed, liberating one of his hands to give the table a heavy blow with his fist.

"As our intention was to photograph the medium floating in air, we arranged two good cameras in the room and a magnesium light apparatus for producing at the right moment an instantaneous flash. We removed the curtain of the cabinet, which seemed to serve no purpose except to hide the leg of the medium.

"But when he was placed on the table, where he resumed his position of a man flying, he demanded the curtain. When we objected he replied quietly but resolutely that without the curtain there would be no phenomenon. Let it be understood that it was Pascal who always purported to bespeak of the medium's mouth, for John is taciturn. Pascal replied, when the reason for this was asked, that the curtain served to give force to the medium. We were obliged, therefore, to resign ourselves and to replace it."

His Powers Increase.

It was explained further by the Professor that as the seance advanced the powers of the medium became apparently more developed, and he finally succeeded in raising himself in the air at a distance from the curtain, as the spectators had wished him to do.

"Let the reader picture to himself," continues the Professor, "the medium standing on a table and at a distance from the curtain. Two cameras with their lenses exposed like vigilant eyes are ready to register the phenomenon. At the moment of levitation there is a flash of the magnesium light, which, after two hours passed in darkness, seemed to our eyes like the light of a thousand suns. The medium escaped our hands and fell down with a noise into the cabinet.

"Our eyes were for a moment so dazzled that we could not observe the situation. Every one had luminous globes before his eyes. At last we got our bearings again and by the faint red light which passed through the interstices of the door opening into the next room we saw the medium fallen on the floor, breathless, with eyes shut, clasping one of his knees with his hands. He had not injured himself at all and the seance could be quietly continued. We were able to make other similar experiments, but never more than one in one evening, and we always observed that the light was like a stroke of lightning to the medium. A strange thing is that the medium does not show fatigue in these levitations. He does not tremble and even shares, although in a low voice, in our conversations."

Professor M. L. Patrizi, who witnessed the experiments, also applied himself to some theory to account for the strange aerial antics of the medium and his associates in the spirit, Dr. Pascal and John.

Thought He Used Brackets.

"One easily recognizes," said he, "without being hypercritical as he inspects the photographs, that Zuccarini's left foot must be resting on some object behind the curtain. This, indeed, is an idea which at once suggested itself to us. One evening, in fact, we accused of complicity two weak brackets which formed the edges in the angle of the window, although, as we afterward found, the medium's boot could not have reached them.

"We similarly suspected the back of the medium's chair, which remained behind the curtain after his rapid transportation off the surface of the table. We even wondered whether he could, by holding in his left hand the free edge of the curtain, fixed at the opposite end, make a sort of knot into which his left knee could be introduced so that he might rest the weight of his body upon it a few seconds. But the iron rod from which the material was suspended did not give any grating noise at the moment in which the levitation was produced. The experiment succeeded even when the little brackets were removed, when the medium's chair was taken away at his own request, and when he consented to move right away from the curtain." It was explained in the final levitations that the curtain only served as a background for the ascension of Zuccarini, and that when the most satisfactory photographs were taken he was fully a yard away from the cabinet and his two feet stand out visibly. The image is confused and imperfect, it is explained, however, on account of the convulsive trembling of the limbs of the medium and of the phosphorescent patches on his shoes.

"If," says Professor Patrizi, "the young medium had stood upright before us, the term physical ecstasy might be applied to this phenomenon; that is, if he had no contact from mortal hands, and eyes and soul and body were directed heavenward, like the images of saints on the panels of the altars.

"We must admit that the appearance of Zuccarini in levitation is far from being graceful and imposing. It is not very ecstatic and not at all aesthetic. One feels in his being the effort to effect the prodigy—an effort which sometimes had something desperate about it. The medium thinks that John and Pascal are training him for final flight in which he will not fall back."

Believe It Is Not Acrobatic.

Scientists seem to be thoroughly convinced that there is nothing acrobatic about this manifestation and that the medium does not leap, as that would be revealed by the pressure on the hands. Zuccarini was carefully examined by the savants before they began to experiment with his powers. They found that he had a neuralgic face and that there were evidences that he was subject to hysterical attacks and to nocturnal attacks resembling epilepsy. He is something of a somnambulist as well, and once when a child he was found by his mother in a corner of a room huddled at the foot of a bed and wrapped in his bedclothes.

One of the first objections to continuing with the experiments was that the medium might produce his extraordinary effects by secret gymnastic manoevers by unusual cleverness or strength of muscle. The measure of his muscular force was taken in the laboratory and it was found both in his arms and legs to be inferior to the normal.

The medium admitted that while in his waking hours he was occasionally subject to hallucinations. He seemed to have difficulty in fixing his attention, which quickly grew tired. He spoke of being troubled by the spirit John at night, who appeared to him in a vaporous mist and pulled away the bed clothes and mumbled indistinct words in his ear.

Pascal has troubles of various kinds and complains of having once been assassinated. He declares that his brother Frederick performed an operation on his throat with an infected instrument, in consequence of which he died. The investigators do not take much stock in John and Pascal, and think that both are myths created by autosuggestion, and have nothing to do with the levitation, which they attribute to some remarkable physical condition which they have not yet been able to explain.

SOUTHERN CASSADAGA CAMP.

Lake Helen, Florida, February 2, to March 15, 1908.

The Programs for the Fourteenth Annual Convocation are now ready.

Some of the speakers have been engaged, among them are J. Clegg Wright, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Mrs. D. A Morrill, Mrs. Clara Field Conant, and Anna Throndsen.

Mrs. Bartholomew, the trumpet medium, will be in attendance.

Apartment House.

Rooms for light housekeeping in the Apartment House can be obtained for from $25 to $30 for the season.

Rooms in Cottages are let from $1.50 to $5 per week. Liberal discount for the season.

Address Mary McGarvey, Lake Helen, Fla., for information, inclosing stamp for reply.

Spencer Boarding House.

Mrs. A. L. Spencer has enlarged her dining rooms and furnishes table board at reasonable rates.

Admission to ground during the session requires 10 cents a day of all who do not buy season tickets, at $2.50 each. Admission to all regular lectures free.

Dramatic entertainments, card parties and weekly dances are features of the camp.

After December 1, 1907, meetings will be held each Sunday until the session opens.

Artesian Wells.

Two deep wells have been drilled, and the cottages and public buildings are supplied with pure running water free from sulphur.

Transportation.

Parties from the Middle West, who go by rail, will find the Queen and Crescent route the best. For information, address W. C. Rinearson, G. P. A., Cincinnati, O.

Herbert Spencer has the privilege of trucking at Camp this season. He will meet all trains at the station

The public buildings have been painted; the Rose Garden and Audubon Park, and Lake Park (the latter containing thirteen acres) have been improved. The Rose Garden with its monthly bloom, charms everyone.

Joseph Slater has completed a large and elegant cottage on the south part of Lake Park.

The new gate entrance and Pagoda make a very attractive appearance.

Hotel Cassadaga.—The rooms in the hotel have been ceiled and stoves placed in them. This commodious building is owned and conducted by Mrs. Emma J. Huff. The dining hall connected with the hotel is under the management of Mrs. Lloyd and Mrs. Sherman. Price for board and room are from $7 to $10 per week.

Brigham Hall.—This is a fine dormitory of 18 rooms, well furnished, good closets, spring beds, halls well lighted, one lamp and stove in each room.

The Camp Very Progressive.

There are now ready sixty buildings at camp, and several more are to be erected.

Cottages can be rented from $40 to $100 per season of six months

H. M. Clark has two good cottages ready to let, furnished. Mrs. M. M. Witters has a neat little cottage of four rooms ready for a tenant. It is located near Lake Colby, affording a pretty view of this beautiful sheet of water.

Mrs. Huff has been visiting her brother in Idaho. She will be at camp soon.

Mrs. Kate Lowber has remained in the hotel all summer and finds the stay at Lake Helen quite pleasant.

Mrs. Bartholomew has recovered from her late illness.

Mrs. J. D. Palmer intends to make the camp her future home.

Mr. Underhill has added several rooms to his cottage on Prospect Heights.

Mrs. Thompson has remained at camp all summer.

Wm. Kellogg and Mrs. Palmer are expected about October 1.

Mrs. Vogt will return from her visit to Germany in October and expects to arrive at camp in November.

Rain is much needed, as the lakes are very low.

Excursions.

My excursions by water, leave New York City about October 10, 24; November 7, 21; December 5, 19; January 1, 14.

These are by the Clyde steamship line from New York City, an enjoyable sail of three days to Jacksonville, then a day to Lake Helen, by rail, or by St. John's river steamboat.

Write me for circulars and special low prices (enclosing 4 cents in stamps for postage on Clyde folders, etc.) H. A. BUDINGTON.
Springfield, Mass.

It will write in full sight—yes, in full sight and it will write more, write better, write easier and keep on doing so longer than any other typewriter.

The Borderland.

Solving the Mysteries of That Which Has Been Supposed to Be Unknowable—The Borderland Between Science and Mysticism Constantly Becoming Narrower as Nature's Secrets are Revealed—Interesting Statements.

Borderland science—that which lies between the known and the unknown—has laid on the scientific table, telepathy, clairvoyance, clairaudience, movement without contact, and like mysteries from hidden realms [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune]. And the doctors of the colleges are discussing them and proving them true. They verify the truths of the occult seers. They have evolved a new knowledge. Chemistry is revolutionized, physics regenerated. Men's instruments sharpen, their senses quicken. They are seeing things in a new way, under a new light, in a new world.

The occult arts revive with fresh power. The occult sciences press on with accelerated speed. Yesterday the occult was a laughing-stock among the school men. To-day, from jest to earnest, they it is who now fare forth into the dusky domain of occult lore and exploration, ardent disciples of the mysteries of the unseen world.

And ever the horizon of the borderland of science recedes. What the occult seers and prophets dreamed yesterday the scientists are proving to-day. What the occultists are dreaming to-day the scientists may prove to-morrow. The inspired imagination pierces the unknown, and later the man of facts and formulas verifies the discovery, and the unknown becomes the known.

Flammarion Says There Is a Psychic World.

M. Camille Flammarion, the celebrated French astronomer, says it absolutely is certain that one mind can influence another at a distance and without the aid of senses, that many dead people have been recognized by telepathic communications, that positive observation proves the existence of a psychic world, and that world he never will cease exploring.

When the hard-headed Cesare Lombroso, the Italian luminary writes of the haunted houses he has visited as seriously as if it were a case in criminology, it is clear that ghosts no longer are in disdain in scholastic quarters. Ditto when Prof. William James of Harvard similarly details an instance of clairvoyance. Ditto when men like Dr. Isaac Funk and Prof. Hyslop of Columbia write books on their communications received from the dead. And what is to be done with an Elmer Gates of Washington, who has photographed the "eternal body," a duplicate of the coarser physical body? Is not this occultism of occultism, the primal teachings of the ancient Egyptian and Asiatic sages and seers? And what shall we do with Prof. J. Ellis McTaggart of Cambridge university, England, who champions the theory of the evolution of man by successive re-incarnations on earth.

Many Phases of Occult Religion.

What of the religions? They are steeped with occult teachings. New thought proclaiming the impotence of matter, the reality and supremacy of the world invisible, sweeps the continents. There are ever so many cults of it Mental Science, Divine science, Christian Science. Christian postulates the divinity of the human soul. Thus also the occultists, with their one central flame of God, the innumerable human rays irradiated therefrom. It teaches the healing of the sick. Thus the adepts of every age. "Greater works than these shall ye do also."

But of all expressions of occultism that surges through the world is there any to compare for depth, for comprehensiveness, for height of ideal with the Theosophical philosophy, a unique and sublime moment to human thought? Is it science? Theosophy claims to outscience science, begins where the chemist leaves off, and takes his story continuously, without break or lesion, into the world invisible beyond atom and electron. Is it Christian Science? Theosophy points to the Vedantin philosophy of India as the ancient forerunner, and offers an explanatory theory of the one divine principle to illuminate the working hypothesis furnished by Christian Science. Is it psychical research? Only when science and borderland, science and Spiritualism lay hold of the magnificent expositions of the nature of things propounded in the secret doctrine by Mme Blavatsky will they come into their own and unravel their tangles.

Theosophy Claims to Embrace All Religions.

The Theosophical philosophy embraces and eliminates every phase of human thought, according to its students; offers truth for every type of mind, ideal for every human heart. It is in the colossal scope of this myriad aspect philosophy that all religions are harmonized, that all sciences are synthesized, that materialistic philosophy is supplied with an ideal, and that transcendentalism is furnished sure foundation; that other worlds are made rational and livable, that human origins and destinies are made congruous with the present order and infused with incentive to progress.

Known to the world as founded in 1875 in New York, Theosophy is the current revival of teachings older than the world; the divine wisdom older than the ancient of days.

From the breasts of mummies enswathed milleniums ago have been taken hieroglyphic covered sheets which have yielded the divine wisdom as Egypt knew it in the sombre magnificence of her maturity—the Egypt of the Pharaohs and the pyramids. From the Assyrian tablets in Asia and from the uncovered ruins of the Mayas in North America, Theosophists say, comes the reiterated testimony of the same profound spiritual teachings, however various the details. Through Lao-tze came the same teaching to China, and through Buddha again in India, to spread northward to Thibet, southward to Ceylon, eastward to Siam and Burmah. Pythagoras and Plato of ancient Greece studied in Egypt, and as initiates in Egyptian mysteries took the same divine wisdom to Greece.

Judaism Tinctured with Eastern Philosophy.

The greatest of the Hebrews were nurtured at the knees of Egyptian wisdom. To the Hebrew race christendom owes the major portion of its bible and Jesus was born from it. "Unto you is given," said Jesus to his disciples, "to know the mystery of the kingdom of God, but unto them that are without all these things are done in parables."

St. Paul, say Theosophists, was a Christian initiate of the mysteries, Clement of Alexandria and Origen were familiar with the divine wisdom, as were also Euclid and Democritus; Thales and Solon, Apollonius, and Iamblichus, the great philosophers of early Islam, Roger Bacon, chemist-monk; Paracelsus, pioneer of curative electricity and of modern medicine and chemistry; Giordano Bruno, the "second Pythagoras;" the Christian German mystics, Boehme and Eckhart; the English Vaughan and Robert Fludd, the Scandinavian Emanuel Swedenborg, St. Martin, St. Germain, Mesmer. The German idealist and the American transcendentalists show the influence of the divine wisdom. At last, in the fourth quarter of the nineteenth century, a Russian woman, Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, faced the mocking world to proclaim again the divine wisdom, ancient yet ever new.

Secret Wisdom Known to Adepts.

Theosophy claims to be the secret wisdom forming the esoteric side of all the great religions of the world, and it alleges that this precious deposit, enriched with the results of the investigations of generations of seers and sages, verified by countless experiments, to-day, as of old, is in the hands of a mighty brotherhood, variously spoken of as adepts, arhats, masters, mahatmas, brothers who are living men, evolved further than the average humanity, who work ever for the service of their race with a perfect selfless devotion, holding their powers in trust for the common good, content to be without recognition, having passed beyond all desires of the personal self.

Today Theosophy speaks far more openly than it ever has done before, owing to the fact that, with the evolution of the race, man has become more fitted to be the recipient of such knowledge, so that what once would be taught only to a small minority now may find a wider field. As of old, so now, the secret wisdom is guarded, not by the arbitrary refusal of the teachers to impart instruction, but by the capacity of the student to understand and to assimilate. Calculus is not taught to kindergartners but to collegiates.

Fundamental Principles of Theosophy

Three fundamental principles base Theosophy: An omnipresent, eternal, boundless and immutable principle known only through its effects. We cannot speculate upon it, for it transcends the power of human conception. It is dwarfed and distorted by any description. In these unthinkable regions the wings of thought beat faintly and lips can falter only, not pronounce. Second, the eternity of the universe in toto as a boundless plane; periodically "the playground of numberless universes" incessantly manifesting and disappearing." Third, the fundamental identity of all souls with the universal oversoul, the oversoul itself being an aspect of the unknown root.

One Life Pervades All Matter and Spirit.

A chemist can have in his receiver water held invisible; he may condense it into solid; throughout he has the same chemical compound, though he changes its condition. The chemist is dealing with facts in nature; his methods may throw light on natural methods working in larger fields. So, from the Theosophical standpoint, spirit and matter are one, and the universe is one living whole from center to circumference, not a molecule in it that is not instinct with life. The particles of the mineral cohere, they vibrate, they attract and they repel, they have their fatigues and motions; what are these but manifestations of that living energy which "rolls the worlds in their courses, flashes from continent to continent, thrills from root to summit of the plant, pulses in the animal, reasons in the man"? One life everywhere, therefore one law. "As above, so below."

Each of the seven planes of manifestation of spirit matter has its own characteristics. The highest, the first is pure spirit without form, the primary emanations. Next comes the plane of mind, of loftiest spiritual intelligence, where individuality begins, the ego first appears. Here there is a subtle form, the differentiating of the "I" from the "not I." Below this still densifying, comes the plane of animal passions and desires, actual forms on their plane. It is the astral plane, which is matter, but slightly rarer than with ourselves. Lastly, the plane familiar to all of us, that of the objective, physical universe.

How One Plane Passes Into Another.

The scientists already have found that they can break up the ultimate physical atom. And they are wondering whither this leads. It will lead, when they have broken up the ultimate atom of the physical plane, Theosophy claims, into the lowest, coarsest substance of the astral plane, to the substance corresponding to the solids of the physical plane. In breaking up the ultimate astral atom it assumes the properties of the lowest grade on the thought plane, and so on.

Each of these planes has its own organism, its own phenomena, the laws of its own manifestation; and each can be investigated as exactly, scientifically, as experimentally as the objective plane is investigated by our scientific investigators. All that is necessary is that we should use appropriate organs of sensation, and appropriate methods of investigation.

Why do we see, taste, hear and feel? Merely because the body is capable of receiving certain impressions from without by way of the avenues of sense. But there are myriads of phenomena, as real as those we familiarly cognize, which are to us nonexistent for the simple reason that our organs of sensation are not adapted to receive them.

Take the air vibrations which we call sound. If an instrument that emits successive notes be sounded in a room with a dozen people, as the notes become shriller and shriller one person after another drops out of the circle of auditors and is wrapped in silence while still a note is sounding, audible to others there; at last a pipe speaks that no one hears and though all the air be throbbing with vibrations, silence complete reigns in the room. The vibration waves have become so short and rapid that the mechanism of the human ear cannot vibrate in unison with them; the objective phenomenon is there, but the subjective does not respond, so that for man it does not exist. Similar illustrations might be drawn from every sense.

Adepts Develop the Higher Senses.

So, if even on this plane to which our bodies are correlated phenomena constantly escape our perception, says the Theosophist, surely it is not too much to claim that our lack of knowledge of higher planes is no proof they do not exist. Those who have time, ability and courage can develop in themselves the senses which enable the consciousness to come into touch with the higher planes, senses, and capacities already evolved and fully at work in some, and to be the common inheritance of every child of man during the course of the ages.

The different planes interpenetrate the physical plane; they are not shells one within the other, like the coats of an onion; the particles of each succeeding plane are finer than the plane below, hence the particles of the astral plane move freely about between the particles of the physical plane just as the ether moves in the air.

Just as a man has a physical body made up of the particles of the physical plane of solids, liquids, gases, ethers, in which he works, walks, talks, and plays on the physical plane, so, according to Theosophy, he also has an astral body made up of the particles of the astral plane which he uses constantly as the vehicles of his emotions and passions, and into which he withdraws when he leaves the physical body every night in sleep and when he leaves the physical body at the hour of death. He then leaves the physical plane and goes on the astral plane, at least for a time. It is the purgatory of the church, the Kamaloka of Hindoo writings.

From Astral World to Thought World.

From here, after a period proportionate to the vigor of the astral body, he passes on to the thought plane, they say, casting aside the astral body as first he had cast aside the physical body. Here he remains in the blissful regions of the heaven world. His stay is proportional to the degree of his nobler earth experiences. For the average man of substantial attainments who has lived to a good age it endures for about fifteen centuries. He lives in the heaven world in a body built of the inconceivably fine particles of the thought or mental plane.

The man still has three higher bodies, termed in Theosophy the casual body, the Buddhic or bliss body, and the atmic body, the body of absolute reality. These three, highest bodies constitute the ego, the man himself, the individuality, the soul which lives and evolves throughout the period of manifestation. They are correlated to the loftiest planes of manifestation of spirit-matter. But thither only the most highly evolved of human beings go. The average man has little in common with them. His higher bodies are embryonic, not matured. Only as he evolves through incarnation after incarnation on earth do they develop and in their development indicate his readiness for the higher planes, his harmony with them.

Believe That Man Has Many Lives.

The evolution of the man consists in the acquirements by the soul of experience, and the gradual molding of the physical nature into a form which readily can respond to every prompting of the spirit within. The final goal of his human evolution, they claim, is the complete assimilation of the soul, the ego with the spirit, the ray from the universal oversoul. It is obvious that such work cannot be accomplished in one lifetime, or in a few lifetimes. For such gigantic emprise countless lives must be lived, each yielding as its fruit the strengthening of some budding force, the dawning of some new capacity. Thus by numberless reincarnations is built up the perfect man.

When the rest period in the heaven world succeeding the earth life has been exhausted, when his capacity for heavenly enjoyment has been satisfied, the man, the ego, is drawn back to earth life for another period of earthly activity.

Mrs. Besant, President of the Theosophical society, has said that as surely as hydrogen and oxygen rush into union under certain conditions of temperature and pressure is the ego drawn by irresistible affinity to the circumstances that yield opening for its further evolution. Suitable environment, suitable parents to provide suitable physical bodies; such are some of the conditions that determine the time and the place for reincarnation.

Each man is drawn to the surroundings which his own past has made inevitable. The great law of cause and effect operates in human destinies as immutably as in chemistry and physics. Owing to this law our present is the fruit of our past, our future is growing out of the present.

Theosophy declares that we may, and do at each moment of the present life produce by our own actions, feelings, and thoughts definite effects in the subtler order of things, resulting in conditions for our next life wholly of our own making.

Thoughts build character. Desires make opportunities. Actions make environments. So that whatever one may suffer or enjoy, attain to or fall from, is brought about as the result of one's own action, in obedience to the laws of a perfect justice, of perfect causation. It is the alternate experience of pleasure and pain which man encounters during his stages of ignorance that develops within him wisdom.

Fatiguelessly, they say, the soul makes his pilgrimages in the three worlds of the familiar physical planet the astral or purgatorial plane, the thought or heaven plane; through vast periods of time he peregrinates in ceaseless rounds of earthly activity, of astral purification, of heavenly repose, and then renewed activities on earth; not only on one planet but on many.

The last planet inhabited by the present human race was Mars, according to these seers; the next planet they will inhabit is Mercury. At last comes the perfect consummation, the unfoldment of the potential divinity that dwells within each. The man then is perfect, the liberated one. He has completed man's ascent, he touches the limit of humanity; above him there stretch hosts of mighty beings; but they are superhuman, the crucifixion of the flesh is over, the hour of liberation has struck, and the triumphant, 'It is finished!' rings from the conqueror's lips. He has vanished into light nirvanic."

Perfect Teachers Return to Help the World.

He is now a master of compassion as well as well as a master of wisdom, it is said, and returns to devote himself to the service of humanity, bending all his sublime powers to the quickening of the evolution of the world. Such a one was the Christ, they point out; such a one was the Buddha, and such are the few great souls who tread the earth to-day, secluded from its external strife, yet pouring down upon mankind from the great heights of their advancement inestimable blessings, guiding by means of their divine powers whole races and nations, but unknown to all "save a few earnest souls who come to them through the ancient gateway of occultism," whose portals throughout time have stood ajar for the resolute pilgrim.

The Gateway of occultism leads its votaries along a different and narrow pathway of rigid virtue and mental and emotional control. Through the esoteric phase of the divine wisdom the occultist studies and masters the system whereby his personality or lesser nature may be made to expand and embrace his higher or divine nature. The occultist exalts unselfishness, justice, and true knowledge; he has compassion and wisdom, theosophists say; his desire nature is purified and his habit of mental concentration fixed. Within the course of a few strenuous incarnations he seeks to accomplish what the mass of humanity attain to only in long researches of time. In doing this he treads the occult path of discipleship, divided into the probationary path and the path proper with its four initiations. The fourth initiation admits him to the last stage of the path, where he dwells on the plane of unity, the lofty nirvanic plane inconceivable to ordinary humanity in its plenitude of purity, bliss, and transcendent power.

Pledged to Universal Brotherhood.

Before the cycle of time shall close, they say, the greater portion of mankind will have reached this exalted stage of growth. And then shall all be gathered unto him for the great cosmic rest, as he, inbreathing, withdraws from manifestation. Only after aeons and aeons of time all shall emerge again with him as he outbreathes in renewed manifestation to be the architects and builders of future universes.

Such are some of the teachings as given forth at this time as Theosophy. As Mrs. Besant has said, "In each child of man the true Theosophist recognizes a brother, to be loved and served, and in the Theosophical society, Theosophists, under the direction of the masters, have formed a nucleus for a brotherhood of humanity, and have made the recognition of universal brotherhood the only obligation binding on all who enter. Without this recognition of brotherhood all science is useless and all religion is hypocrisy. Every distinction of race or sex, of class and creed, fades away before the essential unity of the indwelling spirit before the countless incarnations under all outward forms of garmenture, making the experience of prince and beggar part of the training of all in turn. The self of each is the higher self of all, and that bond is one which nothing all the worlds can avail to break. That which raises one raises all. The sin and crime of our race are our sin and crime and only as we save our brethren can we save ourselves. One in our inception, one in our goal, we needs must be one in our religion, and philosophy will be a failure save as it is the embodiment of the life of love."

Queen City Park Camp.

The closing week of campmeeting passed off as happily and smoothly as the preceding ones. Mr. J. Clegg Wright occupied the platform August 27, 28, giving continued satisfaction by his interesting lectures. August 29, the lecture hour was filled by different speakers at the camp.

August 30, 31, Mr. J. Clegg Wright discoursed again, and he also gave the closing address in the afternoon of September 1st. The morning lecture being given by Mrs. Effie I. Chapman. The latter gave spirit messages after each lecture all through the week with great success, and has been one of the most indefatigable workers in the Association throughout the season. The farewell meeting was held in the evening of September 1, in which all regular speakers and some others participated.

The season closes with the best hopes realized for the present year and the brightest of prospects for the next.

President and Mrs. Hubbard left camp for home at once, but Dr. and Mrs. S. N. Gould, Mr. and Mrs. Janus Crossett, and a number of other prominent people, have lingered a little. They expect to leave by the 10th inst., however, and the camp-grounds will then be enlivened only by solitude-loving families who remain until frosts drive them home. The beautiful scenery and ever changing lights on the lake certainly justify those who tarry to enjoy it. T.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth $1.50.

SPIRITUAL SCIENCE.

As Elucidated by Walter H. Scott, in Light, London, Eng.

The greatest question of all is: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

Spiritualism is the Science of the Soul, the philosophy of spirit, or a spiritual conception of life. Spiritualism means all that appertains to our spiritual nature and life. It is Religion, because it evokes the highest standard of duty and moral conduct through the following tenets:

(1) That the soul is divine and immortal.

(2) That heaven and hell are within, and are states of being self-created.

(3) That exactly as we sow, so shall we reap.

(4) That there is progression for all, and perfection is the ultimate goal of every soul.

(5) That under proper conditions and through the development of our interior senses we can hold communion with those who have passed the change called death.

And Spiritualism is Science, because it demonstrates and proves its claims.

A medium is one whose organism is so constituted that he can hold communion with those passed over. He is a bridge between the two worlds, and is able to draw aside the thin veil which separates those two worlds. All people, however, are mediums for some phase of spirit communication, some naturally so, and others could be so by the training and the development of their latent faculties. The inner consciousness, the spiritual perceptions, may be developed by means of circles consisting of a small number of people, held at stated times for spiritual communion, by concentration, meditation, or passivity.

God is the Infinite Spirit whom, in his entirety, we cannot comprehend at our present stage of evolution; but we may know some of the manifestations of the Divine Spirit, as we know the operations of electricity without knowing actually what electricity is. The Soul, spirit, Ego, or true self, is the manifestation of God in man, and in the course of time, in the spiritual planes, this inner self will throw off all its sheaths and shine forth as a perfected being. In so far as we open our nature and give free access to the working of the Divine Spirit, the God within, do we approach a true conception and realization of Deity.

Heaven and hell are largely self-created states of being, and are within. Heaven is the realization of all the ideals that have sought fruition here, the bloom of the sweet flower of a good life, an inner state of felicity and satisfaction, and the sum total and reward of all our best hopes, aspirations, and ideals.

Hell is a remedial experience of repentance and remorse which is self-inflicted, the duration of which is proportionate to the guilt of the wrong-doer. Hell is largely the intense desire of those who have passed on for the gratification of different forms of vice, folly, and merely earthly pleasures, which desire cannot find expression on their side of life owing to the loss of the physical body.

Divine justice, however, takes in ALL the circumstances of the life of each one, and although absolutely just, is remedial and reformatory, and all spirits progress after passing through the darkened conditions, and finally reach perfection, which is the goal of all.

Sin and consequent misery are the conditions and contrasts which make goodness and happiness knowable and possible, and instead of being merely automatic beings doing right because we can do no wrong, humanity will reach perfection through the conquest of sin, misery, injustice, wrong, weakness and ignorance. How could one be called good if there were no evil? How self-controlled if no weakness and temptation? How attain knowledge if no ignorance? How love if no hate? How self-sacrifice if no selfishness? Thus the exercise of our sublimest virtues seem to make what we call sin and misery a necessity. They are the steps by which we climb the steep ascents of heaven.

Death makes no change in human beings. He enters the spirit world just as he left this, the character being exactly the same; but instead of manifesting through a physical brain and body, he uses an etheric or spiritual body. He is able to build up a temporary form, in various guises, so that he can be recognized by earth friends who have developed the clairvoyant vision. He is able to make his presence known by various means, such as physical manifestations, clairvoyance, clairaudience, etc., etc.

All life is from within outward.

Music, art, poetry, lofty thought, scenery, beauty, love, the great, grand and sublime—all those things which make life truly joyous, beautiful and refined, are spiritual, and find full expression and unfoldment in the spirit spheres.

The conditions of our present life are bad for the development of the higher life. Our social conditions need changing, rendering unnecessary the spirit of selfishness, cruel competition and greed. The means of living should be nationalized, causing undeserving poverty to be unknown. Work should be found for all who are willing and can work, and opportunities should be afforded them to work in such vocations as their abilities and tastes dictate, and comfort ought to be assured to the infirm, afflicted and aged.

The laws of health need study. The curative agents of the future will doubtless be more of a mental nature than heretofore. Mental Science, the action of the mind upon the body, hypnotism, massage, electricity, and the use of herbs will take the place of drugs, and youth will be preserved many years beyond what is considered its meridian now; we shall live much longer, the functions of life will be performed more easily and naturally, and death will be painless.

"The Spiritual Significance, or Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price 1.00.

TWO APPARITIONS.

They are Seen in Broad Daylight.

I relate the following circumstances exactly as they occurred. Their explanation must come from other people. I would add that I am a most unimaginative person, and that the muddy vesture in which my soul is clothed is a constant source of grief to me. I do not even have visions in the night. My dreams never get beyond a first-floor parlor or a fowl pen.

On the 8th of last May I was suffering from a bad attack of influenza, which had kept me in bed for some days. Although I could scarcely stand, I managed with great difficulty to crawl downstairs to my study to write two important letters. After I had finished them I was overcome by faintness, and was obliged to lean back in the chair. At the moment the fitful sun was shining with full glare right into the window, and I could hear my Japanese bantams crooning in its warmth as they spread themselves in the sand. I looked at the two letters before me and thought:

"Well, I have hatched those two eggs at any rate. By the bye, what a fine variant of the old tale they tell in the villages of Punjab. 'Sheik Chilli was one day going through the village with a jar of oil upon his head. As he walked he thought to himself, "I shall sell this oil, and with the money I will buy a goat, and I shall sell the kids, and then I will buy a cow and sell her milk, then I will buy a field and two buffaloes, thus I shall gain more money, and build a house and marry, and have many sons and daughters. And when my wife comes to call me to dinner, I will say, 'Go away!' I shall come in when I think fit." With that he jerked his head and down fell the pot and his oil was all spilled. Sheik Chilli yelled so loudly at this misfortune that those standing by took him to the Rajah, who said, 'Give the boy some money to make up the loss of his oil to him.'"

In sympathy with Sheik Chilli, I suddenly lifted up my head, and was astonished to see a lady standing at one end of the table, and a gentleman standing at the other end. I bowed, and asked the lady to take a chair. I immediately turned to the gentleman. Although I had never seen him before, nor ever heard his name, I directly recognized him as Mr. Purviss Loyd. (He spelled his second name with only one "l.") His appearance was very gentlemanly, but I recollect I wondered, as he was a stranger, that he had left his hat in the hall. He was wearing a black coat and waistcoat, gray trousers, and a rich hand-fold black silk scarf with red-breast brown spots. It was fastened with a small emerald pin.

I now turned to the lady again, and at once perceived her to be the beautifully-painted Lesbia that Sir Edward Poynter sent to this year's exhibition of the Royal Academy. She had not got her sparrow with her, but she had on her coronal of gay, fully-blown flowers, and I think she wore light and dark-pink flowing garments. I felt vexed that she had come, and hoped that she had sat well back in the car as she came down the lane. "What would be said by the churchwarden, and Mrs. Blank, and the parishioner who never comes to church except when I am away, when they heard that I had had a visit from a real living picture lady?" I looked at her, and she looked at me in the inane way women of her copious kind of beauty generally do. As I much prefer the half-butterfly, half-grasshopper type of the pretty creatures, I glanced again at Mr. Purviss Loyd. He was actually vanishing into the bookshelf behind him! His feet and legs went into Lyddeker's "Mammals" and Smith's "Assyria"; his body passed into Seeley's "Natural Religion," and, most appropriately, his head into the place where Sidgwick's "Metaphysics" should have been standing. I was thunderstruck, and turned with a bloodless face to Lady Lesbia; but she, too, had gone! Under the window the bantams were still crooning. The sunshine was still glaring into the room. The apple-blossom was still falling in white slanting showers onto the grass plot. What did it all mean? Whence and whither the two persons who had just left me? They were as real, yes, more real, than I, myself, often am to myself. I can no more doubt their existence than I can doubt the existence of the baker whom I can hear speaking to the maid through the kitchen window, as with a throbbing pain and panting for breath I creep upstairs to bed.

We are no more than a moving row
Of magic shadow shapes that come and go
Round with the sun-illumined lantern held
Day and night by the master of the show.

There was a door to which I found no key;
There was a veil past which I could not see;
Some little talk awhile of ME and THEE
There seemed—and then no more of THEE and ME.

—Rev. R. C. Nightingale, in The Two Worlds, of Manchester, Eng.

HOME, SWEET HOME.

When lonely and sad, oft I think of that home,
Where all are so happy with those of their own,
United at last on that echoless shore,
To dwell there in love, to be parted no more.
"Home, home, sweet home,"
'Tis beautiful in Heaven,
Where all can find home.

Sweet peace from on high seems to rest on me here,
That comes from that home when the loved ones draw near,
I hear angels singing their songs of the blest;
And softly they whisper, "In my home home there's rest.
"Home, home, sweet home."
'Tis beautiful in Heaven,
Where all can find home.

When earth's toil is ended, and we can go home,
No more in deep sorrow and loneliness roam,
How joyous the meeting with that happy throng,
To join in the chorus of that grand, sweet song:
"Home, home, sweet home."
'Tis beautiful in Heaven,
Where all can find home.

Tears for the Whole Lot.

The East Ohio Methodist Episcopal Conference, late in session at Cleveland, Ohio, had some serious problems to solve which must have required great learning and coolness on the part of its members. A presiding Elder was disciplined for pitching quoits for a prize. Two others of God's anointed, it is said, will be tried, one for chewing tobacco—slovenly fellow—and another for disbelief in Genesis. A preacher, or any other fellow chewing tobacco, ought to be disciplined. Quoit playing is a physical exercise, usually in the open air, universally commended three-fourths of a century ago. A prize for skill does not partake of the character of a wager, and he must be a severe critic who sees evil in it. The student receiving a prize for good lessons is in the same category, and deserves disciplining if the skilful quoit player is punished.

But it is just awful for a Presiding Elder to express disbelief in Genesis! Such a person would deny that God, after making Adam and Eve, on his first visit thereafter to Eden, found Mr. and Mrs. Adam in a state of nudity, so opened a tailor shop, and made a suit of clothes for his poverty-stricken tenants. And disbelief in Genesis infers a denial that a seductive snake, standing erect on his tail, as seen in pictures found in the Ruins of Babylon, was compelled to get down and perform his locomotive feats thereafter on his belly.

Wicked and deceptive serpent, unfortunate Adam and Eve, an afflicted church, an incredulous preacher, and an unappreciated God, here are tears in great profusion for all of you.

A Clouded Beginning.

Way back at the beginning of Christianity, according to Acts 2:44, they had ALL THINGS IN COMMON. Meredith, in his "The Prophet of Nazareth," a large prize volume, describes the Christian love feast, and relates scenes enacted on such occasions, and in darkness, which we dare not allude to. He says it was because of those terrible orgies the Roman government interfered, hinted at in Pliny's celebrated letter to Trojan which Christians delight to quote to prove they had an existence at that early period. For the credit of the church we prefer to believe that letter of Pliny's is a comparatively modern priestly forgery.

Those Spiritualists so anxious to make their knowledge of a continued life an engraft on Christianity, should go outside of the New Testament to learn of the early beginning of the church whose present claims are so attractive to many. The founders of a religion are not expected to truthfully narrate facts prejudicial to its interests. A Mormon elder carefully conceals the objectionable features in his religion, and every other church, with equal zeal, keeps out of sight its wrong-doings, and particularly its crimes.

Misfortunes Come to All.

If all persons were to bring their misfortunes together in one place, says Douglass Jerrold, most would be glad to take their own home again rather than take a portion of the common stock.

Duplicity and Frankness Contrasted.

If there is any one person more despicable than another it is the dissimulator, he who assumes to be what he is not, to gain some selfish end. Criminals practice it, and with deceptive acts deceive the unsuspecting, frequently to their ruin. They seldom betray their real character as deceivers, and it must be a black-hearted wretch who will boast of being a successful trickster.

The good Apostle Paul, whoever he was, and wherever he lived, if the author of the Epistles credited to him, did more in the founding of Christianity than Jesus himself if the Gospels relate the doings of the one, and the Epistles the other. Read I. Corinthians from 9:9 to 22, wherein Paul says:

"Unto the Jews I became a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; * * * to them that are without law, [I became as one] without law. * * * To the weak became I as weak;" then he concludes:

"I am made all things to all men that I might by all means save some."

A better and more correct rending is: "I make myself all things to all men that I may save some." But the idea is the same when associated with the contexts.

Mungo Park, in his Travels in Interior Africa, relates in substance the following:

Abdulkader, king of Loota Torra, inflamed with a desire to propagate his Mohammedan faith, sent an embassy to Damel, king of the Jaloffs, with two attendants, each of whom carried a large knife fixed on the top of a long pole. So soon as the ambassador gained admission to Damel and announced the pleasure of his sovereign, he directed his attendants to present the emblems of their mission. The two knives were accordingly laid before Damel, when the ambassador explained himself. He said:

"With this knife Abdulkader will condescend to shave the head of Damel, if Damel will embrace the Mohammedan faith; and with this other knife Abdulkader will cut the throat of Damel, if Damel refuses to embrace it. Take your choice."

Now there was an open frankness on the part of that African official, which commends itself to all of us for its directness. There was no sneaking or round-about effort to gain his point; yet a simplicity which approximates very closely to rudeness; but it has the merit of being truthful. Can as much be said of Paul's deceptive action? His was a shameful boast of double-dealing and duplicity that is not commendable, and which we greatly fear many of his successors have imitated.

How Long Shall These Things Continue?

Pope's "Man's inhumanity to man" should be amended to read, "Christians' inhumanity to Jews makes countless thousands mourn." A cablegram from Bucharest, Roumania, of September 12, said:

"Horrible atrocities against helpless Jews during the massacre at Kishineff, many of the victims being burned alive, are reported in dispatches received here. According to these advices rowdies from Odessa were responsible.

"A large band of roughs sent by the Black Hundred organization arrived in Kishineff Sunday night. They were joined by a mob of local Jew-baiters and an attack was made on the Jewish quarter. A large lumber-yard in the vicinity was fired and Jews were driven into the flames as they rushed, panic-stricken, out of their homes.

"Hundreds of refugees from Kishineff have reached the villages along the Pruth river. Frontier guards have been instructed not to allow any to cross into Roumania."

Without entering into particulars, similar reports of Christian outrages come from Hungary, from Odessa, from many points all over the Orient, where Christians are dominant, similar acts of murder, rapine and pillage are common.

These outrages are annual occurrences, and will continue so long as the war spirit of Jesus—"I came not not to bring peace but a sword," shall be accepted as divine.

Overdone Legislation.

The prohibition law enacted and now in full operation in Georgia, which the clergy very generally supported, seems to be too good a thing. Grand Juries throughout the State have adopted the following declaration:

"After January 1, 1908, every minister who hands sacramental wine to his members will subject himself to as many indictments as there are members. Every deacon who hands the sacramental wine to members of the church will subject himself to as many indictments as there are members."

To us that action of the Grand Jurors seems very just, and is strictly in harmony with the purpose of prohibition—to suppress intemperance. Many a reformed inebriate has returned to his cups after partaking of Jesus in the form of good wine, of which the Master said: "Drink ye all of it."

From Whence His Information?

That was an excellent motto of Davy Crocket: "Be sure you are right, then go ahead." In practical life, if properly observed, it would merit a place next the golden rule of Confucius: "What you would not have done to you, do not to others."

The National Baptist Convention, a negro organization, was in session in Washington a few days ago. Among the addresses made was one by Rev. L. G. Jordan, secretary of the Foreign Mission Board. In his annual report Dr. Jordan called attention to the mission work being done in Africa, saying:

"God had no other purpose in permitting the negroes to be brought to this country as slaves than to prepare them to send the gospel to their brothers and sisters in darkest Africa."

Now, really, we would like to know how the dominie gained his information of this fact, and how he knows God planned the horrors of the African slave trade, and for two hundred and fifty years protected the most damnable curse, next to war, ever perpetrated on humanity, that the gospel should be sent to Africa? Indeed, in the lives sacrificed in procuring those slaves; the unknown thousands who died in the "middle passage"; the cruelty and crimes growing out of the slave system, the end of which is not yet; and the demoralization of the masters and their families—and yet, if he is correct, God planned and allowed all this, that the gospel of "hate" might be extended over the "Dark Continent." Has there not already been a sufficient exhibition of the horrors of Christianity, in connection with negro slavery, without adopting new methods for its extension?

The whole system of human slavery had a "Thus saith the Lord," for its foundation. See Lev. 25:44 to 46. It continued in practice among the Jews so long as they had an existence, and was never condemned by Jesus or his apostles.

When Columbus' scheme to enslave the American Indians failed, then was devised the plan of importing negroes from Africa to supply the demand for labor. It was then, while the Pope at Rome was yet the head of the entire Christian Church, a bull was issued allowing the transportation of heathen from Africa to America. Thus an institution authorized by the Lord, sustained by his pets, not denounced by Jesus, but practiced by his followers, and continued in full force for many thousands of years, had an existence, and for 250 years was encouraged by God, that the "believe or be damned" faith might be extended to the wilds of Africa. But, don't forget, it was an infidel President, in our own loved America, sustained by an army of freedom, who disregarded the Lord's demands, had no respect for hoary custom, bulls of Popes, edicts of ecclesiastical councils, or usurped property rights, but by his immortal Emancipation Proclamation, liberated the four million of American slaves, and established a precedent by which the world is free.

And, Listen! It was one THOMAS PAINE, an Infidel, who in the Pennsylvania Magazine, before the American Revolution was dreamed of WROTE THE FIRST EDITORIAL PUBLISHED IN ANY AMERICAN JOURNAL, DENOUNCING THE CURSE OF SLAVERY; and it was he who drafted the act of the Pennsylvania General Assembly, adopted in 1780, abolishing slavery in that State. The preamble of that act is a model worthy the best days of the American Republic.

Ingersoll's Gospel.

"I believe in the gospel of intelligence, the only lever capable of raising mankind. Knowledge must be the savior of the world. Doing good to humanity is the grand religion. No God can put a man in hell in another world, who has made a little heaven in this. God cannot make a man miserable if that man has made somebody else happy. God cannot HATE anybody who is capable of loving anybody."

The orthodox God's Son, made HATE the chief corner-stone of his teaching. Without hating his nearest and dearest of kin, and his own life, he could not be a disciple of that son, else Luke lied in so reporting his words. Which?

Which?

These shall go away into everlasting punishment.—Mat. 25:46.

The Lord will not cast off forever. Though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies.—Lamentations 3:31.

Was the Lord slightly off when inspiring the authors to thus write? The two opposite statements cannot be harmonized, the Universalist sustaining his faith with the latter quotation; and the hell-theorists are equally positive that damnation for the unbeliever is a Bible doctrine. Well, let them fight it out, while we consign the book with such conflicting statements to the domain of mythology.

When any one of the prouder passions are hurt, it is much better philosophy to let a man slip into a good temper than to attack him in a bad one.—Thomas Paine, in Crisis.

IT STIRS ROME!

The Dictum of the Pope Exposes the Fangs of Superstition and Ignorance.

The Osservatore Romano, the newspaper mouthpiece of the vatican, at Rome, Italy, Sept. 16, published the full text of the pope's encyclical. It occupies more than seventeen columns.

The encyclical is the most important papal enunciation from the vatican of a century. It affects the entire world. Some sincere Catholics in Rome hold that if it is rigidly enforced it will lead to a schism in the church.

Even Leo XIII. never issued a document so discouraging of advanced thought.

CENSOR IN EVERY DIOCESE.

The clause enjoining the establishment of college censors in each diocese for the revision of the Catholic literary output is especially discussed. The words of his holiness in connection with this subject are impressive. No books or newspapers of modernist tendency may be left in the hands of any pupil in the universities or seminaries. He adds:

"Everything must be done to banish from your diocese every pernicious book. The bishops are to be above all human fear, to trample all fleshly imprudence under foot, and, heedless of the outcry of the wicked, are to remember our proscription and to proscribe and tear out of the hands of the faithful all bad books and all bad writings. This is not only a right conferred on them, but a duty we impose on them."

THE ENCYCLICAL GOES AT GREAT LENGTH INTO THE PHILOSOPHICAL AND THEOLOGICAL ASPECTS OF THE MODERNIST ERRORS OF THE CHURCH, WHICH ARE UNEQUIVOCALLY CONDEMNED AS THOROUGHLY ANTI-ROMANIST AND ENTIRELY AGAINST THE ONENESS AND EVERLASTING UNCHANGEABLENESS OF THE TRUTH OF THE CHURCH. THE PONTIFF SAID IN PART:

"IN ROME THE MOVEMENT OF MODERNIST ERRORS IS AGNOSTIC AND IMMANENT—AGNOSTIC IN THAT IT LIMITS TO SIMPLE PHENOMENA THE KNOWLEDGE OF MEN AND REFUSES TO GRANT TO HUMAN REASON THE POWER TO RAISE ITSELF TO GOD, AND IMMANENT BECAUSE IT EXPLAINS FAITH IN GOD AS PROCEEDING FROM THE VITAL WANT OF THE HUMAN MIND. MODERNISM IS NOT SO MUCH A SPECIAL ERROR AS AN AMALGAMATION OF ALL THE HERESIES. LOCALLY ITS DOUBLE PRINCIPLE OF AGNOSTICISM AND IMMANENTISM ABOLISHES THE DISTINCTION BETWEEN MAN AND GOD. PANTHEISM IS ITS NORMAL RESULT."

The encyclical holds that the pride, curiosity, and ignorance of the scholastic philosophy are the causes of modernism.

HINTS AT BIG UNIVERSITY.

In conclusion the pontiff says he foresees that the adversaries of the church will take advantage of this encyclical to represent him as the enemy of science, progress, and humanity. To that accusation he replies by acts. He has decided to support by every means in his power the "foundation of an institution which shall group the most illustrious representatives of science among the Catholics, and which shall have for its object, with Catholic truth for light and guide, the progress of all that can be designated under the name of science and erudition."

There is much speculation as to whether the encyclical is aimed at one country more than another. Some regard it as specially directed against France, while others hold that the United States is aimed at, but it may be doubted whether the pope was influenced by any national considerations.

STRIKES HARD AT ITALY.

Modernism has great vitality in Italy itself, where many learned priests have been removed from professional chairs in recent years for favoring it, although without any apparent effect in suppressing it.

The Giornale D'Italia, a conservative journal, declares the encyclical shows that the Vatican is incapable of keeping in harmony with modern civil society, while the Italia says: "THE ENCYCLICAL STRIKES THE CHARACTERISTIC NOTE OF THE PONTIFICATE OF PIUS X. AND HIS REFORMS. IT IS THE RECONSTRUCTION OF THE ROMAN INQUISITION."

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Criticism of the pope's recent encyclical against modernism and a declaration that governments should undertake all education so that no retrograde step might be made, marked the atonement day address of Rabbi Joseph Silverman, of Temple Emanu-El, New York.

He said to the pope's interdict:

"IT IS TIME, HIGH TIME, THAT THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE GREAT RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS SHOULD PROTEST AGAINST SUCH A DECREE; A DICTUM THAT WOULD TEND TO SHUNT THE HUMAN RACE 1,000 YEARS BACKWARD, AND MAKES FOR THE UPHOLDING OF A BLIND FAITH THAT CAN NEVER BRING HAPPINESS TO HUMANITY.

"IT IS HIGH TIME FOR THE GOVERNMENTS TO ESTABLISH MORE LABORATORIES, MORE SCHOOLS, TO ADD TO THE SUM TOTAL OF HUMAN KNOWLEDGE AND TO SPREAD THE KNOWLEDGE OF TRUTH AMONG THE PEOPLE. THE CRIMINALITY OF THE AGE IS DUE TO THE CRASS IGNORANCE OF HIGHER AND LOWER CLASSES."

The will of man is by his reason swayed.—Shakspeare.

Charles Bailey.

T. W. Stanford of Melbourne, Australia, is still holding seances with Mr. Bailey, the most remarkable medium on earth to-day. He sits under absolute test conditions, and the results are astounding, as set forth in the Harbinger of Light. There is not a single materializing medium in the United States to-day who will submit to such rigid test conditions, and only two or three among the whole lot who do not use artificial toggery in their seances, to deceive the public. The materialization seances held in this city are the rankest deception.

So much discussion is going on in all parts of the world concerning physical manifestations, including the "passage of matter through matter," that Dr. Channing's address, given June 7, on this important subject, has been selected for this issue. It cannot be overlooked that in America and Europe the "Psychology of Mediumship" is being seriously questioned, and that psychical phenomena, as being more open to scientific investigation, are attracting the notice of scientists the world over. It matters little that, as in the case of Professor Morselli, he has arrived at no conclusion save that these are established facts. It is this knowledge that will eventually arrest the attention of the world, and it is for this reason that Dr. Channing's explanation, coinciding as it does with latest scientific discoveries, is particularly valuable. Skeptics scornfully doubt the sanity of those who, under test conditions, and competent in every way to give an opinion, declare that these Bailey "apports" are genuine. There is no shadow of a doubt about it. Every scientific man, Russel Wallace, Lombroso, and the latest investigator, Morselli, are declared to be insane when they come to a similar conclusion. As Morselli puts it in the May issue of "Annals of Psychical Research," the skeptics say "they will believe when such and such a scientist, 'a man who is above all suspicion,' shall have made certain of the matter. But," he goes on, "when I admitted I had seen and touched the reality of mediumistic facts with Eusapia Paladino, I lost my position with doubters as 'an authority above suspicion.' He became classed with many of us here in Australia with persons of degenerated intellect." In a recent letter from "X," of Sydney, he rejoices in the "still marvelously successful Bailey sittings. . . . In my pamphlet," he says, "I laid great stress on the importance of physical manifestations in support of the spirit theory, the intellectual alone affording insufficient proof." It is not expected that wonders of the kind that take place at the Bailey seances should be believed on mere hearsay, but before classing them as impositions, people are strongly advised to read what Zollner has to say in his "Transcendental Physics," and to pay attention especially to the latest discoveries in science, which illustrate in a remarkable way all that Dr. Channing contends for in his interesting address. A brief account of the phenomena produced since our last issue will show that the remarkable character of the manifestations is fully maintained.

44th Seance. June 7th. Address by Dr. Channing on "The Passage of Matter through Matter." Phenomena. Lump of clay with Mosaics. It was explained that the Mosaics contained in the lumps of clay that come with monotonous regularity would form, when completed, a beautiful border of a pavement 8 feet long. The pieces that have arrived seem to belong, when freed from the clay, to something of the kind. Skirt of dancing girl, part of supplement to July issue. Bag made by natives, in supplement to present issue.

45th Seance. June 14th. Address by Dr. Robinson on "Atlantis: The Lost Continent." Perfect Nest with eggs brought after medium specially searched by Dr. Whitcomb before the sitters; a most beautiful apport. MSS. brought from Egypt near Alexandria, translated by Dr. Robinson. He said it was on vellum, and being very dry would be opened with difficulty. "It is a record of an inscription," he said, "that was to be placed on a monument to one of the Roman emperors, and reads thus: 'To Jupiter Serapis, the greatest and best, for the uplifting and protection of the Emperor Trajan and of the Roman people.' An officer of the Third Legion recorded this and is instructed to have it set up." Lump of clay with Mosaics. Canary, placed on table to be taken to India in exchange for "apports," was found when light had been lowered to have disappeared. Medium again specially searched. Abdul announced he had put it in Selim's hand, and the bird was then at its destination, India. Spirits and apports both travel as quick as thought itself, which is another of Nature's mysteries.

46th Seance. June 20th. Address on "The Immortals in the Works of Charles Dickens," with remarks concerning his genius, life, habits, and home, his thoughts and his belief in matters appertaining to the spirit world. Phenomena. Manuscript from Alexandria, Egypt, as at seance above. It is the plan of a Roman city with fortifications. Lump of clay with Mosaics. Medium not well and seance shortened.

47th Seance. June 28th. Address by Dr. Channing on "Paul's Address to the Athenians." Phenomena. Lump of clay with Mosaics. These lumps of clay come with such force and drop so heavily that they sometimes rebound from the table onto the floor, always arriving at some distance from the medium. Quantity of buckwheat poured into dish on table. Ancient MSS. brought by Dr. Robinson's instructions; very old and very brittle. It has on one side a rude representation of the seven-branched candlestick; on the other side a ring with a disc in center and old Hebraic characters, said to be the oldest Hebrew written or spoken.

Address by Dr. W. Ellery Channing on "The Passage of Matter through Matter."

[Specially reported by Miss M. Wilson, shorthand writer and typist, Premier Buildings, Collins St., Melbourne.]

I must of necessity to-night speak upon the composition of matter. Scientists upon your earth plane are just beginning to discover that matter is not solid, as they have understood it in the past, and for a short time I will speak to you about the component parts of matter. I will take for an illustration the wood of the table in the center of this room, in which scientists, by the aid of powerful lenses have been able to see the minute particles composing matter. Besides these there are other smaller particles of matter—I am using plain language and discarding scientific terms as much as possible—that up to the present have eluded their scrutiny. There are no lenses yet made whereby these minute particles of matter can be seen. The chemist knows that they exist and scientists call them electrons, which form molecules. The spirit chemist, the advanced spirit in the spirit world, knows that these can be indefinitely divided and subdivided into other minute particles of matter, which to-night I will call "polarized particles" of matter. These polarized minute particles form matter, whatever its form, whether it be the wood of this table, the granite rocks or the sand upon the seashore. Now the polarized minute particles which form the matter of this table are held together through the medium or agency of electricity. What is electritity? Your scientists are unable to say. They speak of the electric fluid and are just beginning to know how to harness it for the use of man. But I tell you that electricity is neither more nor less than a powerful ether, and these electrons or polarized particles are held together by electricity. Some scientists on the earth plane believe that the electrons are electricity only, and they are not very far wrong, and if I may use the term, these fine particles or electrons are electricity materialized. In every part of the universe electricity is present, and there are, remember, many forms of electricity. When you speak of electricity, most people think of the electric battery or dynamo, but there are many forms, as electricians well know, and the great source of electricity is the sun and planets, but chiefly the sun. Without electricity, which is Nature's magnetism, the universe would become corrupt and fall into decay. It is the salt, so to speak, the savor of the universe, that keeps it sweet and beautiful. Every beam of light that comes from the great luminary is charged with electricity, and its penetrating power enters into the earth and strikes the seed. It pierces the seed that you put in the ground, and then in conjunction with other electrons that are in the earth, the atmosphere and the prevailing moisture, the seed germinates and grows. Electricity is Nature's magnetism. It is hard for you to think that this table is not a solid piece of matter. Now, all matter is held together, whether rocks or plants or trees or whatsoever there is in Nature—just as are the electrons forming the matter of this table. Nature is always at work destroying and rebuilding; she is ceaselessly disintegrating matter, and I will give you examples of it. Long ages ago, in the carboniferous period, there were forests of giant palms, lichens and club mosses. Under the influence of electricity, and the action of the sun and moisture, coal was formed from these forests. The giant palms, the club mosses, died, rotted, and fell into the earth. Convulsions of Nature covered them up, but hidden forces were all the time converting them into carbon, and to-day you shovel those palms and club mosses and giant trees into the furnaces of your engines and they supply heat and energy to mankind. Again, look at the chalk deposits in the strata of the earth. What man, unless he is investigating the subject, would believe that these chalk formations are the shells of innumerable minute creatures that once lived upon your earth plane, which went to form the great chalk deposits that are now to be found in the strata of your earth.

How Matter is Disintegrated by Spirit Forces and Re-materialized.

I now proceed to speak about matter being disintegrated by the spirit world—dematerialized and rematerialized. You understand all those terms, for Spiritualists have, in fact, coined them. The spirit chemist has, of course, gained more knowledge regarding the laws of Nature than you have, and he knows of many laws that obtain even on your earth plane of which you are not at present aware. He is surrounded by powerful ethers, those imponderable substances of the earthly chemist, and by exercising his power over these ethers, he is able to disintegrate or separate the atoms of the electrons. He is, moreover, able to change, as Nature does, the form of matter—changing the electrons into ether. Now, if a material object outside of this room is to be brought within by spirit power, it must of necessity be reduced to a state of ether. Supposing that it is a piece of stone, the spirits at work, exerting their power, take it to pieces, separate the electrons which, from the spirit side of life, appear like scintillations of light—that is just what matter or polarized particles appear to spirit eyes. He separates, changes, or converts these particles into ether. He does the same with a certain part or portion of your wall, and then it is easy for one ether to pass through the other; there is no obstruction. Once having passed the etherealized stone through the wall of your house, he rematerializes it, solidifies it again, and in a very short time it falls upon your table as a solid mass. Now, if some person fails to understand this, let me remind you that scientists themselves are able to do this to some extent with matter. Here is an illustration. I see before me a jug of water. Take that water and apply heat to it and you can convert it into vapor or steam, which, if you pass it through a cold pipe, can be run back to water. Subjected to low temperature the water can be made solid in the form of ice. Now, the vapor might pass through certain places, but the block of ice could not. Carrying this illustration further, I tell you that the spirit chemist knows how to reduce that vapor or any other substance into something which we call ether, and which can pass through matter, no matter what it may be.

Spirit Communications Made Through the Ethers.

These ethers of which I have been speaking to-night are to be found everywhere, and wonderful is their action. We communicate with you to some extent through the medium or agency of these ethers. The materialized form is largely dependent on the ether, and, when the spirit speaks, you are clairaudient. Even when you hear the direct voice you are dependent on the ethers, for if it were not for them you would not hear anything. The spirit, when he knocks on your wall, produces sounds by the vibration of these ethers. Thunder is produced in something the same way. Certain atmospheres meet, and in the concussion electricity is generated and discharged, and that which follows is a rumbling noise or report, which you call thunder. The spirit simply causes a concussion or vibration of the ethers, and it strikes upon the oral nerves in your brain, and you hear the knocks. Don't for a moment imagine that spirits come down and knock with their knuckles as you do. It is all a matter of vibrations; the electrons are constantly vibrating; the auras of the electricities are in a state of vibration everywhere.

Now, my friends, I have tried to put this matter to you in very plain, simple language, for if I were to speak in scientific terms, you would have to find their meaning as coined and applied by scientists in the flesh. There are many of Nature's mysteries around about you, which you know to be facts, and you are constantly discovering something that is helping the progress of humanity. The world went very slowly before the discovery of steam and the invention of the steam engine. To-day you have the electric cars, but someday they will be obsolete, antiquated. The entire universe of matter is controlled by Infinite Mind, which is God. To His sons He has given great power. Wonderful are the powers of the mind, and wonderful are the effects produced by the mind, and, before I close, I wish to impress this important truth upon you. You believe in telepathy—the action of one mind upon another mind at a distance. For a long time people denied this, said it was mere fancy; but you know it to be true. Disease may be cured by a powerful, healthy mind exerting its influence over a weak and diseased one. The number of cases which you are constantly reading of—faith cures—are the result of the influence of mind upon mind. There must be first concentration, which takes place through the diseased person centering his thoughts on the spiritual, with his aspirations and desires going up in the form of prayer. I could tell you of several cases where prayer was asked for sick persons who lived at a distance from a church at a certain hour, one case at 12 o'clock in the day, and another case at 7 o'clock in the evening. In the latter case a woman was stricken with paralysis, and at 7 o'clock in the evening she arose from her couch. Here was the wonderful effect of mind over diseased matter. These cases are not what the newspapers call "fake"; they are genuine enough, and that is the true explanation of it. The time will come when it will be possible for one mind to send a message to another—not through the medium of the post, but a mental message, which will be received and answered. Some other evening I will continue this address on Mind, and its influence over matter, speaking also of Hypnotism, Auto Suggestion. Good-night.

Swedenborg and the Spiritual World.

Swedenborg was undoubtedly a seer and a prophet, and many of his statements regarding the after-death life have been again and again confirmed and supplemented by spirits through mediums in various parts of the world—mediums, too, who were entirely ignorant of his statements. He affirmed that:

"The spiritual world—the eternal home of man after death, is not remote from this world, but is in direct conjunction with it, and we are, though unconsciously, always in immediate communion with angels and spirits;" and again we read: "* * * How great the joy of heaven is may be manifest from the consideration, that it is a delight to all in heaven to communicate their joys and blessings to others;" and yet again: "Every man's ruling affection or love remains with him after death, nor is it extirpated to eternity; for the spirit of man is altogether as his love is, and the body of every spirit and angel is the external form of his love. * * * All delights flow forth from love, for what a man loves he feels as delightful; nor has he any one delight from any other source; * * * but the delights of the soul or spirit all flow from love to the Lord and love toward the neighbor."

MOVING ONWARD.

Triumph of Spiritualism in Los Angeles—A Vivid Pen Picture of the Various Churches.

Thinking that it might interest the readers of The Progressive Thinker, and Spiritualists in general to know of the wonderful triumph that has been accomplished here, I will tell them about it.

Many years have passed since the first cruel persecution of the Spiritualists began in Los Angeles.

Long and bitter has been the fight between the Christian and Materialist on the one side, and the Spiritualist on the other.

We have seen mediums ruthlessly dragged from their apartments, and their meetings broken up by the officers of the law, and taken to the cityy jail like common criminals or vags. We have seen them arrested on the street while in company with other friends on their way to a pleasure party. We have seen them arraigned before a "court of justice," and heavy fines exacted from them, and then ordered to leave town like a common thug. They felt that they should obey God rather than man, so exorbitant licenses have been extorted from them

While all this was going on the authorities allowed the Catholic priest to teach that he could forgive sins, and receive pay for it in proportion to the degree of transgression; to teach as we also do, that there is a continued state of preparation after death, which he calls Purgatory; and further that he has power to pray them out and make charges according to the size of the purse of the bereaved living. They have allowed this without questioning the truthfulness of it.

They allowed he Methodist to hold before his congregation an everlasting fiery, sulphury hell, to instill thoughts of fear instead of love in the minds of the people, to teach them that they were conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity, and that for the least error, such as playing a social game of cards or dancing, his soul would be incarcerated in the never-dying flames. All this was done without question, and they drew salaries ranging from $1,000 to $3,600 a year for it.

Unmolested the Presbyterians taught the suppression of emotion and soul-love and the cultivation of reason, and that his members could dance, play cards, attend theaters and yet sweep through the gates into the New Jerusalem.

The Lutheran was allowed to teach that our innocent babe, fresh from the hands of God, was lost if it died unchristened, but an adult member could drink breweries dry, gamble on horse races and yet abound in the Savior's love, if he paid well. All were allowed to aid in, and give advice on business matters without question as to their ability or truthfulness.

The Salvation Army was allowed to become common street-corner beggars, with banners flying and drums beating. They were allowed to harass the occupants of tenement houses and even run public employment agencies.

The Rescue Missions had the liberty to block the sidewalks and streets, and publicly insult and slander the passerby by calling them sinners, transgressors and worms of the dust, and then give a lot of advice as to what to do, take money for it, and yet were never questioned or asked to prove a statement.

In fact, we have every religion, creed and cult under the sun, and out of them all the city authorities have chosen Spiritualism. They know and realize that Spiritualism is true, so as a natural consequence they demand ALL TRUTH. They know equally well that the other religions cannot be true, since all are conflicting, and all are in league with mammonism, capitalism and anti-Christ, so if they demand the truth or nothing, every church, mission and Sunday school would have to close their doors, and Los Angeles would be looked upon by the Christian world as a wicked city; so they let them go unquestioned, thinking that they cannot do much harm.

The persecution has been hard and long, and many died in the work, but when a municipality, like Los Angeles, financially recognizes its truthfulness, insomuch that they employ men to look after its interests, it is trials, hardships and life well spent.

So, fellow workers in other fields, let me exhort you to take courage and ere long you will see the glorious dawn of better times and a secret service man in every meeting, paid by the city to protect our loved and cherished cause all over the country, as we now have in the City of the Angels.

Do Not Want Religion of Any Brand Taught in the Schools.

More than half a century ago the people of Ohio, after much cussing and discussing, decided that they did not want religion of any brand taught in the public schools. In fact, no question of equal public importance was ever better settled; but what do we see now? At the Tuscarawas County annual teacher's institute, in 1907, which met here last week, one of the pedagogues, Dr. O'Shea, spent 35 minutes in speaking on "Modern Mysteries," and to assert in his dogmatical and weak style that "It is an impossibility to have communication with disembodied spirits, that persons at these seances are in such a nervous state that they might as well be in a dream." Well! Well!

It is very evident that Doctor O'Shea is in a state of profound ignorance in regard to the great question of the ages: "If a man die shall he live again?" To this doubty (doughty) doctor I would say, that it is utterly impossible for a man to deliver himself of these ideas whereof he is not possessed.

At any rate, while the doctor and his "institute" is being paid by the people of the state at the sum of $2.50 cents per diem, they should confine themselves strictly to the business for which they were employed. If not, why not? The people want to know, you know.

Some Myths and Allegories.

Ancient Systems of Astrology, Alchemy, Etc Elucidated by Dr. Geo. W. Carey.

A literal interpretation of the mythological characters, astronomical allegories and alchemical symbols of the Bible and New Testament has caused the earth to run red with wars, and the belief that the literal blood of man, however good he may be, or his ignominious death, could by any possibility save souls, has made idolators of a large portion of the race.

It seems incredible that men should go to war about God or religion, yet such is the case. Sam Walter Foss, in a poem entitled "Why?" says:

"They met and they talked where the cross-roads meet,
Four men from the four winds come,
And they talked of the horse, for they loved the theme,
And never a man was dumb.
And the man from the North loved the strength of the horse,
And the man from the East his pace,
And the man from the South loved the speed of the horse,
And the man from the West his grace.

"So these four men from the four winds come,
Each paused a space in his course
And smiled in the face of his fellow man
And lovingly talked of the horse.
Then each man parted and went his way
As their different courses ran;
And each man journeyed with peace in his heart
And loving his fellow man.

"They met the next year where the cross-roads meet,
Four men from the four winds come;
And it chanced as they met that they talked of God,
And never a man was dumb.
One imaged God in the shape of a man;
A spirit did one insist;
One said that Nature itself was God,
One said he didn't exist.

"But they lashed each other with tongues that stung,
That smote as with a rod;
Each glared in the face of his fellow man,
And wrathfully talked of God.
Then each man parted and went his way,
As their different courses ran;
And each man journeyed with war in his heart,
And hating his fellow man."

Sin is from a Greek word, meaning to fall short, or a failure to fully comprehend.

Unborn millions cannot be saved from their failure to understand by the crucifixion of a saint.

But the old question, "What shall we do with Jesus?" must be answered, for in the answer we will be able to "work out our own salvation."

Jesus, the Nazarite, is derived from the Hebrew Isis Nazir, meaning the Eternal Essence cooked, or transmuted, changed, or prepared. It is a chemical or alchemical symbol typified by the crucifixion. A union of elements is described as crossing.

The Eternal Essence passing through the various changes from the vibration of pure spirit potency to materialized forms is continually being crucified. Acids and alkalis, apparently opposite in quality, unite and form new compounds.

Air is the Universal Eternal Essence. When breathed into the arteries it is changed to blood and then it is deposited in flesh and bone, thus materializing the human organism.

Adiramled, the New Time Prophet, says: "All scripture is an allegory. It is a figurative literality. It describes literal facts under the figure of living beings. It is a personification of existing active principles, but no person or sentient thing is actually alluded to from Genesis to Revelations."—Markham's Muse of Labor.

To establish this proposition, you say, will subvert all existing religious belief. Not so; it will simply give to religion what it lacks: a scientific and reasonable basis. It will bring the present church out of the crumbling shadows of doubt into the strong light of faith, establishing it upon the rock of Eternal Truth.

Epictetus, although known as the prince of Grecian Stoics, was for a long time a slave, but those who read his words of wisdom, now name him the Prince of Philosophers, and clearly see that the so-called New Thought of to-day was promulgated during the palmy days of Greece and Rome. Epictetus was a philosopher of Nature and not a product of scholastic lore.

One of the gems from the Epictetus mine of wisdom is: "It is not things, but the opinions about things that trouble mankind; thus death is not terrible; if it WERE SO, it would have appeared so to Socrates. But the opinion we have about death, that is terrible, that is where the terror lies."

The word Satan is from Sanscrit, Satya, meaning Truth, and the Egyptian Soterim, i. e., a Judge. It is also identified with the Greek Cronus, meaning one crowned. In Grecian mythology, Cronus swallowed all his children until the birth of Jupiter. Cronus, you must remember, and Saturn are the same, and in other symbols or mythologies they are represented as the Dragon. There is a constellation called the Dragon, and the Chinese use a symbol of the Dragon on their national ensign, as we use the eagle on ours.

There is a symbol, of Egyptian origin, showing a wheel, the expression of eternity, without beginning or end; on the right side the genius of good, Anubis, ascending; on the left the genius of evil, Typhon, descending. Up over the center sits the Sphinx, a sign of ruling power, holding the universal force in balance as it passes through the changes we call good and evil. In chemistry this operation is carried on by acids or alkalis, which, while seemingly opposite in quality, unite and form new compounds.

Saturn ascending is Christ, while descending it is Satan or Devil. Satan rules the interior of the earth, lead, iron, coal, and tillers of the soil; therefore we speak of these people as Saturnians. Satan is only a name for the aggressive creative spirit on its descending course. Paul plainly says: "He that descendeth is the same as he that ascendeth." In the second verse of the second chapter of Job we read: "And the Lord said unto Satan, 'from whence comest thou?' and Satan answered the Lord and said, 'From going to and fro IN the earth and walking up and down IN it.'"

In this quotation from the book of Job, which is one of the grandest epic poems on the science of astrology and astronomy and chemistry ever conceived, we find the influence of the planets clearly shown. Saturn rules materiality. The sign of Saturn itself is a symbol of matter ruling over mind, a cross over Luna, the moon or mind. The idea that Saturn is really evil gave rise to the idea of a literal hell down in the earth.

Thus we see that the materialistic concept of man on the earth plane of thought creates many Devils.

Evil, or a Devil of some kind, seems a necessity to those still in the thought of separateness or individualism. The efforts of the evolutionists to keep before the minds of the people something other than Divine Wisdom calls to mind the little boy who asked his mother if she thought God would let him have just one little Devil to play with when he went to heaven if he would be real good.

Some people have such a "mania for owning things," as good Saint Whitman wrote it, that they say "my catarrh" or "my rheumatism." Thus do they cherish their little Devils and go on their way complaining and lamenting.

But let us return to the ancient symbols of alchemy and astrology again:

The church has taken these myths, allegories and symbols, clothed them with personalities and then called upon the people to fall down and worship them; yes, even called upon the people to worship the Devil, for the concept held by the church of the Jewish Jehovah makes him a first-class Devil most of the time. The distorted idea held by the church of this tutelary deity made him destroy innocent men, women and babies, in order that his chosen children might possess a better dwelling place.

Fine business for the creator of heaven and earth and all peoples, as he claimed to be. What would we think of an earthly parent who would select, say two of his children as his chosen ones, kill the rest and give their lands to his favorites? We would call him a Devil and proceed to stretch his neck.

But of course the Old Testament narrative of the God of Israel has its root deep down in the alchemy of the wondrous human laboratory—the circulation of blood, the nerve centers, the cellular operations and the composition of blood itself; in fact, the Bible is a collection of alchemical and astrological writings, all pertaining to the chemistry of Life operating in human organisms, well understood by the Jewish Rabbis during the Pisces age—or the dark ages.

We have now entered the Aquarius age, the air age, or the age of Spiritual man. We no longer see men as "trees walking;" no longer see the divine operation as evil, or the work of a malignant being, but see all as wisdom's operations.

We are passing out of the Pisces, or water age, in which our vision was distorted by a materialistic concept of forms, and even life itself.

As the earth began to emerge from its baptism of water about fifty years ago, it heralded the fact by spiritual phenomena at Hydesville, N. Y. The second coming of Christ was predicted by Miller in 1844. He gathered many followers about him and they prepared to ascend in white robes to meet Jesus Christ in the clouds.

They failed to realize the truth of the statement that the "Son of Man (Sun of Man) cometh not with observation."

About the date set by Miller for Christ to appear as a person, the great truth of immortality was demonstrated by the Fox sisters, or rather by the Christ Principle, immortality operating through their organisms; but even with the advent of Christ, the Devil was not destroyed, but the good old orthodox Devil with hoofs and horns was divided into several thousand Devils and named Evil Spirits. The early Spiritualists laughed the big Devil "out of court"—or rather, out of existence, and then declared every operation in the temple of the living God, the human body, that they could not understand, to be obsession, or the work of evil earth-bound spirits. "In union there is strength." While these little Devils were united in the orthodox Devil, he was strong, but after he was cut up into many small pieces his ultimate extinction was certain to follow. But if we must have the belief in evil personified, I prefer one big Devil to several million small ones.

Next came Theosophy, the wisdom religion, whose founders failed to recognize—as others had failed before him—that there is nothing in wisdom.

Wisdom operates on various planes, but the same wisdom is always the operator. The same wisdom—Infinite Life—operates through the cellular structure of the universe, from animalculae to animal; from saurian to savage; from the crystal to the civilizee. A differentiation in cellular arrangement causes the different types of materializations.

Theosophy did not believe in evil spirits, but brought the Devil to the front, to make his bow to the world again, labeled Karma. The so-called evil in the world, according to this cult, is the result of evil in some past world, i. e., incarnation. So Karma is another kind of Devil. Then came Mrs. Eddy and Christian Science with all is God or Spirit, with its mortal mind Devil, occupying NO PLACE, being a highly triturated potency of nothing—but a Devil just the same.

The race having failed to transmute the Devil, even with Mrs. Eddy's Science and Health, Mental Science came to the front. The advocates of the science of mind did not believe in mortal mind. They believed that all was immortal mind; and it did at first really look as though the Devil was dead at last; but on further investigation it was discovered that the Devil was still in evidence disguised as error, mistakes, and evolution from a low to a higher state. When the teachers of mental science are asked the question, "How can mind, eternal, immortal mind, which is all and never commenced, be low or need to progress, get better or go up higher, for being all, there is no place outside of itself to go," they fail utterly to answer. The Devil in any disguise he may be clothed will give even the New Thought people serious trouble.

Even the sweet-souled Hindus, even the Swamis, must be troubled by their highly esthetic, attenuated Devil that they softly name Maya, or illusion. Illusion is a fleeting, momentary expression of Divine Wisdom, yet a great necessity in the eternal plan.

But the day of awakening, the day of resurrection, is at hand. Throw off the grave-clothes of materialism, oh! brother, oh! sister! Come forth in the shining robe of spiritual philosophy and sing the song of the new birth.

Stand up in the full realization of your Godhood and say, Oh! thou Eternal Omnipresent Spirit, thou dost ALL things called good or bad, I have no Gods, or Devils, before thee.

The Devil is only God in disguise. Spell Devil backward and you have lived, that is life, and life is God; therefore, God spelled backward, that is lived, is a combination of letters that spells Devil.

Be free, oh, Soul! Arise! take up thy bed and walk, thy sins be forgiven thee.

The resurrection morn has dawned. This is the day of Judgment, that is, correct judgment.

Charity begins at home. Forgive your own sins, which are simply failure to understand, and you will know how to forgive your neighbor and love him as yourself. Again I say, "Thy sins be forgiven thee."

Let man stand upright and splendid;
Let woman look up from the sod,
For the days of our bondage are ended,
And we are at one with God!

CONVENTION GREAT SUCCESS.

Spiritualists of State Close Annual Session of Association.

The fifteenth annual convention of the Oregon State Spiritualists' Association, which called yesterday, is said by those who took part in it to have been the most progressive ever held by the organization. The closing all-day meeting yesterday was a success from start to finish. Artisan Hall, in the Abington building, was beautifully decorated, the sunflower (the Spiritualists' official flower) being everywhere in evidence; besides, a profusion of the flowers in season loaded down the tables and stands.

The subject of the morning conference at 11 o'clock, was the "Good and Progress of Spiritualism." It called out a great deal of suggestive thought. It was the consensus of opinion of all speakers that goodness and progress were the very essence of the cult of the spirit. One of the speakers said: "God is the Saxon word for good, and as 'the kingdom of heaven is within you,' the spirit of God or Good Spirit is the best of one's life cultivated from day to day. And, like a gem in the mine, it had to be brought into our surface or physical life and made to shine. 'Let your light so shine that it may be seen of men.' Don't let it lie latent in the being."

Luncheon was served at 1 p. m. The music and exercises later were of an elevated character, and stimulating to spiritual growth. The audience claimed to sense a great uplifting power in the hall never before experienced.

At 7:45 p. m., a symposium on "Spirit Communication Throughout the Ages" was held.

"Spiritualism," said the opening speaker, "never had a beginning, and never will have an end. It was the spirit of God manifesting in all and through all life. True Spiritualists were merely conscious of a fraction of this almighty power; others who ignored their spiritual natures, were unconscious of it. The same power that shakes tables has shaken down cities, and was now on the eve of shaking the world. Yet so many say 'What of it?'"

"'Nearer is he than breathing, Nearer than hands and feet.'"

At the close of the day's exercises the newly-elected officers were installed with appropriate ceremonies.

The officers of the Oregon State Spiritualists' Association for the ensuing year are: Mrs. Sophia B. Seip, president; Mrs. V. Rowe, vice-president; Mr. Yankowitz, secretary; Mr. Trigg, treasurer; trustees: E. King, Ludwig Larsen, Miss J. Werner, F. Coulter, Mr. De Grote.—Portland Daily Oregonian.

The Scotch Sabbath.

An English artist, traveling professionally through Scotland, had occasion to remain over Sunday in a small town in the north. To while away the time he walked out a short way in the environs, where the picturesque ruin of a castle met his eye. He asked a countryman who was passing by to be so good as to tell him the name of the castle. The reply was somewhat startling. "It's no the day to be asking sic things!"

Another good story of Scottish observance of the Sabbath is told by a clergyman. "A minister of the kirk declared in public that at a country hotel he wished the window raised so he might get some fresh air, but the landlady would not allow it, saying, 'Ye can has no fresh air here on the Sawbeth.'"—Ex.

MORAL PHILOSOPHY OF THE NEW RELIGION.

Churches have arbitrarily established their faith and customs which society is constantly struggling to disregard and eliminate. They have created popular scorn and prejudice against people designated infidels, atheists, agnostics, free-thinkers, and made their adherents believe all such people are bad and will go to hell and be damned.

It has been affirmed from away back in the dark ages that atheism is of negative nature; it denies, but affirms nothing; it tears down, but builds nothing; and that the atheist has no religion, but is the enemy and opponent of all religions.

We affirm that atheism builds and affirms much, and has a great cause to promulgate, based on truth, reason, facts, science, knowledge; to save people from ignorance, superstition, religious bondage. It is a truth-seeker, and finder of the most important truths, such as the world is in most need of.

We have a cause without an organic body, and many true teachers, reformers, philanthropists, doing much to benefit humanity; and not so bad as theologians have painted them.

There is more controversy on the subject of religion than any other, and all classes are free to define and explain it as they want it. I can show by fair argument that we are guided by pure motives, moral principles, and have a true religion which we approve and practice.

We are not ready nor willing to discard religion, nor drop it from our vocabulary because it has been abused and perverted. We are going to transform it, and evolve out of it something pure and beautiful; sift and cleanse it from impurities and rubbish of past ages; retain it and give it to the world pure and unadulterated.

It directs us to the importance of a righteous life, outlining plans of right living, which, in every essential point and attribute mean religion. It leads the van of freedom in religious thought in agreement with science, nature, reason.

Our religion is subservient to intelligent will, giving beautiful conceptions of truth for personal advancement on questions pertaining to human welfare, spreading its influence through many channels, impressing minds with thoughts and activities that develop them to greater, nobler powers and achievements. It has something to do with every province and department of life as a teacher, a revelator, a savior to save from error, ignorance, superstition. As an advocator, as a reformatory impulse, as a power for solace, as a moral incentive, it stands incomparable in its benefits to mankind.

We put a meaning upon the word religion while violating no principle of lexicography. It is good usage to apply the word to the experiences and lessons of life that teach truth and knowledge as moral incentives; that appeal to the highest sentiments, sweetest emotions, tenderest sympathies; that inspire its disciples with love for humanity, regard for truth, desires for higher life in which all the faculties may find expression and employment.

Our religion lays the foundation for the hope and trust of mankind upon the bedrock of knowledge instead of the fleeting quicksands of faith. It makes of each individual a student instead of a devotee. There is no being for whom it demands prostration or sacrifice; and no knee is bent in superstitious reverence. It needs no doctrinal dogmas nor books of holy writ to quarrel about; no priestly anathemas to fear. Its broadest field of usefulness and labor is in the old religious world, to emancipate people born and educated in the most irrational absurdities and errors.

It gives us a religion pure and simple, free and rational, beneficent and spiritual; it appeals to all to live up to right principles, purity of purpose; it gives us a high and holy hope, a reasonable promise. In this realm the soaring soul is attracted by the transcendent beauty of spiritual ideals in purity of thought and life, appealing to the intellect and affections.

Man is a religious being by the development of his moral faculties; a progressive, instead of a fallen, being, with the birthright of a spirit life. His destiny is the infinite development of his spiritual nature; accomplished by the acquisition of knowledge, not by devotion; by the study and application of the laws of being, not by religious forms and faith in things unseen, unknown.

We cannot accept authority for truth, and will not be confined in the limiting trammels of creedal statements. We have stepped clear of the old religious harness and cast off the shackles that bound us to religious faith; our freedom in progressive thought overleaps sacred boundaries that warp the mind and enslave the soul.

Grand, earnest souls by the truth made free,
No longer in blindness bow;
The good time coming, the yet to be,
Has sprung with the good time now.

The world has respect for persons who hold the courage of their convictions, who stand face to face with facts and give expression to what they know. Facts without intelligent expression do not amount to much, and we will not be wiser and better for knowledge of which we make no practical application.

The New Religion is not based on the faith, example and precepts of any man or woman. It is based on demonstrable facts, practical knowledge, innate principles and common sense. It is the unfolding principle of life, a germ within every human being, springing spontaneously into life and action, by which we progress continually to higher planes. It is vital with growth, commensurate with the needs of humanity. It is the love and practice of whatsoever is right, just, true, good, according to the capacity, ability and knowledge of the individual.

What have I done to make the world better? must be answered; and the answers come with both joys and regrets. We can make our own religion by applying the laws of moral conduct in pursuit of the right course of life and action to avoid and resist whatsoever we know is wrong, the effects of which produce trouble, suffering, discord, turmoil. A life of moral principle yields fair compensation for human ills, toils, trials, and is the life worth living.

Under the New Religion every soul is compelled to take upon itself the responsibility of personal being. There is not a direction of importance where its influence is not exerted. It prepares us for a broader grasp of the important themes that relate to mortal life and that shall make grand the future life; teaching by lessons of nature, intuition, inspiration, experience, the importance of right living here as the proper preparation for a good life hereafter.

A WONDERFUL THING!

The Fact that Spirits Can Return and Talk with Mortals.

The present is probably the most wonderful age this world has ever seen. We are aware that in a certain sense everything about us is wonderful, and as a certain philosopher has said, "The history of a pebble is the history of a world." Of course we are aware that this old planet is the subject of law now as it always has been, but some laws and things seem to be much more forcibly emphasized to-day than ever before.

I shall never forget that midnight when my wife and I were awakened from our sleep and convinced of a future existence by those friendly, though invisible, blessed souls who laid us under a never-to-be-forgotten obligation.

When a connection or rapport had been established between the two conditions — material and spiritual — many who had been known in former years renewed their acquaintance with us. One, an old, familiar friend of my father, who had departed this life when I was a little boy, came, and in his old style and manner conversed with me.

"Why, Tom," he said, "isn't this the most wonderful thing you ever heard of? You attended my funeral. You saw the men put me in the ground, and everyone thought, 'That is the last of Charlie Sheppard,' and here I am to-night, after fifty years of silence, talking to you through your own wife. I never heard of anything like it in my day."

Mr. Sheppard had died while the medium, my wife, was a baby, and they had never seen each other. Truly a wonderful thing, for he had proved his identity to me before he uttered the above words.

Now, is there not something almost equally wonderful in the fact that religious churches do not avail themselves of this wonderful fact to establish truth, unity and love in a skeptical world?

No amount of preaching or argumentation will convince the merely intellectual man that there is indeed a continued existence after the death and decomposition of the material body. Such men and women demand absolute demonstration of the great fact, and that alone will prove the church attractive to the unbeliever, the careless and the scoffer at immortality.

Are the so-called "Churches of Christ" blind to their best interests? Has religion and the love of God been utterly blotted out by pride and superciliousness? Has the love of God departed and the love of self taken its place? Has commercialism and the love of display displaced that sincerity which rendered the church a power in the world in the days of our fathers? THOS. HARDING.

BROWN'S GHOST.

Curious Experience of a Miner—Thinks Ghost Plays Tricks—Believes Brown's Spirit is Trying to Prevent Discovery of Rich Mine—Other Miners Will Join in Fresh Search.

SAN BERNARDINO, Sept. 12.—Henry Pearson, an old-time prospector, has a mystery. Monday night while camped ten miles from Gold Mountain, every blanket in his camp was removed, even a canvas which covered him. His canteen was carried some distance and carefully hung on the limb of a small tree, and when he recovered the only blanket so far found, he came upon it six miles from camp, spread out over a sage brush as though placed there for airing.

"I never heard a sound all night," says Pearson. "When I rubbed my eyes open at daybreak, I hadn't a strip of canvas or blanket over me. My canteen, full of water, was hanging some ways off on a tree, and never a blanket in sight. But that isn't all. My horses were staked half a mile away from where I had staked them the night before. The stakes were not driven into the ground, but knotted about a big rock. No one but a human spirit could tie knots like were in that rope. Never found a sign of a footprint showing any other person had been about the camp."

Pearson has several grewsome theories. One connects the mysterious doings with the death of a prospector named Brown, who perished near the spot a number of years ago. Brown went in search of a rich mine with another man. They became involved in a dispute, and separated, Brown declaring that no one would ever find that mine but him.

"I think Brown came back and carried away my things, so as to keep me from finding the lead," said Pearson in awe. "I think he must have tried to carry me away in my sleep, for surely I lay several feet in the morning from the spot where I lay down the night before." Pearson is very emphatic, and seems to believe in the pranks of Brown's ghost.

This theory is shared by a number of old prospectors, and they propose to leave within a few days for the locality, determined to locate the rich ledge, which they believe Brown's ghost is guarding. They take his antics with Pearson as evidence that the latter must have been within a very short distance of the ledge.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Daily Times.

EYESIGHT RESTORED

Eyeglasses May Be Abandoned.

A Wonderful Discovery That Corrects Afflictions of the Eye Without Cutting or Drugging.

Eyeglasses May Be Abandoned.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for the relief of most forms of disease, as a new method—the Actina treatment—has been discovered which eliminates the necessity of former torturous methods. There is no risk or necessity of experimenting, as many people report having been cured of failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye after being pronounced incurable, through this grand discovery.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother, of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 73 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Mrs. T. F. Moyle, Waterford, Wis., writes:—"About two years ago I was taken with iritis in both eyes and nearly went blind and it was thought an operation would be necessary. I sent for an Actina last April and it has taken all the inflamation out and my eyes are now well.

Hundreds of other testimonials will be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept 842, 811 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A Very Suggestive Work Which Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What is unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1.00.

Good Books OF ELIZABETH TOWNE.

JUST HOW TO CONCENTRATE.

This book tells how to use the wonderful forces of being to promote a happy, harmonious and healthy life. It is practical, helpful. Tells how to develop and practice concentration, train the emotions, improve the memory and direct all powers for the betterment of conditions. The very thing for those who feel tied to a life of barren drudgery. Contains the key to better conditions of mind, body and environment. Bound in dove color and green heavy paper; 31 pages. Price, 25 cents.

HAPPINESS AND MARRIAGE.

If you are looking for cut and dried advice on marriage and harmony in the home you won't find it in this book. Most books on marriage are about as much alive as salt codfish. This book isn't that kind. "Happiness and Marriage" is alive, and deals with life. It treats of the every-day problems that confront all married people, and tells how to solve them successfully. It is not a book of theory, but of practice—based on practical experience. Altogether this is one of the most original and striking books the author has yet produced. "Happiness and Marriage" is well printed on heavy laid paper, and contains a portrait of the author. Paper covers, 80 pages. Price, 50 cents.

JUST HOW TO WAKE THE SOLAR PLEXUS.

This unique booklet teaches that the Solar Plexus is a Center or Storehouse of Energy and Power. When this center is normally active it Radiates Life, Health and Strength to the whole body, as the sun radiates warmth and life to the vast system of worlds of which it is the center. The Solar Plexus may be called the Sun Center of the Human Body. The Hindoos of India say that the soul functions through this center The book gives deep breathing exercises of great value, and teaches how to awaken the Solar Plexus to fuller life and mortal activity. Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the most famous woman author in America, says of this book: "It contains a fortune in value if you practice the simple exercises given. It is complete in itself, and is not an introduction to, or advertisement of a larger work. It contains in itself the full teachings of the author upon the subject of the Solar Plexus. Price, 25 cents.

JUST HOW TO COOK MEALS WITHOUT MEAT.

The Multum in parvo of cook books up to date. If you want to know how to live without using animal food this book will help you. It is the result of the author's own actual experience in adopting a vegetarian diet. Space is devoted to the consideration of Soups, Salads and Deserts and several practical menus are given. A booklet for every-day people. It does not tell how to cook elaborate course dinners, but for every-day living it is just the thing. You need the book whether you are a vegetarian or not. Price, 25 cents.

"The Light of Egypt." Volume 1 and 2. An occult library in itself, a text-book of esoteric knowledge, as taught by the Adepts of Hermetic Philosophy. Price $3 per volume.

WEST SIDE SPIRITUALISTS WHO ARE WILLING TO TAKE PART IN ORGANIZING A SOCIETY IN THE DISTRICT OF HUMBOLDT PARK, WILL PLEASE SEND THEIR NAMES AND ADDRESSES TO E. J. CARE OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, 40 Loomis Street.

E. W. Sprague and wife are now at their home in the city of Detroit, Mich., where they expect to remain in the missionary, and other fields of work for the grand cause of Spiritualism. Mr. Sprague's services may be secured for Sunday or week-day meetings, weddings and funerals, anywhere in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, or Canada, in places not too far away from Detroit. Mrs. Sprague will also respond to calls for meetings and seances. They are both well known platform test mediums. Individuals or societies desiring their services can address them at 1082 Trumbull Ave., Detroit, Mich.

George W. Kates and wife can be addressed at 531 N. Carey St., Baltimore, Md., until further notice. They have been called to the local church of Baltimore as pastors for the present season. Their home address at Cheyney, Pa., will continue, from whence all mail will be forwarded to them, if sent there.

Nellie Cline writes of the good work done by Will J. Erwood at Larned, Kansas: "Will J. Erwood, the inspirational speaker of La Porte Ind., delivered a series of lestures in our town on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of this week. Owing to the inclement weather, but a small crowd greeted him on Monday evening, but decided interest was manifested, the audience carried away with such a pleasing impression of their evening's speaker, that the hall was crowded on both nights following. Mr. Erwood is possessed of such a strong, clean, yet charming personality that his hearers are won to a just consideration of his view of the question before they are aware of their attitude, and not only was good seed sown, but excellent results were obtained by his brief stay in our midst. Psychic tests were given each evening, which proved highly satisfactory, and taking the lectures as a whole, we will say that the principles and foundation stones of Spiritualism were brought before the citizens of Larned in a broader and much more advanced light than it had ever been our privilege to hear before.

E. D. Long, M. D., writes from Seffner, Hillsboro Co., Fla.: "I have been a Spiritualist for upwards of 40 years. I was a subscriber for the Banner of Light for many years, and for the Religio Philosophical Journal until it expired, and have been a subscriber for The Progressive Thinker almost from its birth, and expect to continue to be as long as I am on earth. I have resided here since he spring of 1882, and am about the only Spiritualist in this vicinity. I would be greatly pleased to have some Spiritualists come here and settle in this vicinity, and become friends and neighbors. Seffner is my postoffice, but I reside near Brandon. Brandon is a station on the Sea Board R. R., 12 miles from Tampa. I will answer any and all questions from Brother Spiritualists respecting South Florida, or this vicinity, its soil, climate, etc."

Rolla Stubbs writes from Long Lake, Minn.:: "Miss Harlow of Columbus, Ohio, spoke for our society for the third time on the 14th inst The Temple was well filled. She held her audience spellbound for one hour and thirty minutes. She excelled herself on this occasion. She speaks for the State Society through this month. She is making many converts to the knowledge and truth of Spiritualism Her lectures are well received wherever she goes.

Charles A. Thompson writes: "On Sunday, September 15, the following persons went out to Bock's Hall, 115th st., and Michigan ave. Dr. A. Caird, Mrs Dr. Caird, Mrs J. S. Adams, Mr. andMrs. Schafenburger, and C. A. Thompson, assisted in the meeting, which is held there every other Sunday. The musical talent was furnished by Mr. Wm. Richard and Son, which was a credit to any society. At the close of the meeting all the visiting mediums and their friends were entertained by the ladies of the society, and had a very social time, including coffee and cake, which brought the evening to a close. This is a very earnest society and worthy of any honest medium's help. The next meeting will be Sunday, September 29th, at 8 p. m."

Roy Hale writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "In 1885, Samuel Bowles, through the mediumship of Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, gave a series of interviews with spirits from his side of life; among those interviews was one with John Wilkes Booth, and Booth mentioned how freely had the noble Lincoln forgiven him, and helped him to rise to a higher and brighter conception of life. I am inclined to believe as Brother Binney of California, that the medium got the impression of Mr. Hubbell's thought that George might possibly be Booth"

Mrs. Flora H. Millspaugh, the popular and efficient Secretary of the Chesterfield Camp, writes: "Our camp meeting was better this year than heretofore in a financial way. All expenses are paid and three or four hundred dollars surplus, to pay on the indebtedness."

Rev. G. C. Love of Portland, Oregon is now in Chicago, and would like an engagement either in the city or between Chicago and Washington, D. C., as he is on his way to the N. S. A. Convention. Mr. Love is one of our ablest lecturers. Address him at No. 4707 Calumet ave., Chicago, Ill.

In Birmingham, Ala., the license for clairvoyants cost $100 per year.

The writer of the following, Mrs. John Croney, writes from 7319 Madisan avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, desiring the best wishes of the readers:

Cleveland, Sept. 11, 1907.—Dear Editor—I want to ask a great favor of all readers of The Progressive Think. For ten years I have been wanting to go into business. I know the dear spirit friends will help me. I am going to have a candy store and serve a light lunch. I have a dear little boy who passed away, and his name was James, so I am going to call my place the James Light Luncheon, and I know my darling will help me.

Belle Bush writes: "The beautiful address of Mrs. Longley, as reported in your paper, gave me so much pleasure that I feel to express my heart's sympathy for the altruistic sentiments it contained, and my thanks to her control."

Carrie E. S Twing writes from Westfield, N. Y.: "I lately returned from my Sunday's work at a remote place in Pennsylvania, away from any railroad at least 10 miles, right in the heart of a great dairy country, the nearest town being Townsville, Pa. Many of the builders of this church, the "Temple of Reason," have passed over, but the remaining portion have meetings when they can get a speaker. I could but note the large audience. I think there were at least 30 of the finest looking young people I have seen together in many a day, and a young choir, giving us with great expression, some of Longley's most beautiful songs. I am much better physically. I start this morning for Syracuse, N. Y., to fill an engagement as speaker for Woman's Day at our State Fair. I feel greatly honored to have been chosen for the work."

H. E. Pomeroy writes; Professor Dawbarn's article on Christian Science and the Power of Negative Suggestion, was the best elucidation of Mrs. Eddy's cult I have seen. Indeed it makes her metaphysical jargon lucid."

S. A. Huntington of Malden, Mass., writes of the Progressive Spiritual Society: "One of greater Boston's finest mediums, Mrs. Annie R. Chapman, Brighton, occupied our platform on Sunday evening, September 15. She chose for her theme, "Our Beautiful Philosophy, Spiritualism," giving a fine address, showing that "all those beautiful conditions that make for right come from Spiritualism. After the conclusion of the lecture, giving many fine messages. Mr. Fred B. Niles of Marlboro, Mass, will be the speaker on the 22nd, and Mrs. Alice W. Whall of Everett, Mass., on the 29th. Circles every Thursday evening and 11:00 a. m., and 3:30 p. m., Sunday."

Mrs. E. H. Thompson writes: "The Fraternal Daughters held their Semi-Monthly Social, at the home of Sister J. S. Adams, 1007 Harrison street, Wednesday, September 18. The following mediums took part: Mrs. Dr. Caird, Mrs Helyett, Miner, Cowan, Sexsmith, Knapp, and Brother Travis and Sister J. S. Adams. The room was beautifully decorated with Japanese designs. An excellent supper served, to the great satisfaction of all present. The attendance was large. Our next meeting will be held at Atlas Hall, Ogden avenue and Robey street, at 2 p. m. Afternoon and evening, October 2, a grand opening for the coming season. It is hoped that all the Daughters and their friends will be present. After a short service there will be dancing."

Oscar A. Edgerly's engagements as arranged for the season of 1907-1908, are as follows: Last two Sundays, September, at Springfield, Mass.; the months of October, November and December, with the First Spiritualist Church, Columbus, Ohio; January, 1908, with the Ladies' Spiritual Temple Fund Society, Cleveland, Ohio; February and March with the First Association of Spiritualists, Washington, D. C.; April and May with the Spiritual Fraternity, Ayer's Temple, Boston, Mass.; June still open for engagements; the first two Sundays of July with the Lake Brady Camp Meeting Association, Lake Brady, O.; the last two Sundays of July are still open for engagements. During the three weeks of August, he will act as Chairman of Grand Ledge Camp Meeting, Grand Ledge, Mich. From August 8 to 14, inclusive, he is engaged at Chesterfield Camp, Ind. Mr. Edgerly is also engaged for the full term of the Lake Helen, Florida, camp, for season of 1909.

Fay E. Coffman writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "I wish to announce to the friends that my mother, Mrs. Amanda Coffman of Grand Rapids, Mich., went to Detroit to officiate at the funeral of the late Frank Gates, and was taken suddenly ill, not being able to perform her duties there. She was given the best medical attendance and tenderly cared for by friends, but after four days with little improvement was brought home. She is still confined to the bed, but I am happy to say to her friends, that she is gaining all the time, and will soon be out of danger. We desire that all her friends send her health thoughts that she may have a speedy recovery."

Emma A. Willis writes: "The first regular meeting of the Band of Harmony will be held in room 309 Masonic Temple, on Thursday, September 26. Everybody and their friends are invited in order to give our president, Mrs. Richmond, a hearty welcome home.

TAKE NOTICE.— Correspondents are requested when writing for this paper to use either a typewriter or a pen, with black ink. Write on only one side of the paper, and in a plain, legible hand, and thus avoid the necessity of preparing your copy for the printer. Please bear this in mind.

Professor Lockwood lectured last Sunday for the Unity Society of Milwaukee, Wis. On the 29th he will lecture at Conneaut, Ohio.

A. Merkel writes: "Those who have been attending the excellent meetings conducted by Mrs. Schumacher at Van Buren Opera House, corner Madison street and California avenue, will be gratified to learn that on Sunday evening, Sept. 29, Thomas Seeley Warner will lecture; the subject "Spiritualism: Its relation to the Christ Life, showing the complete harmony between the two worlds." Following the lecture Mrs. Schumacher will give flower readings.

Rev. Nellie S. Baade writes from Detroit, Mich.: "I have just completed a series of lectures in this city upon Spiritualism and kindred subjects, and am now prepared to make engagements with other societies outside of Detroit for fall and winter work. I will also officiate at funerals, perform marriage ceremonies, arrange for camp work for the ensuing year, and do whatever is expected of a speaker and messagebearer combined. I also give readings daily, and at all times take subscriptions for The Progressive Thinker, according to our ideas the best Spiritualist paper published in the United States, if not in the whole world. I am now arranging my dates, and those who come first will be served first. Address me at No. 411 Vermont avenue, Detroit, Mich.

Mrs. M. L. S. Chase, of West Pullman, reports that the meeting at Bock's Hall last Sunday evening was largely attended. The music by Professor Bichart and three sons (three violins and piano) was extra fine. There were several people on the platform: Mr. Adams and wife, Mr. Shafersberg and wife, Mr. Thompson and wife, Mrs. Longstaff and Dr. Caird and wife, all of the city. Mrs. Adams presided. Mrs. Shafersberg gave a talk, her husband also—he in German language, both under control. Dr. Caird explained the Fraternal Order. The others gave tests. There will be another meeting September 29, Sunday evening. The interest seems to be growing.

George B. Warne and wife returned from his trip into Wisconsin in time to deliver his promised lecture to the Church of Progressive Spiritualists (colored), Sunday, September 22. The regular hall was not in condition for use, and the meeting was held in the large front parlor, at 3329 Vernon avenue, the home of the colored medium, Mrs. Lyons. The lecture was one of Mr. Warne's clear, logical and concise talks to the colored brothers and sisters, and was listened to with marked attention and occasional oral sanction of points well put. He has promised them another talk on the second Sunday in November. They will be in their larger hall then, in fact will be next Sunday. This church now has 106 members, and seldom fails to enlist one or more each Sunday. Dr. Wilkins read one of his original poems of recent date, as yet unpublished, and Mrs. Nicholson, of California, made some remarks that were appreciated, as did two colored strangers, attendants at the Colored Methodist Conference, in session in the city at the time. Also Mrs. Lyons and Mrs. Campbell, both noted colored mediums of the city, spoke briefly.

Correspondent says: "The write up of Mrs. Cooley's farewell reception has not been forgotten—only deferred for this week, and will be given next."

The Madison Camp, Maine.

The Madison Camp Association of Spiritualists closed its 28th annual camp session Sunday, September 15, holding from the 6th to the 15th inclusive. The weather was cold and rainy during the week, but each Sunday being warm and bright brought out large crowds of people. The interest and harmony was very marked throughout the entire meeting, giving the best psychic influence possible. A proof of deeper interest than ever before in this grand truth was made manifest by enrolling to its membership list more new names than usual at one meeting. The business meeting was held on Wednesday, September 11, immediately after the afternoon meeting closed, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Rev. F. A. Wiggin, Brookline, Mass.; vice-president, Mr. R. S. McKenney, Madison, Maine; secretary, Mrs. Lona E. Strickland, Madison, Maine; treasurer, Mrs. Delia C. Brown, Carratunk, Maine. Board of Directors: Mr. Robert Hayden, Athens, Maine; Miss Olive Hayden, Madison, Maine; Mrs. Lina Moore, McKenney, Madison, Maine; Mrs. Eva Spear, Madison, Maine; Mrs. A. E. Goodrich, Showhegan, Maine. Financial Committee: Mrs. Abby F. Webster, Carratunk, Maine; Mrs. E. W. Allen, Norridgewock, Maine; Mrs. C. A. Wheeler, Phillips, Maine. It was voted to send Mrs. Aby F. Webster, Carratunk, Maine, as delegate to the N. S. A. Mrs. E. P. Moore and Miss Olive Hayden, both of Madison, as delegates to the convention of the State Association. All business transactions were satisfactorily arranged, then the meeting adjourned. Each year the annual meeting opens at Lakewood, Maine, on the first Friday in September, for ten days.

A more pleasant ground cannot be found, and every convenience is to be obtained in the way of hotel and cottage accommodations, with the electric cars running hourly from Showhegan and Madison. This body of Spiritualists is composed of very enthusiastic workers, which make its success greater each year. The best talent is always secured for the meetings.

VERY PERTINENT REMARKS.

Concerning the Appointing of Proxy Delegates to the N. S. A. Convention.

Your correspondent having attended the last two sessions of the N. S. A. conventions, and on both of these occasions served on the committee on credentials, would call the attention of the N. S. A. and its subordinate societies to Sec. 3, Art. 8, of by-laws of the N. S. A., on page 18, which reads as follows:

"No delegate shall represent more than one society upon the floor of the convention, nor have power to cast more than one vote upon any question. Sealed instructions must be sent by chartered societies in good standing to the committee on credentials, directing that committee to appoint competent persons to represent said societies by placing in their hands the instructions forwarded to the committee. Provided, however, that no proxies shall be granted to any society that has not held meetings during the year."

Mr. Editor, if you could serve on the committee on credentials for two consecutive years, and know how many delegates (some of them having been selected year after year) would make their appearance in the committee room claiming the right to appoint from two to twenty-five delegates by proxy, you would not wonder at this communication, but would write one yourself.

Under the section of the by-laws quoted, no delegate could have the appointment of a proxy.

One delegate came to your correspondent in the committee room, at the last convention, claiming the right to appoint eleven proxies, when I knew no such authority existed, and that delegate, when asked for the written instructions from the various societies mentioned, answered: "I can write them in a few minutes." My answer was: "Don't you write any such instructions and put the names of the presidents and secretaries to them unless you can show their written authority to do so."

I certainly felt that the law should be adhered to, or repealed.

If local or State societies wish to be represented, let them comply with the law, and ask the committee on credentials by sealed instructions to make appointments for them. Your committee on credentials will then be able to dispense with all the contention of would-be appointees, and have more time to sit in convention work.

THE HOME CIRCLE.

And the Saving Power of Good Thought.

"Where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

This home circle is formed for mutual benefit and Spiritual co-operation, and the unfoldment of spiritual gifts, healing, soul growth, inspiration, clairvoyance, clairaudience, and all the other mediumistic gifts through which the experience of one may benefit another.

Beloved, the silent and wonderful work of our home circle has been a force for good; many have been benefited physically, not a few have been benefited mentally, all have been helped spiritually. A good many have learned that they possess certain psychic forces, which they are anxious to unfold, so that they may be the perfect instruments through which spirits from the unseen world may communicate with mortals here.

This circle has been the means of setting into motion thoughts that have come to mortals from time to time, for the purpose of leading them into paths of knowledge and happiness, had outward expression been given them.

Thoughts are some of those seemingly little things that we think don't amount to much, but their value is decided only by their use.

We all think, and just now the world is awakening to the power of thought, the effect of thought upon the human race, and this awakening has created another class known as New Thought, whose followers are doing much in awakening interest in the power of thought.

All thought is new to the individual receiving it, but when voiced, may appear quite old to its hearers.

The newness of thought is in its application—not in the thought itself; therefore you cannot do any more good or make yourself better by joining this new sect unless you set your thought in motion and cause it to work.

No better field can be found for the expression of thought than Spiritualism; it is a magnificent field, especially to those who are so vitally interested in the betterment of the human family.

One cannot become interested in the subject of Spiritualism without becoming cognizant of the power of thought, its use and abuse is made plain to them for the first time; they tor in their lives, they easily discern the effects of good and bad thought, not only upon themselves, but upon others.

Your every success in life depends upon your thought, your heaven, your all depends upon your thought. It is the Alpha and Omega of your existence.

Your thought can make your heaven on your hell, both here and hereafter.

We must be as quick to put into action our good thoughts as we are our bad ones. Our evil thoughts are like weeds—they must be plucked if others would see the beauty of our flowers, and this means work, hard work, to the majority, whose weeds have grown rank; but we cannot get away from it if we are really in earnest about the world's salvation. We must commence to save ourselves. Put that thought in motion that comes to you, if good, its actions will make you appear new; your mediumship will have greater power for good; you can by your thought heal yourself, make your heaven and assist in making of earth's children one great family, where wars and famines are unknown, but where all sing "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Los Angeles Spiritualists.

After leaving Santa Barbara, we come to Los Angeles, and Mrs. Noyes and self called on the mayor, and asked for a permit to give private readings, and he asked what phase. Mrs. Noyes replied, "Clairvoyant, Clairaudient, Impressional and Psychometry," and he granted it.

Mayor Harper said that the city officials did not want to place anything in the way of the Spiritualists, but he intended to drive out the fake and fraudulent mediums, proving the prophecy of The Progressive Thinker "if the Spiritualists do not, the police power will." The city of Los Angeles and country will not grant license to known fakes.

We have been very busy since coming here, One service at camp, two in Burbank Hall, two for San Pedro society, and fifteen at Caledonia Hall,

Los Angeles has some good lecturers, and fine message bearers. We are due in Houston, Texas, and will take part in the Texas State Association, which meets September 20, and then one week with the Houston Spiritual society, after that at Galveston, for the fall. Our address will be from September 20 to October 4, 2112 Chestnut St., Houston, Texas, then Spiritual Temple, Galveston, Texas.

WM. D. AND CORA B. NOYES.

The Chesterfield Declaration.

I wish to call the attention of all Spiritualists, and especially that of our mediums and healers, to the declaration of principles adopted by the Chesterfield Camp Association, legally known as the Indiana Association of Spiritualists, at its last convention, published in The Progressive Thinker No. 929. One of the important objects in the adopting of this declaration was to afford a more perfect and complete basis upon which all our mediums could stand in fighting unfriendly legislation and defending themselves in our courts, as well as making it positively appear in a declaration from an organized body of Spiritualists that certain beliefs or opinions that are sometimes charged against individuals as evidences of insanity are the accepted beliefs of the Spiritualists as a body.

I have no hesitancy in saying that any true spirit healer or medium belonging to the Chesterfield Camp Meeting Association, that might be arrested on account of the practice of their mediumship, standing on this declaration can be successfully defended, for they in doing so are simply carrying out the religion of Spiritualism as therein defined.

And if the State and National organizations would adopt in substance the same, it would soon put an end to unfriendly legislation and the prosecution of so many of our healers.

It will be noticed that therein the term "Psycho-Magnetic Healer" is used to distinguish those who treat under spirit influence from those who do not. DR. J. A. MARVIN.

BRACE UP AND HOPE.

One does not know—one cannot tell
What life means to us when we're well,
But when grim sickness takes a hold,
Then, whether young or whether old,
It soon is proven then than we
Are not as thankful as we might be,

Sometimes our life seems, oh, so drear,
So full of sorrow and of care,
And then we think of our future home,
And wonder if there's sorrow there.
Does trouble come, the same as here,
To friends we've lost and still hold dear,
Who in those spheres move, live and dwell—
Do they have sorrows—who can tell?

But life is short, and why should we Let this short stay on Earth be sad?
Why let dull trouble worry us?
Why let our hearts be aught but glad?

And why not think "it might be worse"—
Brace up and hope—'tis for the best,
For when our task on earth is done—
We'll find contentment and sweet rest.

A GOLDEN SHEAF.

To Our Friends: — October next will bring the 50th anniversary of our marriage, and nearly the 55th of our labor in the field of Spiritualism. In the first years we published a volume, "Blossoms of Our Spring," thinking that should the time come in the autumn of life, we would have a volume fitting the occasion of the closing years, of fruitage. A half century has almost gone by, and this 50th anniversary gives the occasion for the issuance of this volume, which we have entitled A GOLDEN SHEAF. It will be made up of selections from matter not before published, in prose and verse; selections of the best sentences and paragraphs scattered through our various books; a new spiritual song with music; illustrations of fac simile automatically written manuscripts; photogravures of our home, birthplace and brief autobiographical sketches

We propose to make the book in paper and binding as superior as the price, $1.00, will permit. Every copy will be numbered and contain our autographs.

The number of copies will be strictly limited to the number of subscribers, and the book will not be placed on sale after publication. As we have reached the conclusion to publish at a somewhat late date, if you favor the undertaking you will confer a favor by sending your name, by card or letter, at once (the price is not now wanted).

A list of names of subscribers will be published in the volume.

We thank you beforehand for your favor in inviting our book to your homes. HUDSON TUTTLE,

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Having been directed to carry on the work of Editor-at-Large in connection with the N. S. A., I am desirous of obtaining all press notices for or against Spiritualism, and reliable information with regard to attacks upon our movement that may be made by preachers. I respectfully request all Spiritualists to forward the same to me at their earliest convenience.

From Dream to Vision of Life

By Lilian Whiting, Author of "The World Beautiful," "The Spiritual Significance," "The Outlook Beautiful," etc.

This book finds its keynote in the question asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury—"The Life Beyond,—what it is? What is its bearing on these present working years?" To the discussion of this vital problem Miss Whiting brings the results of modern scientific research and that peculiar spiritual clairvoyance which has been remarked in "The Life Radiant" and some of her other books. It is written with a certain joyous vitality that communicates itself to the reader in a certain radiance and liberation of new energies. Price $1.00 net.

For sale at this office.

UNIVERSAL SPIRITUALISM

Spirit Communion in All Ages, Among All People—by W. J. Colville.

This work has two distinctive features: (1st) A resume of the Spiritual faith and practice of Egypt, India, Persia, Greece, Rome, China, Japan, and other ancient nations, not excepting Europe during Christian centuries. (2) A summary of recent experiences in America, Great Britain, Australia, France, Germany, Italy, and other modern lands, all tending to show the persistent continuity of spiritual revelation. Clairvoyance, Telepathy, and Psychic Phenomena in general is dealt with in separate chapters at the end of the volume, making it a highly useful textbook for all who are interested in the great question of human immortality. The Author says: "The libraries contain a large number of extremely valuable works dealing with every imaginable phase of Spiritualism and occultism, but I have searched in vain for a single portable volume, issued at a popular price, which gives a brief and lucid statement of the claims made in all ages and in all countries on behalf of the mighty truth of communion between inhabitaints of earth and dwellers disrobed of flesh in the one vast spiritual universe. The enormous and ever increasing interest in "Psychic" problems and the eager, constant demand for historic information coupled with a rational setting forth of intelligible spiritual philosophy, has led me to appear once again before the public with a book." Price $1.00.

Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage, in this book of 243 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

Missionary Effort On Osmon Island

Starting a New Religion, and What Came of It. By Hudson Tuttle.

[NOTE.—I sat down to write the answers to questions in the "Queries and Answers" column, and had completed the first answer, when an influence I had felt as of one standing in waiting grew clear and strong, and before I arose this narration was written, excepting the last two pages. I had never recognized the presence of this spirit before, and his style and methods of thought, even in such contrast to those who had written on subjects covering the same field, was a delightful revelation to me of their independent personality.]

I have had my experience with savages, and when returned missionaries talk of spreading the gospel, and converting the heathen, all I have to say is, let them spread, it is of no interest to me. How did it happen? It is a long story told in the shortest way. Interesting, maybe, full of swift action and a dash of common sense. I found myself on the other side of the globe and in about the worst situation imaginable. I had engaged to the publisher of a magazine to go out collecting whatever might be of interest to its readers. I had a camera to take views, and a phonograph, with special instructions to bring home records of the tongues spoken by the South Sea Islanders.

In pursuance of this design I took passage on a tramp ship that was going on a trading cruise to the Pacific, the owner intending to exchange whiskey, shoddy cloth and trinkets for valuable tropic products.

With the first part of this venture it is not my purpose to deal. The cruise, after leaving the Sandwich Islands for the island world of the Pacific seas, was Yankee peddling, anchored off the usual trading places. In this bargaining, I assure the reader that the white man took up his burden of fleecing the confiding and unsophisticated natives.

The voyage had been commercially successful. I had acquired a cabinet of records and folios of views. These were mostly snap-shots, for all the heads, looking glasses and red cloth that could be held up to the view of the eager savages would not persuade them to have the evil eye of the camera turned on them.

The Captain was talking of homegoing. After touching at a few more points he would have a cargo satisfactory to the most avaricious, and once safe in port he would be under no necessity of again taking the wild luck of the sea. We were bowling along over the smooth rollers with the shore of an island on our lee of glittering whiteness, the long swells beating against it in lines of foam. We drove along, hoping to find an inlet such as most of these islands have. I brought my camera on deck to take the splendid view, and also my phonograph to have it ready should occasion require. The afternoon was perfect, with the sun shining from a sky of softened haze, and rhythmic beating of the waves on the bow. It was a delight to live and breathe the wine-like air. It did not seem real—like a dream, as though coasting along the edge of an unknown world.

From this dream we were awakened by the call of the watchman, responded to by the voice of the Captain calling the men to the rigging. One glance showed the danger. On the side of the open sea were whirling masses of clouds of inky blackness, beneath which the sea stood up in a wall of foam. The sails were scarcely lowered and not a reef taken, nor the prow turned to the coming billows, before an avalanche broke over the deck with a clean sweep from stem to stern. As the ship careened she struck on an outlying reef and the masts as one went by the board. All the men in the rigging were swept into the foaming waves. I had caught hold of a stanchion, holding on with both arms, but the next wave hurled me into the sea, or rather into the tangle of ropes and sails. I clutched the hoops securing the main sheet to the mast and held on until the wreckage broke loose and drifted out of the surf of the reef into comparative stiller waters toward the yet more dangerous shore. Nothing appeared ahead of me but to be beaten to death when that shore was reached. The raft approached the foaming wall, with a swift glide was drawn forward, mounted the crest and launched far up the sands, yet not so far that the returning tide lost its hold. The raft was drawn back, submerged, twisted and tumbled about. Again it crept up to the wall and was driven onward. This time the mast to which I clung, instead of going endwise, went sidewise, and this brought me to the farthest point reached. I sprang with all my might from the firm footing it gave and scrambled beyond the under tow. I suppose the thing to do on such occasions is to kneel in prayer. I did not, however, perform this conventional duty, yet the delightful sense of deliverance I experienced might have been a kind of prayer, quite selfish, for I thought only of myself and my miraculous deliverance.

It was a sorry sight, the wreck-strewn shore, and our good ship breaking to pieces on the jagged reef. The storm had passed and the waters flashed and sparkled. The contrast was so great I could not realize that in a brief moment I had been stripped of everything and cast on an unknown shore. As I gazed I saw a dark object which I made out to be a man clinging to a spar. When it came, I met it, caught the man and dragged him ashore. He proved to be the Captain, more dead than alive, and not until I had rolled him on the sands and pulled his arms till I had to pause from exhaustion was I gratified to see him gasp for breath. When I saw that he was in a fair way of recovery I turned, hoping to find someone else haply drifting shoreward. The water had receded, leaving a wide band of jetsam that so short a time before had been our home. There were many of our ship's company in the drift—drenched and battered they lay, as the last touch of the waves left them. Poor fellows, I said, no home-going for you; and yet their fate may be less miserable than mine.

As I continued my search I came to the tangled sails and spars which had brought me to safety, and in the sagging center of the main sheet lay the box containing my phonograph. I seized it with inexplicable joy. In our destitution had it been a box of food this would have been sensible; but of all impractical, useless things, this phonograph would seem to be the most useless. Yet, as the end proved, I must have by a sort of prescience foreshadowed how priceless it would become.

"It is up to us," said the Captain, "We are on an unknown island, far out of the track of ships, and God only knows what's to become of us."

"Well," I replied, sort of cheered up by his gloominess, "we can live as Crusoe did, and some way in good time will open."

"Oh, to think of it," said he, "with full cargo, just going home successful; with enough to keep me and mine in comfort for the rest of our days! I pledged my wife this should be my last voyage, and it will be."

The Captain was a little shattered by stress of wind and water, and broke down into a cry that did him good, and after a few minutes he brushed up and was himself again. The sun was low and the tropic night would soon drop its swift-descending curtain. I proposed that we go to a little elevation from which we might get an outlook and determine whether the island had inhabitants or not. This exertion was, however, saved to us, for there arose shoutings in the forest, and full score of savages came into view. Their only garment was a matting of grass wound around their loins. Their dark skins gleamed with bronze-like polish. Superb animals were they, as ready to kill for amusement as the tiger. After silence which seemed to come from their astonishment, they gave a great shout, and whanged their spears on their shields. It made one's blood chill to hear the horrible sounds. Then with the leveled spears they charged across the open space to where the dead lay and with demoniac cries seized them and dragged them farther from the tide-line. When they came to us and saw that we were alive, they shouted like school children, gathering around, brandishing their spears. The head man advanced and began a lingo quite meaningless to me. I replied in good American, which was ditto to him. There we were, liable to be speared before I could make the natives understand that we were under the protection of the United States flag. The yells were getting louder every moment, and the spears thrust a little nearer, when to our great relief a new idea seemed to strike the chief. He spoke to his followers, and their spears went straight up, the shouting ceased. We were taken by the arms on either side and led up the path to the village. There we were received by a crowd of women and children eager to get a sight of us.

It appeared that they were prepared for such catches, for they had a sort of cage made of bamboo poles locked together, and into this we were pushed, the door fastened, and three big fellows placed on guard. This cage was on one side of an open space around which the thatched huts were arranged. These were more like the lairs of wild animals than human habitations. A few poles planted in a circle, brought together at the top and covered with palm leaves. These huts were not sought unless there was rain, for the constancy of temperature and softness of the air made the shade more inviting. The people lived out of doors as animals of the wild.

Our queer plight did not prevent the approach of thirst and hunger, and there was small show of our being thought of by our captors. In this we were mistaken, for at dusk two baskets were brought containing cocoanuts, fish baked whole, wrapped in leaves, fruits we had never seen before, and a gourd filled with water. The menu was entirely new to us and was seasoned by the excellent condiment, hunger.

Scarcely had we finished when a great outcry arose from the path leading to the shore, and immediately heaps of brushwood piled in the open space were lighted and in flames. There came out of the shadows of the ghostly palms lines of savages bearing burdens which, when they came into the light, were recognized as the bodies of our dead companions. To our horror they at once commenced preparation for a feast. The fires flamed high and the terrible orgies were under way without delay.

The Captain was a strong man, but he was unstrung by the spectacle, and pale to the lips with fear.

"It's all up with us," he moaned. "We thought they fed us well because they were friendly, whereas they are fattening us like pigs! They do not want us now, for they are well provided for, but in a few days we'll be speared like rats and served up on plaintain leaves."

As I said before, the Captain's weakness cheered me, driving me to the other extreme. I said with assurance, "We will will break out of here to-night, lay hold of one of the natives' canoes and make for sea."

"No, we will not," he replied positively. "I starved once in an open boat seven days before I was picked up, and I'll not start out with the certainty of this being repeated. I'll stay and have a quick death of it."

"To be eaten like a pig by these ruffians! Well, if we are, no one will ever know. The secret will be held till the judgment day."

The judgment day! That's what is puzzling me," responded the Captain gloomily. "It is horrible to be spitted and eaten by these pirates, but to a Christian there is a greater horror—the coming resurrection. I'd like to know where I'll get my body if it is distributed among these cannibals! Whose body will it be, mine or theirs? If theirs, then it is plain I shall have none!"

"Oh, well, Captain," I replied, cheeringly, "all things are possible with God, and he will solve the mystery in his own good time."

"He may, and as you say, all things may be possible with him, but I do not believe it possible even for him to give me a body which has been divided between a dozen cannibals."

I never lay claim to being adept in theology. It is a subject so full of dust that the moment it is touched the eyes are so filled you can't see anything clearly. It is as intricate as a Chinese puzzle, and the cheering part of it is, to its believers, that whatever labyrinth it involves them in there is always a hole to let them out. The perplexities of the captive vanish because no one knows what God can do or what he cannot do. His mystery is a hole big enough to let through the whole theological army.

The feast ended in a dance representing war by fierce personal conflict. Spears were brandished in mock rage, and so wrought up were the antagonists that the spear thrusts would have inflicted wounds had not the shields received them. In the heat of the mimic battle there was a call, and silence instantly fell on the dancers. Our astonishment knew no bounds when a white man stepped from the shadows into the light. He evidently had influence over the savages. He spoke their language, and his tones were upbraiding. The chiefs were apologetic. He questioned and the chief pointed to us. Yes, there were those yet alive. They came to our cage. "I am glad to find you alive," he said, as though that was the chief consideration. "I heard the shouting when coming from the other side of the island and knew there was backsliding among my converts."

He was a man of medium height, strong, vigorous, with the narrow, high head of the enthusiast and zealot.

"Your converts!" I exclaimed.

"Yes, I call them converts, for they have an interest in my sermons about the atoning blood of the Lord Jesus and the Christian creed. It grieves me that they have this way of falling back to their old habits, and, when chance offers, practicing the rites of their heathen belief. Cannibalism, the most terrible of these rites, in some mysterious way seems most closely connected with their ideas of worship."

"Then you are a missionary on this God-forsaken coast?"

"By God's grace I am," he replied with unction. "By his grace I have brought many into the fold of the church."

His name, he told us, was Coswell, Rev. Coswell, with D. D. attached, granted by his mater theological college for his success in mission work in the South seas. He was ardent, hopeful, and backed by faith unquestioning.

"You'll have to convert them again," said the Captain irreverently. "Please get 'em converted before they get hungry, for I fear there will be no resurrection for me."

"Oh, you need have no fear. I can control them."

"That looks to me easy said. I shall fear until we are out of this fattening pen."

"I will have you out and you can go home with me, where you will be in no danger. These people get a little wild at times, but they are susceptible as children and obey me as their great father."

The head man was standing by and a lengthy argument ensued. There was misunderstanding and blank refusal to our going. The chief became angry and his wrath spread like contagion. He smote his shield and all his men smote theirs, and began to fantastically caper around, thrusting their spears at us through the lattice work.

"It is of no use now to insist," said Coswell, "and dangerous, now they are in such mood. To-morrow they will be in a better frame of mind. I will pray for their change of heart."

With that he knelt and poured out his soul in the cannibal lingo, which it seemed to me it would be difficult for even God to understand. He arose and again appealed to the chief. In vain. His obstinancy remained, and for reply he smote his shield with vehement wrath, as emphasis to his speech.

"What in blazes does he say?" asked the Captain, his fear changing to anger.

"He says Bimbumbo, their name for the Great Spirit, has cast you on this coast as a sacrifice and the will of Bimbumbo must be carried out. It is a reversion to the old belief, and one of the most difficult things I have to contend with. Keep a brave heart, however, and to-morrow I am sure will bring a change."

It will be inferred that we did not sleep over-soundly that night. Such inference would be erroneous, for we were so weary that falling on the bed of fern leaves which had been provided we almost instantly fell asleep, and not until the sun thrust his silvery shafts through the palm foliage did we awaken. Breakfast of soft cocoanuts, shell fish and unknown fruits were served and the Captain ate greedily, all the time protesting that he would not put on flesh to please the pirates. Rev. Coswell came early. He had evidently passed a night of distress. With him came the chiefs and a gang of followers. Again Coswell put forth his powers of persuasion to be met with the same stolid refusal.

"They are sent," said the head man, "for sacrifice to Bimbumbo, and to him must they be given." He would yield thus far: we might go home with the missionary under guard, to stay the day, but return at night. That was one point gained, and we felt a sense of relief when the door was unfastened and we were given freedom for the day. We went by the shore, getting a view of the wreckage, which gave a melancholy aspect to the otherwise bright and glorious scene. Nothing on all the coast of the sea speaks in more emphatic language of its omnipotent power and relentless cruelty than the silent wreck of the majestic ship by which man claims his mastery. With all its prowess, it is flung like a broken cockle-shell, in scornful negligence to moulder on the tide-line. The bottom of the hull yet clung to the jagged coral reef, with the ribs at its prow torn of plankage, standing up like those of some weird monster. All that could be wrenched away had been cast on shore. Swarms of natives were searching for attractive objects, pulling at ropes and sails, and shouting with the delight of children. As we passed along we came to the box containing my phonograph. It had escaped their observation and I picked it up with joy. It was like meeting an old friend, and I carried it to the thatched cabin which Coswell called his home. This cabin was better in construction than the lairs of the natives. It was made by setting posts around a square, the sides were formed of interlaced twigs and the roof covered with immense palm leaves. At one side was the house of worship, constructed in the same manner, and capable of seating six hundred people. I was amazed at its size.

"Why so immense," I asked.

"It must be large enough to hold all, should they desire to come; and usually they do," replied Coswell.

"How do you make them understand?"

"I have made a close study of their language. Its vocabulary is not extensive, its idiom not difficult, and I simplify by illustrations as to children."

"You must have strong religious faith," I observed, "to make you choose life here on this uttermost part of the globe, with savages who may at any time devour you like a pack of wolves."

"It is the will of the Master," he responded with humility through which egotism prevailed.

"I am glad to know that you speak the language fluently, for I have an idea which, if it meets with your approval, may not only free us from this cannibal horde, but help along the cause of religion by hastening their conversion." He brightened at this and eagerly asked for further information.

"You see," I replied, "I have saved, most fortunately, my phonograph, which has also a record-making attachment."

"I have read of the instrument, but have never seen one."

"It stands like this," I continued; "you take this machine into your house, and to-night when no one can listen, talk into it in the island language that which you think most desirable to impress on the native mind. To-morrow you place it in the meeting house and give out that Bimbumbo will himself address his worshipers."

"I do not understand."

"Easy, my dear sir. You commence the harangue by saying: I, Bimbumbo, thus saith to you, you are no more to eat the white men. I sent them not to eat. They come to instruct you. Put aside your spears."

"Oh, my dear sir," he despairingly cried, "I cannot do this. It would be deception, and I would be false to my profession."

"Not in the least. Has it not been taught since the early church fathers that it is justifiable to lie for Christ's sake? Here you have an opportunity to bring this people at once to the truth, and what matters how you do it if the end is gained?"

"Perfectly correct," interjected the Captain. "Clear sailing in that quarter. When you've bagged the game you can hold it by other means."

The missionary wavered. His conscience was not clear as to the proposition. "True," he replied, "I have been discouraged with the results of the work of two years. I have gained permission to live here. The people seem interested, but at any time, I well know, the old belief may carry away the frail barrier I have erected. I place full faith in God, well knowing that many strong men have been swept away while in the very act of prayer."

"May we not take the almost miraculous preservation of the instrument as indicating the will of God in the way I propose?"

"When would you test this strange experiment?"

"We are lost if we delay. This taste of blood may not stop, now it is inflamed, until even you are led to the barbecue." This was a brutal thrust and went home, clenching the business. He paled to the lips and trembled.

"I'll do it. It may be sinful, but I'll do it."

THE PATHWAY of the Human Spirit, or the Pathway of the Spirit Traced, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Price 75 cents; postage 12 cents.

"After Her Death." The Story of a Summer." By Lilian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. Price, cloth, $1.00.

The God and Christ Ideas.

Hudson Tuttle's works are meaty. They evince the marks of patient research, intuitive perception, and philosophical thought. His writings, whether inspirational or the work of his own independent mind, show that they are wrought in deep sincerity, and not as a mere pastime. And yet one cannot doubt that he experiences a peculiar mental, spiritual pleasure in the exercise of his literary vocation. His labor, however thoughtful, deep and sincere, is truly a labor of love, and purest enjoyment. It is thus we sense the man, the thinker, the author, in all his literary endeavors.

And we have no doubt that even when freely exercising his own individual powers of thought, his mentality is kindly and helpfully touched by interested spirit influences that lift into higher and broader visions of truth.

Such are our impressions after having read such of Mr. Tuttle's works as "Studies in the Outlying Fields of Psychic Science," "Arcana of Spiritualism," "Religion of Man, and Ethics of Science" and finally his "Evolution of the God and Christ Ideas."

In this last volume the brain-work of the careful student and the philosophical thinker is evident. Solidity of reasoning to legitimate deductions from well grounded data is a strong characteristic of the author's style of treatment. His deductions are not always such as would please a mind involved in the meshes of orthodox beliefs, and are therefore the more pleasing to minds of free-thinking readers. The book is not "milk for babes," but solid meat for full-grown Spiritualists and other fearless thinkers. The author is by no means averse to strike sledge-hammer blows against what he deems vitally erroneous and superstitious beliefs, and as well in defense of the truth as it appeals to his apprehension. In both cases it is his devoted love of truth that actuates him. This makes his work all the more valuable to the reader and student.

For this work, The Evolution of the God and Christ Ideas, I have only words of highest commendation, both as to subject matter and mode of treatment. It is a real Vade Mecum of information pertaining to the great subject of which it treats.

I prefer to enter this general sincere commendation, rather than a discursive analysis of the parts and chapters of the volume. I feel sure that no intelligent reader of the same will regret the time or outlay, or be otherwise than pleased and instructed thereby. The God and Christ Ideas are succinctly and clearly traced from their beginnings in ignorance and misconception, to their latest and highest development. The whole affords a fine study in religious evolution. JAS. C. UNDERHILL.

Hudson Tuttle and Emma Rood Tuttle, Berlin Heights, Ohio.

I notice in The Progressive Thinker that the above-named noble couple are celebrating next month their golden wedding anniversary by issuing under the name of "Golden Sheaf" a book containing the best unpublished fruits of their combined literary efforts.

They will make it also the best "edition de lux" that the art of printing and binding can produce, offering it at a price that will only cover the cost if many names appear on the subscription list.

Should there be any necessity of encouragement for each good Spiritualist who can spare a dollar to send in his name, showing thus his just appreciation of the life-long work, the sincere devotion and the undisputed merits of these two gifted pioneers in our cause: our beloved brother and sister, Hudson and Emma R. Tuttle.

Ye readers of our banner-bearer, The Progressive Thinker, whose inspired columns have presented you with so many gems from the pens of our present jubilaires; ye solicitors for information in the "Questions and Answers" column, some of whom may not realize the amount of time and mental effort required to conduct such a department; finally, ye of the privileged host of a Tuttle Library, who can revel at leisure among the rare pearls of poetry, science and spirituality contained within those unique volumes, I ask you, each one and all to consider it "honoris causa" (an affair of honor) to send your names without hesitation, making it a whole-hearted testimonial of joint appreciation and gratefulness to our long-sacrificing, faithful and more than deserving Brother and Sister Hudson and Emma Rood Tuttle.

THE MESSAGE.

From your abode in that beauteous land,
Where Justice rules o'er the light, golden strand,
Your message hath reached me—hath given repose;
Smoothed many paths, banished petty woes.
Yet the earth-struggle most sorely presses.
With heavy hands and labor's excesses
It hath stolen youth, destroyed winsome hope;
It limits tethers as bound with a rope,
And while waning strength makes fruitless desire,
Curbs aspirations and robs veins of fire,
Leaves ashes for roses, hampers success,
The increasing burdens heavily press.
Then why should I linger, grieving the past?
mh mh mh mh mhmh
Why still seek possessions that cannot last?
Why vainly contend with fast fleeting years?
Why dwell on efforts resulting in tears?
Away! then, earth-tempters! take all your toys,
And give, O, give me the Freed Spirit's Joys.
Rest is waiting; then why tarry here,
Far from that realm holding those that are dear? SOLUS.

The Warfare of Science With Theology.

A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom. By ANDREW D. WHITE, LL. D., late President and Professor of History at Cornell University. In Two Volumes, 8vo. Cloth. Five Dollars. For Sale at This Office.

In these two large volumes are combined information that the reader could not find in the libraries of the world in fifty years. It shows the constant and determined opposition of Theology to the advancement that has been made in every branch of Science. To the Student it is indispensible. Every Free Thought Speaker should have it. It should circulate in every community. It goes into minute details, citing in all cases the authority, showing the persistency of Theology in fighting new and advanced ideas in Science.

"THE WARFARE OF SCIENCE WITH THEOLOGY" is undoubtedly the most complete, careful, conscientious, able and bravely impartial history of the subject ever written. The exactness and reliability of its facts and citations are unquestioned. Its vast scholarly research is amazing. It contains just the information the student and thinker needs, and so indexed and tabulated that it is handy as a dictionary when one wishes to refer to some special point or topic.

These two large volumes, containing about 900 pages, will be sent to any address on receipt of the price, $5.00.

FUTURE LIFE

In the Light of Ancient Wisdom and Modern Science.

BY LOUIS ELBE.

This is the authorized translation of the famous book which has been creating so wide a stir in scientific and religious circles throughout France, under the title "La Vie Future." It will be received with equal interest here, and will arouse very general discussion, as the subject is one engaging not only scientists but laymen in ever-increasing numbers.

The fundamental question of the "Immortality of the Soul" has disturbed the great thinkers of all ages, and for the solution of this eternal enigma humanity still seeks in vain.

This volume offers for the first time a complete presentation of all the available evidence hitherto to be found only in the most scattered and inaccessible forms. With great care and exactness M. Elbe has arranged a plain statement of the discoveries theories, and ideas of the greatest investigators together with his own illuminating views and comments, and a mass of authentic information regarding the beliefs of the primitive races.

The book is divided into two parts, the first part being devoted to the ideas of the Survival as considered by the Primitive races, and the second to Deductions drawn from the Fundamental sciences. With Portrait of the author. Price $1.20; postage 10c.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Condition of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

Price, $1.50; postage, 10 cents.

Spiritualism and Marriage

Abstract of a Lecture Delivered by W. D. Wattles, Before the Spiritual Science Association of Indianapolis, Ind., at the First Meeting of the Orpheum, Sunday Evening, Sept. 15, 1907.

That there is something wrong with marriage in the United States the records of the divorce courts prove; and it is not clear yet that the root of the evil has been found, or the proper remedy proposed. On the one hand we have the clergy and their followers advocating a more stringent regulation of divorce, if not its prohibition altogether except for the scriptural cause; and it has never appeared to me that this was really a curative measure. It is like concealing a scandal from the public, while permitting it to go on; like hiding the skeleton in the closet but permitting him to stalk forth in all his grisly hideousness after all the guests have gone It seems to me that the primary evil is not that so many married couples get divorced, but that so many of them should desire to get divorced. If I saw two cats tied together, and tearing each other's eyes out, I would not think of solving their problem by running with a piece of wire to make their bonds unbreakable, lest they suffer the calamity of getting apart. I do not think that a more stringent divorce law would add to human happiness, or raise the level of marital morality.

On the other hand are those who advocate the abolition of the marriage relation altogether. We do not lack for men and women to tell us that marriage as an institution has been tried and found wanting. The doctrine of promiscuity as most in accord with natural law is being urged by able writers, and sanctioned by the practice of those who have stood high in the world's esteem; they tell us that monogamous marriage is contrary to human nature, and that it is not possible for the love of one man for one woman, or of one woman for one man to continue for a lifetime.

But there seem to be cases where it does last. I would like to give my personal testimony on this point, speaking from a limited experience, but good as far as it goes. I want to confess, right here, that all that I am, which is very little indeed, and all that I may hope to be, here or hereafter, which is very much indeed, I owe to the woman who put her hand in mine twenty years ago, and took me for better or worse, and whose unshakable devotion has been my strongest, and sometimes my only support in times of wavering fortune; who has had faith when I despaired, who has had courage when I was afraid; and who has believed in me when I had lost faith in myself; who has doubled my few triumphs by sharing them, and divided my sorrows by bearing them—heart of my heart, soul of my soul and life of my life; —my Wife!

And I want to give my testimony that it is possible for a man and woman to walk together through the years and love each other better every day; to love each other better through trials and sorrows, through disagreements and quarrels; to love each other better while life shall last, and to go down into the valley of the shadow with clasped hands unshaken in the faith that hell itself shall not have power to break their faith, or quench the deathless fire they see in one another's eyes.

And in spite of all the talk about the failure of marriage, I still see many cases where it seems to me to be, at least, a fair success. I see old men and women, whose knotted hands still clasp as tenderly as on their wedding day, guiding with wistful watchfulness each other's faltering steps amid the gathering shadows of the night of death; I see them sitting side by side before the hearthstone receiving the ministrations of their loving children, and softly telling little stories of the dead. I see the old wife's trembling hand stroking the pallid brow of her dying husband, lightening the very pangs of death itself. I hear the old man, left alone, crying in the night for the wife of his age as a child cries for its mother. I see the love of half a century hushing its sobs beside the grave, to listen for a whisper from the other side. I see all this, and it seems to me that in the love of the one man for the one woman, and of the one woman for the one man, is to be found all that is purest, highest and most glorious in human life; but they come to me now and tell me that such love as I have described is a crude and undeveloped thing, and that the world has outgrown it, and that we must follow the lead of the more advanced souls into a sex-relationship more on the general line of what we witness in the poultry yard; and I answer, if that were progress, progress be damned!

If you think promiscuity is the natural thing, let me ask you to consider the process by which nature has given motherhood to the world You know that the little sea turtle never has a mother. The female turtle lays her eggs in the sand, and waddles away; and if she were to meet her own offspring the day after they are hatched, she would not recognize them, nor would they know her. They are fully able to take care of themselves from birth.

As we come higher in the scale of animal life, we find the young helpless and dependent for a more and more extended period, requiring care and protection; and here we see a mother love developing which holds the mother to her offspring until it is able to take care of itself.

I would have you notice that among the lower animals the love of the mother follows the child only as long as the child is helpless. The cow will bellow after her calf until it is weaned, but from that time it is no more to her than any member of the herd.

I ask you to notice that in the human family, where the period of helplessness is longest, we have reached the apex, and produced what nature seems to have been aiming at, a mother-love that is unceasing and eternal; for the human mother loves her boys when they have become strong and bearded men; loves her girls as tenderly when they have children of their own, as when they are around her knees, aye, and she loves her grandchildren as well as her own.

I remember standing beside the bedside of a woman who was dying of old age, and with her last breath she whispered the name of a child she had buried fifty years before. Fifty years! It seems to me a wonderful thing, and a beautiful thing, that nature has produced a love that is longer than time and stronger than death; that is unshakable, unquenchable, outlasting the eternities!

And I ask you to consider that promiscuity must do away with motherhood, for it is impossible in modern society for the mother alone to care for her children; they would have to be taken by the State. I beg of you to remember that under even a modified form of free-love we must gravitate toward the time when all children should be reared by the state; and when women would take their babies to state institutions, and leaving them there, go on their way rejoicing in their freedom from care! That would be turning evolution from the woman toward the turtle, and the proposition is too unnatural and nonsensical to be worth considering.

And another thing: Because of the helplessness of the children, and of the inability of the mother to feed and care for them and for herself, the man was obliged to stay by his wife, and to defend and provide for her and for his offspring, and in the fullness of time, nature evolved a father who loved his children, not only while they were babies, but after they were as large and as capable as himself. And this, too, seems to me to be a glorious thing; a father-love that endures to the eternities, going beyond the Gates of Death itself.

It does not seem to me that the universe has a grander figure than the father, going forth to battle with storm, heat and frost, subduing nature, conquering the elements, warring with the very gods themselves in his self-sacrificing devotion to his children and their mother. I say the father is a heroic figure, and father-love is a noble and beautiful thing; and I would point out to you that it is a thing which has been evolved by the marriage of one woman to one man, and if we do away with monogamous marriage the world's childhood must be fatherless forever. I am not ready for that yet. I may be old-fashioned and crude, and not at all "advanced" in my ideas, but it seems to me that we need to develop fatherhood and motherhood, rather than to do away with them; that we need to develop the marriage institution rather than to abolish it; we need more marriage, not less marriage

And now I am going to tell you what is the matter with marriage. In the first place, only the Spiritualists understand what marriage is.

I have never seen a better definition of marriage that that given by Emanuel Swedenborg; and I will give it to you as nearly as I can in his own quaint words: "A couple are married when their interiors are united by marriage love." I think that is a fine definition; it is complete and comprehensive; it tells it all.

Marriage is a spiritual thing, and not a physical thing at all; but neither the churches nor the state have ever found this out. The clergy go on joining people exteriorlyy, without paying the least attention to the question whether they are interiorly united; they marry people for money, for power, for convenience, for a thousand reasons, mostly commercial; and they blasphemouslyy pronounce the blessing of God on these commercial partnerships of sex.

The church looks upon the marriage of two people as something a clergyman can do, the people having only to consent. The church pretends to have the power to make and unmake marriages. I saw a case in point not long ago, where a clergyman prevented a marriage because the girl was an unbeliever.

Think of that!

Think of saying to a young man: "I know you love this girl, and she loves you, but she is an infidel; you must turn your back on the woman you love, and marry one whom you do not love, and make your life a hideous lie in the sight of God and man; you must do this for the sake of religion." That is the way the church looks upon marriage; and we wonder why the divorce courts are crowded.

The trouble with marriage is, that with the full consent of both the church and state it has been commercialized. We judge marriage by the commercial criterion; a "good" marriage is one that pays well. And we have the State compelling a young man to commit perjury before he is allowed to marry; compelling him to swear that he can support a wife!

There is not a man in Indianapolis to-night who can swear that he knows he will have a dollar to his name, or a second shirt to his back ten days hence. It is a pitiful thing, that in the midst of our vaunted prosperity we have thousands of young men who are afraid to marry; afraid that they cannot support a family. One of the things the home needs is a little less blow and brag and strenuousity, and a little more safety. Deliver marriage from the shadow of economic fear and we shall have more love marriages. And the more love marriages we have, the fewer will be our divorces.

Young man, if there is a good girl whom you love, and who loves you, I advise you to marry her. If the state requires you to swear that you can support her, do it with a clear conscience. I had rather swear to a thousand lies than to be false to the woman I love; and if the church forbids the union, disobey the church, and marry; if all the priests and preachers in christendom stand ready with bell, book, and candle to curse, excommunicate and send you to hell for being true to the woman you love, marry her, and go to hell like a man!

The time will come, and soon, when every man who is willing to work will be able to support a family, and to do it well; when the home shall be delivered from the fear of want, the greed for gain and the shackles of bigotry.

REINCARNATION.

Its Philosophy as Stated by a Believer Therein

Having been a careful reader of The Progressive Thinker for more than three years past, I have noted with pleasure its numerous contributed brilliant articles from the great thinkers of the day.

But I have also wondered, not a little at some of the curious conceptions regarding reincarnation, which are therein occasionally expressed by the army of inquirers, scoffers, or skeptics, who in many instances have confessedly investigated little, and flung their speculations broadcast from quite insufficiently gathered knowledge concerning these great teachings It is true that those who have not awakened to the truth of rebirth cannot have it forced upon them by argument, while those to to whom it appeals do not need the argument. Yet there are many by whom it is vaguely felt to be true teaching, who yet fail to grasp its significance, being, indeed, repelled by its seeming incongruities. To such in the fullness of time come illumination, not argument. The teaching is often revealed through unexpected sources and comes in humble guise.

For the present writer the mystery called reincarnation came as a revelation, certain facts being explainable on no other hypothesis.

The doctrine of compulsory rebirth; that man is bound to the wheel of repeated incarnations, and into lower forms is justly repugnant to the mind which holds sacred the eternal justice of things. Such is not the teaching.

Man is reborn strictly with his own consent and desire, and continuance of consciousness—the consciousness depending upon the degree of spiritual attainment acquired by the soul in its development up through numerous existences.

When a soul has accumulated to itself the varied experiences of an earth life, it passes on into the plane prepared by its own measure of progress, there to remain not "through centuries of oblivion," but in conscious enjoyment and assimilation of the same experiences gathered during its late incarnation. Sooner or later, however, according to the degree of development, the soul, resting in exalted happiness, having assimilated all its earth experience, and in obedience to some latent, unfulfilled desire, seeks earthly experience again.

The desire is prophecy of its own fulfillment—desire and will are back of the evolutionary urge from the beginning of unfoldment.

But the developed soul gains this at last, through repeated incarnations; he has awakened to a knowledge, and henceforth waits on the higher planes, until such time as the earth and race progress have swung round to a point where he can reincarnate with advantage to his desire fulfillment

It sometimes happens that the desire of the incarnating soul is opposed by the superior wisdom of the Spirit, knowing always what is best, and the result is an earth life—like many which we know, of noble, struggling souls—torn by conflict and contradiction. Yet still is "all well" for its unfailing guide, the true Ego, will inevitably lead toward the absolute in ultimate perfection.

In the case of the undeveloped soul they, having little spirituality, reincarnate more frequently, retaining no memories whatever of any previous existence, because these must be intuitive, and being brought back to earth by force of attraction and blind desire.

But each time they gain some slight advance. Never a retrogression is made. The earth is a school and its vacations are meant to be spent in happy recreations. One may spend hundreds of years in the same grade, but eventually it is mastered, and they pass into the next highest. Should a scholar fail in only one study, he is sent back to be made perfect in that one. The other studies of his class, having been learned, are his own acquired property, and cannot be taken from him. Thus does the soul gain; if it be but a few strands which are woven into the pattern all must shape for eternity.

It is strictly upon the plane of its own making that the higher spirit enjoys larger periods of repose and beatitude, while the lower spirit comes more quickly back to earth life from which he is indeed but severed by the casting off of the fleshly garment. The fact of the lower entities more quickly reincarnating, while the higher are in a state of conscious waiting for more suitable earth conditions, furnishes a key to the mystery of the rise and fall of nations, the ebb and flow of great dynasties, and the thinking mind gains historical events which have been chronicled in the world's records since time began for us.

The separation of loved ones by reincarnation, so often loudly lamented, is no more brought about than is the case in any other temporary remorse on the earth plane. The law of attraction holds good in all cases, and those who have been brought together into close relations by a present incarnation, had previously established conditions operating under its law in past lives. It sometimes happens, however, that a soul on the higher planes may wait centuries, while the soul of some loved one, less developed, must return for other experiences and lessons and also in obedience to latent desire, while the higher soul is consciously watching and waiting for the one dear to it though less advanced in spiritual progress. Does this seem hard and long? Then please remember that in the vast scheme of eternity a thousand years are but a day, and a day a thousand years; and look you, what happens!

When, according to the inevitable working of the law of attraction, these two souls meet again, they take up their lives together and henceforwrd are never more separated.

They have reached the planes of true wisdom and unfoldment and are "saved" from further re-birth on the earth plane Hereafter it is on the spiritual zones that they continually progress, or else voluntarily return, as did the great teachers to help on in the development of the whole race.

Thus, when the soul through right-living, which is loving, has reached these heights, there is for it then no more rebirths in blind obedience to latent desire. It has awakened to the light of truth, and henceforward comes understandingly, if at all.

In the minds of many are clear revelations of former lives. Friendships discovered, loves reunited after centuries of Karmic severance; destinies worked out to complete fulfillment through ages of preparation—thus does the soul come into its inheritance, and is illumined for eternity.

These beliefs have existed in the minds of millions since the world began. We cannot think of anything which can transcend the universe of thought, hence it must be possible, and if possible, one can see how, to those millions of people, it has become demonstrable truth. And, after all, it is a beautiful and consoling thing, once faced, and its seeming incongruities assimilated; this doctrine of reincarnation; spiritual evolution, and a growth into eternity from germ to God!

Again, there have been those who speak of the soul as "dwarfing" back to infancy when it reincarnates. The spirit, in or out of incarnation, is in full identity. Can we not conceive of one trying a boat, little by little, step by step, ere he seizes the oars and pulls out into the full stream? So the spirit watches over its own and bides its time for fullness of manifestation. The selfhood can and does come and go, and waits upon its tools of mind and brain until it is able to step in and assume command intelligently; using them and testing them until they respond, at last, in fullness of maturity, to the soul's need of expression.

And the mother need not fear that she is singing her lullaby to monster or cynic philosopher, full-fledged, who scoffs, through his meal of milk at the inadequacy of his environments; she is nursing her "bud of humanity" which has existed, indeed, since a spark, it sprang, back in the eons of time, from the bosom of flame, but for her it is a waiting, dreaming soul, which has selected and been selected into this same environment through the aid of spirit, in obedience to the very law of attraction which brought the two together in the past, loving and beloved.

Many say they do not want to live again; certainly not; not the same life; but a new life is a continuation, not a repetition. Personalities pass; individuals remain unchanged save as they are built into by the character structure which perfects the true and eternal ego. The new life marks but another chapter in the great Human book.

As to Karma, we know that as we sow so must we reap. Regarding the aid and sympathy we must render to our brother, struggling in the meshes wrought by his own acts, see to it that we judge not, neither withhold. That is our part, if we are progressing spiritually.

By these acts of mercy and love are we destined to mitigate the Karma of some suffering soul which is thus brought into touch with heavenly ministrations, and gradually released from the operations of the law. The child is burned by putting its hand into the fire.

Cause and effect follow one another with unerring accuracy, but woe be to the one who stands aside through misunderstanding of the Karmic law, and withholds the kindly oil which shall alleviate its pain! New Karmic conditions, and a disastrous chain of cause and effect would thus be established, reacting upon the one who shall judge his brother, withholding sympathy and help! Doing so, we are involved in our own acts, and the conditions which they create. These we have begotten; with our brother's we have naught to do, save to love him and help him. We do not necessarily reincarnate in order that we may commit all of the sins (ignorances) which we are in the midst of here, but if we fail in help or sympathy with our brother who has fallen into the mire, then shall we be brought into such personal relation with those same evils that we shall learn, through experience, to be merciful, understanding, and to judge not.

After all, reincarnation means but a Day from Home! Heaven is Home! The laborer goes forth to return at nightfall. Earth is more than a starting-point. Its seed-times and harvest are wrought out here. But the Eternal Harvest is the rendering unto God of the accumulated talnts of many lives, which as captains of industry we have faithfully garnered up through the ages of probation and trial here. This makes it imperative that we live well and royally, and to live well, is to Love Much.

MASTERSHIP IS THE RIGHT WAY.

THE GREAT WORK is Vol. III., of the "Harmonic Series." It makes clear the Way of Mastership. This is the Way that leads to Individual Liberty here and hereafter.

Every intelligent man and woman who is seeking for Spiritual Truth should read THE GREAT WORK. Why? Because:

1. It teaches the Constructive Process of Spiritual Development whereby we may communicate with our spirit friends without becoming Mediums.

2. It explains the most mysterious and fascinating phenomena of human life simply and clearly.

3. It presents a new array of demonstrated facts which prove that MASTERSHIP, and not Mediumship, is the Constructive Road to Spiritual Unfoldment, and that it is open to all who elect to travel it.

4. Its author speaks from the standpoint of one who has "had the personal experience and made the demonstration."

5. It presents to the world a Moral Philosophy so simple and exact that it may be understood by a child, and yet so profound as to meet the deepest and most exalted demands of the human soul.

It will be sent post-paid to any address on receipt of $2.00. Address, Department P. T.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 36 CHICAGO, ILL., OCT. 5, 1907 NO. 932

THE HIGHEST STANDARD.

It Is to Come Into a Union with the Divine.

Every human being is endowed by the Supreme Creator with two natures: The first, a spiritual nature; the second, a physical nature. As a result of this man leads a dual life, as it is a rare occurrence where the spiritual entirely predominates over and above the workings of the physical.

Man is likewise endowed with body and soul; the body to be a temporary abiding place of the soul during its sojourn on the earth plane, both body and soul being relative to and dependent upon each other. By and through the instrumentality of mind and thought are we enabled to connect the two. We have the power within us, through the operation of thought, to open our souls for the Divine influx of life, and our soul should be a fit receptacle by and through which we can receive spiritual attributes. The voice of our Creator is ever speaking through the soul, urging us on to greater spiritual activities.

It is equally as important a matter to minister unto the necessities of the soul as to those of the physical. And when we come into a realization of the supreme fact of the universe, that the soul and spirit is a part of the Infinite Being, our Father and Mother God, and destined to a continued existence through earth life on into the realms of immortality, it brings to our consciousness the knowledge that we are prominent factors in the workings of life; that no power will cast us into final oblivion.

To the extent that we partake of this oneness with our Creator, the Author of all Life, will we come into a realization of our higher self and its necessities for perfect unfoldment and development. All humanity constitute one great family and one Infinite Father has petitioned us to fulfill the divine plan of our lives, which is to expand the soul to its fullest power, making it a grand receptacle for spiritual strength and wisdom, that a divine brilliancy may radiate so grandly that it will be as a beacon star of hope, which will guide our fallen brothers and sisters into a fuller consciousness of life in all its beauties.

The highest standard for mankind to attain and then maintain is to come into a oneness with the Divine, and realizing this Infinite environment you may become susceptive to the touch, whispers, and loving ministrations of an angel, God's messenger of love. Close your ears unto earthly things and listen for the still, small voice within—that intuition of the soul which has guided men and women over obstacles which would otherwise have been insuperable. This voice from the Infinite realm, which will lead you out of a condition of darkness, gloom and despair into the light of a higher understanding of life.

Do not surround yourself with the unspiritual things of life, but turn your gaze out into the great universe, and there you will find great unceasing blessings wrought by Nature through her grand and unsurpassed expression of life, animate and inanimate, which tells you that beyond and above all is the Father's love, which is the motive power in all life—life in all its expressions and glory. The birds, flowers, woodlands, the bright sparkling waters—everything which ministers unto the necessities of body and soul. Through these agencies methinks the voice of our Father and Mother God speaks with infinite tenderness, "my child, be good."

There is a great underlying principle of life generated with divine love and wisdom which permeates the entire universe of which we are a part. When we stop to consider this the supreme fact of the universe, can we, contrary to all Divine and Natural laws, obscure our spiritual light, forget our higher selves, the true man and the true woman within? Rather listen to this higher intuition; allow it to exercise continually a protectorate over body and soul. If in doubt, let the mind revert to this higher self for counsel and knowledge, and allow this beautiful process to continue unimpeded by questionings and fear, and although there is so much that is dark and uncertain on earth as yet, still God is expressing his goodness unto all beings. His law is perfect love, the motive power of all life, both in the seen and unseen worlds. By and through this Infinite love are we brought into a fuller consciousness of our oneness with him, and the oft-hidden treasure, man's higher self, matured into a perfection of beauty and strength. This is the Divine plan of life, to attune your souls with the purest and best conditions from those great realms on high, whence cometh all life.

Smiling.

A smile is not a contortion. This statement would seem scarcely necessary were it not for the fact that one so constantly sees men and women distorting their faces in a spasmodic effort to seem friendly or witty. Ridiculous as it sounds, there is a proper way even to smile. First of all, do not smile at all unless there is real occasion for it. Next, smile softly. Next, do not grin. And last, do not simper. Abolish the sarcastic smile of contempt or patronage, the smile of sychophancy. That is to say, realize that a sweet, amiable smile can come only from a sweet, amiable personality—and "go thou and do likewise."—Medford, Okla., Patriot.

Called to the Ministry.

Synopsis of the Installation Discourse of Rev. Geo. W. Kates, Upon Assuming the position of Pastor, in Association with Mrs. Kates, for the First Spiritual Church of Baltimore, Md.

After introductory remarks were made by Clarence D. Pruden, president of the Church, and Charles R. Schirm, the retired president, and extending to Mr. and Mrs. Kates the right hand of fellowship, Mr. Kates addressed the congregation upon "Being Called To The Ministry." He said in part:

We enter upon our ministry with you in much fear of our ability to do full duty to your needs; and with some anxiety about your co-operation with us. We must mutually co-operate, or the work will be lacking in success. The whole cause does not depend upon your pastors, nor officers, nor members, but upon each one of you who have an interest in the vital issues here made for human progress. The whole cause of Spiritualism is vital and efficacious for human good, just as it is so with you personally. If any of you fail in duty and exemplification, then the cause experiences just that much of failure; and if you render good service, then the cause is quickened by that service.

We need to exemplify Spiritualism in our lives, at home, in business and in daily walks amongst our associates. We need to grow in mental, moral and spiritual power; and give of these gifts, adding financial giving thereto.

As to preaching the gospel, that would be a special duty of the pastors, and in addition, to demonstrate the fact of spirit communion. Preaching and demonstration are co-operative need that must be positively manifest.

What shall we preach? Every vital issue for earth and spirit life. Will we use the Bible to preach from? Yes. That is a historical record of a spiritual era, and of prophetic times. A book filled with Spiritualism, because it reveals that spirit manifestations and inspiration were then demonstrated and applied.

But we shall also preach from Shakspeare, Voltaire, the Philosophers of the past and the present. We will use any valuable book as a text book, and any helpful author as an authority.

We will not preach a Spiritualism prescribed for us by the National Association, nor by this Church officials. We are not bound by any dogma or creed, nor by accepted theology. We are mentally and spiritually free! We are here to pour our souls and minds unto you for the upliftment of every person who shall enter here, and through them unto all people of this community.

Our preaching shall not be as per an institution, but of the spirit as we may be led to preach.

Yyman Abbott gave some good advice in this direction, as follows: "The secret of preaching, is God dwelling in the heart of man." I will add in the heart of woman also; for she represents godly traits and power more than do men, and is more often called by the spirit to preach.

Mr. Abbott said the purpose of the sermon is: "To give aid, comfort, inspiration, help, hope, to some soul." O, how we to-night trust that some aid, comfort, inspiration, help and hope will be given to some soul or souls by our ministry in your midst.

"Religion is the life of God in the soul of man; theology is a philosophy respecting that life."

I proclaim Spiritualism to be a religion, because it appertains to the life of God in humanity. It teaches the immanence and not the remoteness of God; it teaches that we can be gods, and to have no fear of any angry God. It teaches us that God is an immanent force in nature, and not a personality in some remote heaven of destiny for his elect; but that all beings are of God, and shall be partakers of salvation, or progressive development. We are each as A. J. Davis said: "Children of infinite possibilities." When theology becomes a "philosophy of life," and not a dogmatic theory of men to support a creed, then will there be a truer application of the "Religion of life."

There may be learned treatises of hygiene, but a breakfast of good food cooked by the cook is of practical utility to individuals. So it is with theology and philosophy; they must be assimilated and digested by the partakers in order to be of value to the bodies and souls of mankind.

I will not preach heresy, because truth is never heretical except to error. If I interpret the Bible for myself, I have some authority to do so, and I become a good Protestant.

Protest number three, of the Reformation, was as follows: "The Bible is not to be interpreted and used according to tradition, or use and wont, but to be explained by means of itself."

If the Bible does not explain itself, then it is to be feared that theologians will never explain it. But, it is quoted: "The just shall live by faith." This is not in reference to any belief in the scriptures, but rather to a proper mode of personal living this life. We must have faith in ourself; for anyone lacking such faith is indeed in poverty of soul. But, you say we should trust in God. That will be better exemplified by trusting in yourself. Isaiah spoke of God as the "Holy One of Israel." This personal God of Isaiah was a controlling spirit for that old prophet, for we read: "Thou shalt know that I the Lord am thy Savior and Redeemer, the mighty one of Jacob."

This was personal to the Israelites, and not to us moderns.

That it was an instance of mediumship we are convinced by the statement: "The spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek." (Isaiah 61:1.)

"The spirit of the Lord God is upon me" is positive claim that he was a medium for an excarnate person whom Isaiah thought to be the Lord God. The modern Christian will claim the Lord to be the Lord Jesus. But, what Lord did Jesus claim? "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach to the poor." (Luke 4:18.)

Jesus changed the text of Isaiah to read "to the poor" instead of "to the meek." But, I will to-night say that I am anointed to preach to both the poor and meek. But, was Jesus controlled by the same Lord that controlled Isaiah? If so, the modern preacher would better claim Isaiah's Lord than only Lord Jesus. The idea of Jesus in being called to preach, was to have "the spirit of the Lord" upon you—meaning, doubtless, ANY GOOD SPIRIT.

According to the Bible, to be a good preacher one must heal the broken-hearted, restore sight to the blind, set captives at liberty, and minister unto the meek and poor. How many modern ministers do these? Perhaps I shall fail also; but the modern mediums are doing all that, also the works that Jesus said we should do if we shall have faith. Theological seminaries cannot teach to us these works; but the anointment of the spirit does so endow us.

"For many are called but few are chosen." This seems to be true in these modern times, for the many called to preach are seldom chosen by the spirits as instruments of higher powers. Their calls are calls of self interest. They are now the servants (so claimed) of Jesus Christ.

Paul said he was a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, and also stated: "Among whom are ye also called of Jesus Christ." For this statement, the modern Christian preacher holds himself to be called of Jesus to preach. How was Paul called? "For necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel."

That sounds like mediumship. Further evidence of his mediumship is found as follows: "But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached OF me is not after man; for I neither received of man, neither was I taught it." Also: "For we preach not ourselves." Every evidence of Paul's conversion and ministry points to the fact that Jesus became his controlling spirit, and hence his preaching and works were not of man, nor OF himself. Hence, the way to preach the gospel is not to preach after the ways of men, but under the influence of the spirit.

Paul and others were directed by the spirits WHERE TO PREACH. By a vision appearing to Paul of a man from Macedonia, they concluded the Lord called them to go there and preach.

If a modern medium claims to be sent somewhere, we are apt to scoff and say that is fanatical. But, these old-time mediums seem to have had implicit faith in their controlling intelligences.

"The spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." That important statement is true to-day, for the spirits now so state.

Can we develop mediums, or impart spiritual gifts? This is an important question. We read in Romans: "For I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established." That sounds as if then there was some unfoldment of mediumship by these first apostles. And it is common to-day for some to assist others in such development.

But mediumship is a psychic inheritance for a positive force thereof, and yet all being psychically endowed, environment and habits of life will lead to unfoldment of psychic power.

All mediums come forth from obscurity by some travail of soul and sacrifice of selfish propensities. We must lay aside the crass or sensuous conditions of our physical life in order to be mediums for the spirits of God who are sent to minister unto our salvation. The evidence is strong that Jesus was called by some spirit to go forth and preach and demonstrate. "He saw the heavens opened, and the spirit like a dove descending upon him. And there came a voice from heaven saying: "Thou art my beloved son in whom I am well pleased." And immediately the spirit driveth him into the wilderness. And he was there forty days. * * and the angels ministered unto him."

If a modern person wants mediumship and is directed to fast and pray in the wilderness for forty days, he will say, "I cannot do it," or others will say, they are crazy if they obey. But they claim that to have been God-like in Jesus to do so.

A medium now seeing a spirit as a dove, would be ridiculed; but spirits often employ symbolism.

Jesus received his idea of his Father being in him and he in his Father, and they as one, by the statement in this instance of "Thou art my beloved son." The familiar spirit or controlling spirit often feels this fatherly interest. They usually address their medium as "My child." But a spirit father can readily be the controlling spirit. Mediums tell me that such is my case; and I feel great satisfaction in the possibility.

BY THE SPIRIT CALL IS THE ONLY WAY TO PREACH.

My companion testifies that she heard a voice saying: "Go forth and preach the gospel!" She asked: "Who are you?" The reply came: "I am your sister." Why not a sister make the call to preach, as well as an earthly or spiritual father? It was the call of the spirit.

Let me again ask: "What shall we preach?" From the Bible that so many accept as the only authority, I quote as follows:

"And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance, for the remission of sins. (Luke 3:3.)

Repentance is a good beginning for the atonement of sins, and possibly will lead to their remission, or restoration of the right for wrongs done.

"Preaching and showing the glad tidings of the Kingdom of God," Luke 8:1.)

This kingdom need not be in the spirit realm alone, but is necessary on earth; and this kingdom of peace and good-will are the true glad tidings needed. "And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick." (Luke 9:2.)

Modern mediums are healing the sick. We hope to heal many of you while in your midst, of infirmities of body, soul and spirit. "But quickened by the spirit * * By which also he went and preached unto spirits in prison." (Peter 3-18 -19.)

How are we quickened by the spirit? The evidence is mountain high that humans are taken possession of by spirits, and this is surely being quickened by the spirit. But, you say, being so quickened is being aroused to your sins. Not so. I am aware that at religious revivals, the power of the Holy Ghost is claimed, and the converts experience a wonderful power over their personality, and think a change of heart or new birth has ensued. This is magnetic afflatus caused by strong magnetizers, as are usually the revivalists. I could so work upon my congregations, with good helping workers and singers, until many of you would come under spirit power. Would it be well to do so? I fear that we would be called worse fanatics that the Salvationists, including they, who under excitement play "Ring around the rosy" and do other ridiculous gyrations.

We sadly need to-day to preach to spirits in prison; and we are doing so.

"And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." (Mark 16:17-18.)

Who does all this? Scarcely can it be said that these signs are evidenced by the modern Christian ministers. The Spiritualist mediums have done these things in many instances. But, I fear that my faith is as wanting as the average minister, when it comes to taking up serpents and drinking deadly things. But, we have cast out devils, spoken in new tongues and healed the sick by laying on of hands.

As Spiritualists we are preaching repentance, the kingdom of God, the word of the Lord (spirit), the kingdom of heaven is at hand, to spirits in prison, and we let the spirit speak. Truly are mediums CALLED.

And the spirits lead us to preach natural law, the gospel of life expressed in the grain of sand, the ant-hill, the stellar magnificence and the cosmic naturalness until all superstition is dying and the reign of natural law ensues.

I have the last summer obtained many "sermons of the Sod", and can sing with Joaquin Miller:

"The grasses and the sod,
They are my preachers. Hear them preach
When they forget the shroud, and God
Lifts up these blades of grass to teach
The resurrection! Who shall say
What infidel can speak as they?"

All infidelity, materialism of a crass nature, and agnosticism relating to God and immortality are destroyed by nature. An immanent God is proved, and the indestructible continuity of form and force is evidenced. My true Bible is found in nature.

Its tablets are written in grains of sand, drops of water, blades of grass, colors of roses, the mechanism of plants, the evolution of fruits and grains, and the entire cosmic process of the universe. These make character; and utilitarian character gives the possession of true religious life. It is deeds and not creeds that will save, and must be preached into you until you become living exemplars of spiritual life on earth, and not wait for it in the great future somewhere and somehow.

Achieve all possible good now, and the eternity will have no fears for you, nor doubts exist of your place in its eternal economy.

"His life is long whose work is well,
And be his station low or high,
He who the most good works can tell
Lives longest tho' he soonest die."

GEORGE W. KATES.

THE WORK OF A MOTHER.

Surely Here Is a Record Worthy of All Honor.

In a recent issue of a New York newspaper some one, signing himself "A Son," has thought it worth while in a few brief words, to tell the most interesting story he knows. There is so much in it of interest to other mothers, we pass it along: "My mother brought up a family of 13 children on a small income. She is 75 years of age, and is sound, and well. She has all her life done most of her own housework. The meals she cooks with her own deft hands are not only the most nutritious and the most palatable that any of her children or her guests have eaten, but have always been the most bountiful. I estimate that, during the 57 years of her career as the need of her own commissary department this lady has put upon her table before her own family and her guests no less than 115,000 meals. I submit this as a record worthy of honor."

Bible Spiritualism and Modern Spiritualism Not the Same.

It is the general opinion among Spiritualists that Bible Spiritualism supports and corroborates the facts and philosophy of Modern Spiritualism; but a careful and critical examination will dispel the delusion. Among the most noted of the prophets of the Old Testament were Joseph and Daniel, who, it was believed, were inspired by Jehovah.

There is no avoiding the conclusion that all those who were controlled by evil or ignorant spirits were regarded as witches, were enemies of the people, and since they could not be reached or dealt with, the witches who were mediums (as well as the prophets) were ordered to be slain: "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live."—Exodus 22:18. Many other passages of like character are found in the Old Testament in Leviticus, Deuteronomy, and other books therein. (Lev. 20:6; Deut. 18:10-11, and Mat. 5:12.)

It is stated in Johnson's Encyclopedia that eleven millions of victims have suffered death in obedience to this cruel edict.

Cotton Mather, an eminent American divine, was conspicuous in his persecution of witchcraft, and it is estimated that not less than 400 were killed in Salem and its vicinity.

Witchcraft was a common belief in Europe and Great Britain until the middle of the 17th century. Indeed, it is not altogether extinct in the present age. Christianity imbibed it from Judaism. It was abolished by act of Parliament in 1736. This belief is still surviving, giving rise to a belief in supernatural power which makes people fear it in all spirit manifestations.

It is attributed to the Devil by the churchmen where the manifestation cannot be otherwise accounted for; while the scientist indulges the hope that some unknown law will be discovered to solve the mystery. There is nothing that people more desire than to bask in the smiles of Madame Grundy, and nothing is so much feared as her prowess. There are many men who have witnessed spirit manifestations that absolutely demonstrate spirit return and communion, and yet declare that they are not Spiritualists. So one who has solved profound mathematical problems might say, "I am not a mathematician," and WOULD, if mathematics were as unpopular as Spiritualism, is expressing the hope that some law will be discovered that will prove mathematics to be a delusion. Such is the illogical method of scientific reasoning! So much for Madam Grundy's smiles and favors.

The Prophets were supposed to be inspired by the tutelary god or gods of the Jews, and the witches were supposed to be controlled by non-human supernatural beings. In all their revelations, not a word nor a hint in regard to existence beyond the grave is given; while the very purpose of Spiritualism is to reveal continued life after so-called death, and teach mankind grand and glorious truths not taught in the Bible.

It is true that Paul was a Spiritualist, and this fact has led thousands to believe that he was a Spiritualist in the modern sense of that word. It is clear to anyone who will think, that the beings who controlled the prophets and the witches were not once human dwellers on the earth, but were supposed to be either God and his angels controlling the prophets, or the Devil and his angels controlling the witches—all SUPERNATURAL BEINGS. This belief prevailed in regard to the mission of Jesus, as contained in the synoptic gospels, and very doubtful in the fourth gospel.

It will be remembered that Paul is not mentioned in any of the gospels, and not for many years after his crucifixion. When Paul said, "Who art thou, Lord?" and the Lord said, "I am Jesus" (Acts 9:5). And in all his epistles he claims his revelations are from the Lord, except when he speaks from his own consciousness.

What he most clearly teaches is the concept that the resurrection of Jesus brought life and immortality to light. This seems to be the burden of his theme. "We are saved by faith and not by works, lest any man should boast," and that there is no remission of sins without the shedding of blood. The epistle to the Hebrews is the clearest of his teachings on this part of the subject.

But to the Corinthians he was more explicit in regard to his Spiritualism. None could inherit eternal life except those who believed in his teachings. His Spiritualism differed from modern Spiritualism in many respects. Before his conversion he was a Jew. After his conversion he believed that Jesus gave life and immortality only to those who believed in and accepted the conditions he prescribed. This is in no way like modern Spiritualism. Paul was a Christian Spiritualist: that is to say, there would have been no Spiritualism had there been no resurrection of Jesus. Modern Spiritualists have no such a conception. Therefore neither Paul nor the members of the various churches to whom he addressed his epistles were Spiritualists in the modern sense of the word.

Our attention is now called to the doctrines taught in the synoptic gospels. The reader will remember the account of Jesus recorded in Luke 2:40 et. seq.: "And the child grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon him." Their parents missed him on their return from Jerusalem, and after three days they found him "sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them and asking them questions" (Luke 2:46).

The inference is that he was mediumistic. That he should disappear at the age of twelve, just when he had made such an impression on the learned doctors of Jerusalem, and return at the age of thirty, is significant of the fact that in the eighteen years of his absence he went to India and was there indoctrinated in the Buddhistic system. It is reasonable to conclude that, being a Jew, he conceived the idea of converting his nation to Buddhism, assuming the prerogative of king, and establishing a kingdom of heaven on earth, the "Father in heaven" being the sole monarch, and he his vice-gerent on earth.

When brought before Pilate, who asked him, "Art thou the king of the Jews? and Jesus said unto him, thou sayest it" (Matt. 27:11). If anyone doubts the meaning of his reply, let him turn to the 28th chapter of John, verse 36: "Jesus answered [Pilate]: 'My kingdom is not of this world.'" In the Last Supper: "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread and blessed it and gave it to the disciples, and said: Take, eat; this is my body. And he took the cup and gave thanks, and gave it to them saying, 'Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament which is shed for many, for the remission of sins. But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom" (Matt. 26:26, et seq.).

Jesus frequently speaks of the establishment of his kingdom. He had a presentiment that his death was nigh at hand, and declared that his kingdom would be established in his generation. "And he said unto them: Verily I say unto you that there be some of them that stand here which shall not taste of death till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power (Mark 9:1).

This is not what Modern Spiritualism teaches. The Sermon on the Mount outlines that kingdom and specifies the qualifications of its subjects and the condition of life therein. The most extraordinary feature is that expressed in Matt. 26:24, to the end of the chapter: "Therefore I say unto you: Take no thought for yourself, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, nor yet for the body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body more than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air; for they sow not, neither do they reap nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin. And yet I say unto you that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothed the grass of the field which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? Therefore take no thought, saying 'What shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or wherewithal shall we be clothed? (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek.) For your heavenly father knoweth ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. Therefore take no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

This is implicit faith in and absolute surrender to Divine Providence; so absurd that no nation of people has ever attempted to practice it. This concept is supported by the Lord's Prayer: "Thy kingdom come in earth as it is in heaven; give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," which, if answered, the above teaching would be realized.

The Spiritualism of Jesus was a kingdom on earth and absolute surrender to Divine Providence. The prescribed qualifications of the subjects of Jesus, necessary to inherit the kingdom, are necessary as presented in the matter of the lawyer's questions and the answer of Jesus, Luke 18:18 et seq., is good spiritual doctrine, and this is worthy of the highest commendation; but his conception of a kingdom on earth after his death has no part in Modern Spiritualism.

There was no definite knowledge of life beyond the grave until it was revealed in 1848. That knowledge enables us to demonstrate the most important truth that was ever discovered—a truth of deeper meaning and greater significance than was ever conceived—a truth ignored in the Bible and all the so-called sacred books in the world, and this discovery will give rise to the greatest epoch in the history of mankind, meeting all the requirements of life, and completing the range of human research.

Bible Spiritualism! So it is; for the beings that controlled the prophets and witches were spirits who once dwelt on earth in human bodies; but their their revelations have been construed into dogmas which, being accepted as truths, have deluged the world in blood and brought on an age of darkness, despotism and superstition for more than a thousand years, never before experienced by mankind; and in modern times the Bible supports the dogmas of Mormonism, faith in the absurdities of Teed, the rantings of Dowie, and many other absurdities too numerous to mention, and no estimate of the evil and the mental slavery that still afflicts mankind and holds the people in ecclesiastical thraldom.

Bible Spiritualism is regarded as a matter of religion, and to those who think so it is identical with Modern Spiritualism, and they immediately conclude that Spiritualism is a religion, and forthwith organize Spiritual churches. But Spiritualism is not a matter of faith nor belief, but of actual demonstration. All that it affords to man is within human comprehension, requiring neither faith nor belief. There is nothing in human interests that transcends the comprehension of man, and therefore nothing to worship. There is nothing in the Bible that is good but what might be learned as well elsewhere; but there is much in it that should be learned nowhere. In a word, priestcraft is one of the ruling elements in our land.

Letter from Dr. Andrew Jackson Davis—He Pays a High Tribute to Henry C. Wright.

To the Editor:—In your Progressive Thinker, dated September 21, 1907, I find a clearly-expressed "Message from Spirit Henry C. Wright," addressed to me through the mediumship of Eva A. Cassell.

Inasmuch as I have not the pleasure of knowing the lady medium, nor her postoffice address, I trust to your well-known urbanity to give me space enough in which to openly express my exceeding thankfulness and unqualified acknowledgment.

In the fourth volume of the Great Harmonia, page 267, my impressions and profound convictions of the character and teachings of Henry C. Wright may be found faithfully recorded. This was written and published while Henry was yet at work in this material sphere of life. He very cordially and gratefully expressed to me his entire satisfaction therewith.

If your readers will turn to that record they will at once observe that the stalwart and noble-minded Henry shines and glows in every word through the mediumship of Eva A. Cassell, and hence my great satisfaction with the thrice-welcome message.

Henry C. Wright stood firmly for (1) anti-slavery; (2) emancipation and the advancement of women; (3) the right generation and progressive education of children; (4) temperance and a pure life—anti-freelove, anti-tobacco, anti-profanity, anti-vulgarity; (5) free religion, free speech, and universal justice.

This characteristic communication is the VERY FIRST WORD I have received from him since his withdrawal from earth. It is plainly evident that he is still at work along the same lines of human progress, and that he is enlivened by the same loving heart and governed by the same noble head.

ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS.

The Infinite Ocean.

I sit 'neath the sheltering branches
Kind Nature, our Mother, has wrought,
And musing survey the wide waters
Of the infinite Ocean of Thought.

Enchanted and drawn by the vision
Of wonders that meet me unsought,
I wade in the beautiful waters
Of the infinite Ocean of Thought.

Yet deeper and stronger the feeling
Of beauty and sweetness inwrought,
I bathe in the tidal waves rising,
Of the infinite Ocean of Thought.

Impelled by the passion of learning
Far more than my teachers have taught,
I plunge in the fathomless waters
Of the infinite Ocean of Thought.

Time and sense of the finite forsake me,
In the sense of infinity wrought;
I am lost in the measureless waters
Of the infinite Ocean of Thought.

I dwell in the Silence eternal.
Where Being's deep secrets are wrought,
And I hold pure communion with Nature,
In the Ocean of Spirit, Life, Thought.

There is labor and wonderful pleasure—
My toil is with happiness fraught;
There is knowledge beyond finite measure,
In the infinite Ocean of Thought.

Grand continents, beautiful islands,
And wonders that Nature has wrought—
They lure me unceasingly onward,
In the infinite Ocean of Thought.

Beyond all my earnest endeavor—
My knowledge—it seems but as naught—
I shall go on exploring forever
In the infinite Ocean of Thought.

For ages on ages, immortals
For Nature's deep knowledge have sought,
And still they are ardently searching
In the infinite Ocean of Thought.

Forever, and ever forever,
Will be mysteries still to be sought,
Inviting our noblest endeavor,
In the infinite Ocean of Thought.

A Sermon of Life.

"What Is Man, that Thou Art Mindful of Him?"

"Man Hath No Pre-eminence Over the Beast."

I once heard an orthodox preacher use this first sentence as a text for a sermon for his church. But how vague were his conclusions compared with the light of to-day.

Man was viewed in that discourse as a created being, created by some divine potentate as a servant to pander to the potentate's pride and vanity, and to sing his glory forever. No other use for man on earth was claimed during that hour of conservative ebullitions.

At that time, and while yet a boy, I thought the preacher's claims were eminently just; that what he called God had the right and the power to do as he pleased in all things; that if he saw fit to ordain some of his creatures to eternal happiness while others were ordained, or left, to sink to eternal woe, that was his own business, of which his creatures had no right to complain.

But in later years I found there was an element at work in my mental make-up leading me far away from the preacher's plane of thought. I could find no personal God anywhere, no absolute First Cause for Nature. Nature, as we view it to-day, is an eternal fact that cannot be destroyed or injured in the least, and harmony pervades infinitude, and by virtue of this harmony the entities of the infinite life were moulded into objective form.

Some claim there was intelligence running through all the moulding of form. But what is intelligence? Intelligence, as we understand it to-day, presupposes eternal knowledge by an organization who knew all things from the beginning. From the beginning of what? No man can tell.

The best definition of intelligence I can find to-day is conscious relationship, or harmony of forces by virtue of which appears the objective universe from the tiniest sea-shell, only visible through a thousand-force magnifying lens, to the most ponderous world of four million miles in diameter.

This gives a rational view of what we might call animal life. But is animal life eternal?

Forms may dissolve, disintegrate and fade away, but there seems to be an eternal force-essence that can never die, of which man's inner nature is a part. But how this force-essence, or these force-essence entities come to assume so many forms is not clear to my mind.

Some claim that man is the culmination of Nature's efforts at unfoldment, after which, like the trees of the forest, disintegrates to what we might call complete decay, to be brought up by the same forces again to the plane of man, and that the brute and lower animate formations were but steps or rungs in the ladder to regain this estate. But for lack of more interior knowledge, I will let this claim pass as a blank to be filled in by and by, only this: I cannot conceive that the dog or horse, or forms of life on what we call the lower planes, will ever reach to man's estate, any more than I can conceive that man, in soul-essence, will ever be, or ever was, other than human.

The horse, the dog, the cat, are distinct life entities, distinct from all other life entities, and could not unfold to other than horse, dog or cat, and with man may and do survive the ordeal we call death. That man survives the change of death, many perhaps believe, some on faith alone, whatever that may be, or the say-so of someone who may have lived thousands of years in the past, while others discard faith as an idle dream and boast a knowledge of both spirit existence and spirit return, not only of the existence and return of the human spirit, but also of the horse, the dog, the cat, and of other forms of life.

It was on an autumn day in '56, and while at work in my field here in Oregon, and not having seen my sister Jane, whom I had left in the East, for eleven years, nor knew of her demise, I heard her familiar voice calling my name, "William, I am here." I turned in the direction whence the calling came, and saw my sister standing in open sky, surrounded by what appeared to be a fleecy cloud. The same form, the same-appearing garments, the same curls and shade of hair, and with all the same sweetness of soul. Sister taking the lead we conversed for perhaps fifteen minutes on matters of which we alone were concerned.

In those days we had only a monthly mail from the East to Oregon, but I hastened by writing letters to the old home to ascertain if there was any foundation for the vision I had seen, and learned that Sister had been in spirit life about nine years at the time of the vision.

One night in later years, and in winter time, a beautiful dove came, or seemed to come, through the walls of my dwelling, and into my bedroom, and, seemingly without the least fear, walked over my bed as though seeking for food. But before the bird appeared in my room, I heard a soft, sweet cooing as of an earthly dove. And I have heard other and similar coolings since that time, when no dove appeared.

It has been said that the dog is man's best friend. Be that as it may, I will admit he is a faithful friend of man.

In the early days in this country old Lion seemed to be the junior partner of the farm—ever watchful to keep cattle from breaking in to the injury of the growing crops, or hawks from sailing low to carry off a fowl, and to bark the wolves away that would prowl around at night. It was reported one day that old Lion was killed. I saw nothing of his spirit for a long time, and in my feelings had said, "Good bye, old doggie"—never expecting to see him more. But early one morning as I was going to the barn to attend my stock, old Lion, seemingly in all the perfection of form and activity of the days of his youth, met me at the gate and was as watchful and seemingly as solicitous for my safety among the cattle as in days of yore.

I have owned several other dogs that, after their death, returned to me in spirit.

Nor should we forgot the faithful Susie, on whose back I rode, and who pulled my plow and drew my cart for twenty years. Susie was a gentle and patient animal, and at times seemed really to have a care for the home. And when Susie became weak from age, it was necessary for my sons and myself to raise her to her feet every morning, at which time, at our approach, she seemed to express her thanks in her own peculiar way. But the poor brute could live no longer. A friend around whom our affections twined passed away, but returned again in spirit form in a few months' time and was seen in the barn-lot, seemingly as contented as ever, and with the appearance of her prime of life.

As Ella Wheeler Wilcox seems to think cats survive the ordeal we call death, I feel more free to add my testimony in that direction.

There were three cats about our home: Old Tom, Big Puss and Little Puss, and as we needed but one cat about the premises, the question arose which two of the three should be given away. I suggested Big Puss and Little Puss, but keep Tom. I had no thought but that the matter was settled in that way, and was quiet about the affair, until a few days later, in the darkest shades of night, two of the cats, Tom and Little Puss seemed to come through the walls of my house, into the room where I was sleeping, and actually began to talk to me, Big Tom beginning first.

"We heard the talk about getting rid of us, but I felt safe from danger under your care; yet we have been cruelly slain. I hoped for several years yet of happy life in your home,"—and seemed grieved at his loss.

Then Little Puss took the floor and said: "I, too, was slain; was just beginning to realize real life, in which I should have been happy. We leave our home with sorrow."

Next morning I inquired about the cats and learned that what the two cats had told me in regard to their fate was only too true—drowned in a pool of water.

A few weeks later the same two cats made me another visit in spirit, nor were they more reconciled to their fate.

Birds and beasts live in spirit life, and have a language in common with men—man being but a higher grade of animal.

Deep in the shades of night, in this the 45th degree of north latitude, when all things were measurably still, I have heard the shrill notes of the Florida redbird, "Weeper, weeper, weeper," when at that time—winter season—such bird was, in all probability, not within two thousand miles of Oregon. The bird seemed to come to my home to renew old acquaintance, as in my childhood days the redbird was my favorite of all the fowls of the leafy wood, thus, perhaps, unfolding a soul or spiritual relationship, which relationship is ever new, is ever sweet to enjoy.

And in similar shades of night not only have I heard the sweet cooing of the dove, as before mentioned, but seemed to catch waves of thought as they emanated from the wild bird—thoughts that were pure and refining and seemed to say, in part, "In our home all things are common. A divine relationship runs through all Nature. We live in love, one with another."

Carlisle Petersilia, in his portrayal of home-life "over there," presents a grandpa and a small boy and girl, who, it seemed, recognized a fond relationship on sight, and sought wherewith to pass the happy hours away. It was agreed that dogs would be favorite playmates for the children. But where could they find them? "Oh, I know where mine is," says the boy, "I have heard him bark."

"Where?"

"In the valley where dogs have their home."

It was implied that there was quite a distance between the boy's home and the country of the dogs, yet there was such congenial relationship between the boy and the dog as to enable the boy to make choice from sound of voice, and judging from the sequel, a better selection could scarcely have been made.

This universe is a unit of life, an endless sea of harmonious entities, and from this sea sprang objective Nature, or rather of this sea objective Nature has ever formed a part. Consequently life is one continuously flowing stream, not one drop too much nor one drop too little, and though turbulence at times may mark its pathway, yet in the great march of Time, such turbulence is more seeming than real. And when we come to the more sweet relationship of entities—spirits at home in summerland, whether in prison or out of prison—there is a fellow-feeling there that "surpasseth understanding." No mortal tongue can tell the depths and force of love prevailing there—love which lifts the fallen up and comforts the mourner. No matter for race or color, all are children of our Father and Mother Nature, and each eventually shall be bountifully fed on the sweet bread of life.

Thus seeing man's relationship to the Deific Life, it is well we should be "mindful of Him," and that, except in degree, "Man hath no pre-eminence over the beast." WM. PHILLIPS.

The Riches of To-Morrow.

The far-off, unknown lands are where
We toilers ever long to roam;
We dream of splendid chances there,
Neglecting those we have at home;
We risk our lives on stormy seas
And travel over desert plains,
Forsaking scenes too dull to please,
Proceeding far for golden gains.

We venture forth and then we learn
That fairest of all lands were those
To which we never may return—
The lands of happy long-agos;
To-morrow is a realm in which
The feet of men were never set;
To-day's a country fair and rich
That we may think of with regret.

Some Experience with the Ouija Board.

To the Editor:—To prove that our spirit friends, our invisible helpers, are constantly near us trying to impress helpful ideas upon our minds, I will relate a peculiar occurrence happening at our house recently.

I am the possessor of an Ouija board, and have had some remarkable messages from the same, but seldom use it because of the many unreliable spirits getting control.

A friend, whom I know to be as honest as the day is long, sat down with me one afternoon and endeavored to get a comforting message for herself, when a spirit tried to send her home, telling her that her stepson was killed by a boiler explosion. Neither of us could feel that there was any truth in the message, and I induced her to remain until 5 o'clock. True enough, there was no truth in the message, but ten days later my husband had a boiler explosion, and spirit helpers aided him to jump from the locomotive, a distance of 15 feet, and to escape with badly burned hands and face.

Thinking I would hear of his accident, which happened through defective boiler work, he sent me a message. After walking one and a half miles to have his burns and scalds dressed he sent a message to me, stating he was O. K., was smoking his pipe.

Angels must have helped me all that day. He came home at 2 o'clock the next morning. I have had to dress and undress him as I would a child. It will be several weeks before he will be out of the doctor's care. His friends tell me he must have carried horseshoe nails in his pockets; but we both thank our spirit friends. He wasn't thinking about our "Heavenly Father" when trying to find a way to escape. He says it seemed as if he were entering a room 8 feet by 8 feet, and surrounded by flames inside and outside.

Truly, I feel sorry for the editor of Higher Science, knowing he is crippled bodily. It seems terrible that he is so materialistic that he can see nothing to comfort him in occult matters.

I do believe in telepathy, thought transference, and it is a comfort to me to know we do not have to talk always to convey our thoughts.

The Progressive Thinker is like wine: "It improves with age."

Results Not Satisfactory to Him.

To the Editor:—The statement made that four Spiritualist journals have suspended publication seems to argue one of two or three reasons why they suspended: They must have become unpopular to the mass of Spiritualist readers, or the public has become indifferent to the teachings of Spiritualism, as set forth in the suspended publications; or perhaps some or all of them lacked good financial management.

Whatever the cause, certain it is that no subject is paramount to that of spirit return, and the blessing it is able to bring to mankind.

I do not yet know that the dead return and comunicate with the denizens of earth; I hope that they can and do. If we have immortal souls, we should know that such is the fact, and should conscientiously avail ourselves of all the proof we can get to substantiate the same. This I am doing, and doing it with the thought that no one can be engaged in a better cause.

I journeyed four hundred miles last May to St. Louis to attend materializing seances given by a noted medium of that city. I went with the hope and belief that materialization is a fact, and that I would witness a demonstration that would carry conviction to my mind. I regret to say that the manifestations were not satisfactory. It is true that forms appeared, and talked with the sitters, but the room was so dark that only a dim outline of the forms could be discerned. Their faces, in some instances, appeared to be veiled in darkness, while their hands appeared to be somewhat white.

It is my hope that spirits can materialize, and that I may at some time and place receive proof of its reality. If it be true that we are not immortal, that death ends all, then I am sorry, indeed, that I was ever born. I cannot see what great importance attaches to this life if there be no other in which man can unfold his powers in unending progression. S. A. WOODMANSEE.

Indian Spiritualism in Mexico.

After a year's sojourn in the mountains and wilds of old Mexico, I have mingled with the wild tribes of Indians I found there and noticed their customs and manners of simple life, etc.

While with them I found they all have a belief in the return of spirits, or ghosts as they seem to think they are, and tell tales of having seen the departed forms of friends and relatives moving around the burial places where their bodies were laid at rest.

Many of these children of the wild forests and hills have a religion of their own, and if no Catholic teaching has reached them, are not bigoted in following their own ideals. Spirit return seems to hold a strong place in their minds, and I have seen many look upward in the sky murmuring some request to the spirit they think they can reach with their voice. I have sensed much spirit influence when among them, and have found a number of lessons that I find are useful in helping development of my own mediumship. These Indians are descendents of the old Aztec races of the past. They isolate themselves in these high mountains, from 3,000 to 5,500 feet elevation, follow the hunting of game—deer, wild turkeys, pheasants, etc., and cultivate a little corn, beans and sugar cane for their own use. I found them to number about 10,000 people, of all ages. Their country is very rich in minerals, and soils suitable for agriculture, with numerous streams of water running the year around. I found there the large species of locusts; their voice made the trees ring with sharp noises that one finds hard to become accustomed to; also wild honey of the purest kind. I was led to think of the life of St. John in the Bible history in the wilderness living on these two products of this warm climate. WM. H. BRIGGS.

CLINTON CAMP.

A Few Notes from Its Retiring President.

Summer has come and gone once more. Nature, that incomparable artist, is already tinting the trees and herbage with her inimitable hues, and the rustle of the fallen leaves, chased by the autumnal winds, sounds the preliminary notes of the annual requiem played by her orchestra over the dying year.

The strenuous "vacation" period, otherwise the camp-meeting season, is ended, and the various camps have folded their tents, put out the lights, closed up the cottages, boarded up the rostrums and gone into their yearly hibernation, while those of us who have toiled and planned to make them a success may sit down to take an account of stock and figure out the net results of the season's work.

What that result has been throughout the entire field of camp work I cannot undertake to say, but if I may take Clinton Camp as a fair example, I should conclude that it was highly satisfactory.

A great deal of pessimistic talk has been indulged in regarding the backwardness—even failure of the camp meetings, but I am persuaded that this phase of the work has, at least, kept pace with the movement in general. Twenty-five years of intimate association, including nine years of active management, qualifying me, I think, to speak with some authority upon this matter, and I do not hesitate to say that the properly-conducted camp meeting is one of the best and most successful means for the dissemination of the truths, facts and phenomena of Spiritualism.

True, many trials, disappointments and discouragements meet us at every turn, but earnest, unselfish labor, with an eye single to the good of the cause and camp, will overcome every obstacle and rout every enemy.

The history of the M. V. S. A. is, in the main, the experience of all camps, no doubt: a record of struggles, conflicts and dissensions, largely the result of inexperience.

But slowly those disagreements have grown less until to-day there is practically a unanimity and harmony in the management that is good to see. Along with this better feeling came the lifting of a mortgage of nearly $5,000 that for years had clung like a wet blanket to our beautiful park. Still we were not "out of the woods." Obligations in the form of promissory notes aggregating several hundreds of dollars came in, demanding payment—obligations which, partly through careless bookkeeping, partly through frequent change of management, were unknown to and unexpected by the officers and board, but they were paid in full out of the current revenues.

The failure and bankruptcy of a mutual insurance company in which our property was insured not only sunk the premiums we had paid in, but mulcted us of several hundred dollars in assessments to meet the liabilities of the defunct concern, while, of course, we had to pay heavy premiums for new insurance in other companies. These are only a few specimen examples of the difficulties the management has met and overcome in the last few years, while many hundreds of dollars have been put into valuable and needed improvements. The entire debt of the Association is not over $500, all of it held by its own members, while we have unincumbered title to property valued at from twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars—a park of twenty acres—one of the most beautiful and best fitted for the purpose in the country.

The last session of the M. V. S. A. was the most harmonious and, in some respects, the most successful it has ever known.

The bounty of Nature and the skill and industry of Brother Chambers, of the park committee, combined to make the grounds delightfully pretty. The lectures were of the highest order and the mediums among the best and most satisfactory we have ever employed.

Through the economy in management, aided by the persistent efforts of Brother N. G. Omans, our financial returns were such that we were able to liquidate several hundred dollars of back indebtedness and have a snug sum in the treasury after paying all running expenses.

Having carried the burden of office as president and chairman for the last nine years, I felt compelled to ask to be relieved from further service in that capacity, and Mr. E. L. Kilby, a well-known business man of Ottumwa, Iowa, who has been identified with the camp from the start, was chosen to fill the position. Brother Kilby is a man of great energy, and with the aid of the efficient and experienced secretary, Mrs. Anderson, and an excellent board, will not only continue the success of the past, but probably exceed it.

A personal word in conclusion: As I am now footloose for the camp-meeting season, I would be pleased to arrange to visit and speak at as many camps next season as possible. I desire especially to visit the Eastern camps, and those en route, and renew the associations of the years agone.

My long experience in camp-meeting work enables me to choose the subjects best adapted to camp-meeting audiences. W. F. PECK.

OVER THE RIVER.

Over the river voices are calling,
Calling to me from the spirit zone;
Softly they whisper: "Be not disheartened,
Angels are watching over their own.

Soon will the Reaper come with his sickle
Bear from our sight some loved one away;
Into each life must come times of parting—
Someone is missed from some home each day.

Over the river faces are smiling,
When the pale boatman brings us ashore;
Eager hands waiting there to receive us,
For they well know when earth-life is o'er.

Then in that mansion where all are gathered,
Once more united never to part;
O, what a greeting—sorrow forgotten,
Pleasure and joy in every heart.

BUSINESS AND MORALITY.

The Exposure of Wrongdoing and the Injury Wrought Thereby—An Important Lesson to Spiritualists.

An ingenious communication to the "Outlook" on "A New Standard of Morality" deals with what the writer seems to consider a new aspect of the American moral conscience. The letter is written from San Francisco, and its author is evidently under the happy impression that the ideas against which he protests are peculiar to San Francisco and perhaps Wall street.

"I have talked with a number of leading business men," he writes, "and I find the same thing running through all their statements. * * * The fundamental doctrine seems to be that this country exists to do business in, to make money in, to get rich in; anything that interferes with the essential purpose is wrong, including the ten commandments."

The writer goes on to say—what anyone knows who has been in San Francisco since the graft prosecution began to threaten the bribe-giver as well as the bribe-taker—that while it is generally conceded that bribes were given by business men, these men should not be prosecuted because their prosecution would injure the credit of the city and unsettle business.

The writer must have been living on a mountain top. Have not the cries, "You are injuring the city," "You are shaking the confidence of capital," "You are unsettling business," been raised to check every attempt at social or political reform? And are we not in the very midst of a general wakening to the dangers, the suicidal dangers, of this conception of the republic as merely a device for carrying on the processes of money making?

It is true that owing to special circumstances, and perhaps because of the natural bluntness of speech prevailing in the West, these ideals are there more candidly and definitely expressed. But throughout the nation, especially since the civil war, the American people have fixed their thought and energy upon material acquisition, and have come more and more to decide every question with that in view.

The writer from San Francisco cites as if it were a novelty another very familiar American fallacy. He refers to the theory expressed in all the clubs and wherever San Francisco business men congregate, that when a corporate official is solicited by a public official for graft under threat of official oppression, it is the duty of the corporate official to protect the stockholders. That is, the duty of men who are officials of corporations is first to their company, and second, if at all, to the commonwealth.

The prevalence of what the "Outlook's" astonished correspondent calls "a new standard of morality" is the fact which in men who think causes the greatest anxiety to-day. But if our awakened realization of the existence of this standard has caused anxiety, it has brought with it the will destroy it, and to renew in the national life that real principle of obedience to the law upon which all civilized society rests.

In this spirit to-day we are renewing our truer ideals of civic and social duty.

The above from the Chicago Evening Post illustrates an important point which it would be well for Spiritualists to consider. Have they not heard the oft-repeated, sonorous cry, "Let the frauds alone; you injure our cause when you expose its weak points." Just as if the exposure of wrongdoing could injure the truth!

"The Civilization of the Civilized." On Spirit John Pierpont's Lecture.

To the Editor:—In your issue of September 14 you publish a lecture from spirit John Pierpont through the mediumship of Mrs. Mary T. Longley, in which many good things are said, but which in its summary as to the value and quality of our civilization, will make a very false and unfortunate impression, when it sums it all up to say this:

"While thousands and millions of human souls are obliged to labor arduously for a scanty pittance until long after dark in order that they may keep a footing upon this planet earth, the word civilization is a disgrace to humanity."

If the fact part of the above statement is true that the masses of the millions have to labor their whole time to support self and family, it must be remembered, in the first place, that actual labor employment is a blessing rather than a curse; but if the masses have to work more hours than they should be required to for self support, it must also be remembered that these laboring and less propertied classes—say in the United States as a sample country—each year more than waste four billions of dollars in the direct outlay of money for tobaccos, narcotics and intoxicating beverages, not to count the unknown millions of expenses that the use of this will indirectly tax and levy upon the same class of persons for doctor bills, court costs, and the never-to-be-known expenses involved by what hygienic abuse of the human system that are incident to this blot of human conduct.

The billions and billions of money yearly thus more than thrown away by the poorer and laboring classes would more than meet their lack of sufficiency, and also, if applied, lessen the length of the laborer's liability to work.

Can the masses of the people violate their known moral and industrial obligation and then lay most of the hurtful consequences on the character of the civilization that is projected and planned for the social and political fabric of the nation. A person in a lecture or editorial can often and easily take a fragmentary view of the truth, and seemingly make an argument that is full of fallacy when viewed from the standpoint of the whole truth and all the facts. The argument that John Pierpont tries to make is for the laboring classes, who mean to decide against the validity of our civilization because they have to work too long and hard; but these people who complain waste annually in wasteful, riotous living, enough money that would more than supply all the needful lack of supply. It is very important that before we see and complain of the mote in our brother's eye, that we pull the beam out of our own. AMOS STECKEL.

IS IT TRUE?

That We Get What We Deserve?

Success is not fortuitous, and, on the whole, we get what we deserve in and from life. In its widest connotation success means the fullest development; narrowed, it indicates the fullest acquisition. The truest success is that which develops all faculties pro rata with the means of satisfying them; and the great secret of this is work—enthusiastic work. Lukewarmness cannot bring success; that can only be attained by one whose heart is in his task, whose brain is one fire, whose energy, concentrated hour by hour on the hourly task, will drive difficulty away.

The man or woman in any and every sphere who has a true joy in what he does, makes his own opportunities, creates his own ladder, plants it against the steeps, and is strong to climb. CONCENTRATION THERE MUST BE OR THE STRUGGLE CANNOT AVAIL. Work for something definite. Aspire to the possible, not the impossible; know your own capabilities and use them to the utmost; believe in your power to conquer. And never let another's failure be the stepping stone to your success; the success so gained will not satisfy.

A great compensation balance, Emerson assures us, regulates human life, and it is too true that success often is purchased at the cost of happiness. This need not be. Working with enthusiasm and concentration, working so that we may advance in life, yea, even into the living peace, we may legitimately attain a true success. H. F. BIRKETT.

HUMANE EDUCATION.

Take The Progressive Thinker and Make the Acquaintance of Advanced Minds.

To the Editor:—In the July number of The Progressive Thinker I read a lecture delivered by Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle on "Humane Education." This lecture would well pay for three years subscription to The Progressive Thinker. In these thoughts there is surely furnished food for progressive thinking. I would like to thank this lady for her most highly interesting views. Those who can leave with us food for noble thought have left a legacy of untold riches. Let us learn to appreciate these blessings. Take The Progressive Thinker and make the acquaintance of advanced minds.

In looking into the eyes of the animal there seems to be a voice saying, "I am of God; he who loves me, loves God, otherwise they know not that God is love."

In the quiet of our highest moods our expanded consciousness may be touched with that harmony which sings through the weeds as well as the flowers, and we would hesitate to break the stalk that gives it life. So universal is this God that we do not realize the fullness of his love. Let us try to see wisdom's ways in each struggle as we go from day to day on our way to better knowledge of life's true meaning. If you are seemingly quite alone in life, be cheerful. If the world should never find you, find yourself. In the silence of your own soul feel kindly, and have courage, for the time will come to you when brighter, sweeter hopes shall be yours. Learn to gather from all that comes along some deeper meaning than the surface of things. It will not be long, if you are true to duty as a private soldier, before you may be promoted, and the world may need you, as you will need a greater world to act in.

BY T. A. BLAND.

"It is a historic review of the progress of the nineteenth century on all lines. But the element that makes it universally popular is its human interest."—Chicago Record-Herald.

"A broad-minded lover of his fellows, Dr. Bland delights in giving credit to those men and women who have said things or done things to help forward the welfare of mankind."—Chicago Post.

"It contains biographies of some forty men and women whose live thoughts and heroic deeds gave character to the most wonderful century of the world's history."—Farm, Field and Fireside.

"It is just such a book as one might expect from a man who looks back over seventy-six years spent in tireless pursuit of high ideals."—Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, in Unity.

"The work is written in an easy, pleasing style, and is so interesting that we doubt if one reader in a score who commences one of the sketches will lay the book down until he has finished it."—The Arena.

It has 254 pages, is bound in best cloth with gold title. Price $1.00.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Reincarnation.

Its Meaning and Its Proofs, as Presented by Mrs. Anna Besant, the Greatest of Living Theosophists.

To many people [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune] the round of reincarnation carries with it an idea alien, almost grotesque. Even men who in their youth studied "the humanities" and were familiar with the many allusions to it in Greek and Roman authors—men who had taken joy in Plato's lofty philosophy and Cicero's polished periods—such men never regarded as serious the belief on which the greatest classical authors based their views of life and framed their canons of morality. However deep their reverence for the master minds of antiquity, this universal belief has been waved aside as a pagan superstition, ignored rather than rejected, too little thought of to be considered.

When from classical authors the student turns to the vast range of oriental teachings, reincarnation is found to be interwoven with the texture of all schools of philosophy and all systems of religion. It is imbedded in every scripture and forms the corner stone of common daily life.

In India now, as in the older days, every peasant recognizes as an unquestionable fact that he has been many times reborn on earth, and prepares himself for a coming rebirth; rebirth is an active factor in his daily life.

In the early days of Christianity, as previously among the Hebrews, the pre-existence of the soul was taught, and, as Origen said, each man receives a body according to his deserts and his former actions. Only in medieval Europe did the teaching slip for a while out of sight, and even then the heretics whom Rome persecuted kept alive the doctrine despite rack and stake.

In the time of Charles II. of England the doctrine again raised its head, and some curious pamphlets still are in existence wherein it is asserted. Geniuses like Goethe saw its necessity; poets like Wordsworth sang:

"Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
The soul that rises in us, our life's star,
Hath elsewhere had its setting,
And cometh from afar."

But the ordinary man, the man in the street, knows naught of it, and ever asks, when told that he has lived on earth before:

"Why don't I remember it?"

How should we answer him?

First, there are many who remember their past lives, both in the East and in the West—some clearly and definitely, others in flashes, in detached scenes. But the fact remains that for most their past lives are a blank. The reason is simple enough: Man is an immortal intelligence, clothed in material bodies; and while this immortal, in his spiritual body, knows and remembers his past lives on earth, he fails, as a rule, to impress on his mortal body the memory of the experience that it has not shared.

This brain, this body, has not lived before; it is a new garment for an ancient spirit, and knows naught of the experiences through which that spirit has pased, clad in other bodies. Our present bodies do not keep even a record of their own past; we forget more than we remember. Only if we throw a man's body into a trance and unmb his brain, can we summon from the storehouse of his memories of this life the details that have vanished from his waking consciousness. But while we can, in the trance, reach the memory in his astral and mental bodies, we cannot by such means draw down his spirit and compel him to reveal the memories he treasures in the spiritual body, which alone passes from life to life, unaffected by birth or death, unborn and undying.

Only the free spirit can impress upon his new brain the memories of his past, and what chance does the ordinary man give for the making of such impressions? His mind ever is rushing outward to surrounding objects and filling itself with ideas belonging only to the present or the immediate future. As easily might the most delicate and tender breathings overtop the rattle and the whistling of the trains, the cars, the motors of a Chicago street as the subtle music of the spirit overbear the rush of thronging activities in the human brain.

He who would remember the past must step aside from the tumult of the present, and in the stillness of the senses and in the quiet of the mind the figures of the past shall mirror themselves in silence and memory shall dawn in the darkness, and he shall know what he has been. Concentration, deep and silent calm, these enable the spirit to impress the brain.

Apart from memory, what proof of past lives is there for our man in the street? One experience most have had. On a first meeting one sometimes is more at home with a stranger than with one beside whom one has lived for years. A stranger? Nay, an ancient friend, and spirit calls to spirit across the veils of unfamiliar flesh. And sometimes, instead of a sudden attraction, an equally sudden repulsion springs up; it is spirit calling to his mortal body: "You are in the presence of an ancient foe." Who has not known these affinities and these repulsions—voices of the past sounding in the present?

A child is born with certain faculties; one has a marked facility for figures, another for languages, another for music or for painting. Whence comes the differences?

Modern science assures us that mental and moral qualities are not transmissible; but the qualities are there, prior to all training and education.

One child is born a genius, another an idiot; one is born a saint, another a criminal.

Is Nature a lucky-bag out of which come newly-created souls, dowered so differently, born with blessings or curses wrought into the substance of the body?

Unless each of us has a past, in which we are born, by what law, by what justice, are we born with tendencies that carry us to fame or draw us to crime?

A man's innate character determines his destiny in this life. Who gave him that character?

His parents? Science says no. God? Justice and love forbid the new creation of a criminal soul. Himself? Aye; we reap in this life what in another we sowed, and if the harvest be poor, none but the sower is responsible.

When once we realize the grandiose scheme of human evolution, the germ of divinity sown on earth to grow into the perfect likeness of its Parent, then we see that what we call sin is only ignorance, lack of experience, youth of the unfolding life. There is no height of splendor into which man may not grow, for he truly is God incarnate upon earth, and the Christs of the race are but the fair first-fruits of the universal human harvest which the future shall disclose.

POWER OF BRAIN, STRENGTH OF WILL, DEFTNESS OF FINGER, NOBILITY OF CHARACTER—THEY ARE ALL OF OUR OWN WEAVING; WE MAKE THE GARMENTS THAT WE WEAR. NOT ONE OF THE MISERABLE WAIFS OF OUR FOULEST SLUMS BUT SHALL, BY REPEATED BIRTHS, RISE TO PERFECTED MANHOOD, TO MANIFESTED DIVINITY. SUCH IS THE PROMISE CONTAINED IN THE WORD REINCARNATION.

Schools and Infidels.

The desire of many theologians, that infidel writings be suppressed by law, is a remnant of the old spirit that used to burn infidels at the stake. Thousands of people were executed because they would not swallow the absurd creeds of the ecclesiastics. This world-insanity lasted about a thousand years. Theologians have a poor opinion of infidels indeed. Infidels are looked upon as monsters by a certain class of people who use their names to scare children with.

Many infidels have struck terrific blows for liberty, political and religious; liberty of conscience. If it was not that scientists had drilled reason into the minds of the people, Christians would be burning heretics yet and cutting each other's throats. There being so many hypocrites in the churches now, peace is preserved.

An infidel is a citizen who takes no stock in certain creeds of his accuser.

Mohammedans call "dogs of Christians" infidels. The founders of this nation, to keep peace and secure religious liberty, kept religion out of the Constitution and laws. They did not want to favor any special brand.

We will have domestic peace so long as fanatics do not force religion into the Constitution or enact church ordinances into laws. They have no right to force religion into the public schools, therefore Catholics are perfectly consistent in objecting to Bible reading in the public schools. While Catholics have a right to maintain sectarian schools, we think it unfortunate that they shut themselves off by walls and fences. This policy of isolation has been, and always will be a failure. It would be just as lawful to read the Talmud or Koran; and no public school teacher has any more right to use her position to influence them to become Christians, than she has to influence them to become Buddhists, Mohammedans or Shintoists.

Neither Jews, agnostics, infidels, atheists, freethinkers, Spiritualists nor Theosophists desire it.

If the maxims of Confucius were drilled into our pupils, we would not have so many impudent boys and girls with no respect for their elders.

WHY DID GOD CREATE SATAN?

Oh, why was life to Satan given?
He knew he would make war in heaven,
For God did surely see
That Satan, clothed with might and power
Would wait his most auspicious hour,
And then a traitor be.

Would use the power God had given,
Draw to his side the hosts of heaven,
To fight against their king,
And thus one-third of heaven's host
To God, their author, all were lost,
His praise no more they'd sing.

When hurl'd from heaven, like lightning flame,
Swiftly to our young world he came,
With all his demon host,
To circumvent our mother Eve,
With lies and guile he did deceive—
Thus all mankind were lost.

But God devised a counter plan—
God would himself become a man
To groan and bleed and die,
Thus make a sacrifice for sin,
That some from Satan he might win,
To reign with him on high.

But how can God's atoning blood
My record change, make evil good,
And pay the debt I owe
To those I've wronged by vile deceit,
Whose ruined lives I've made complete,
And who to hell must go.

For how can God the pardon give
Of those I've wronged? If still they live,
I must their faces see;
I must from them this boon receive,
For they alone this gift can give,
And from remorse set free.

But God says no, all who believe
Shall of my pardoning grace receive,
This is the gospel plan;
But all who will not thus believe
I never, never will receive
But will forever damn.

"The Spiritual Significance," or Death as an Event in Life." By Lilian Whiting. One of Miss Whiting's most suggestive, intensely interesting, spiritual books. It is laden with rich, thoughtful spirituality. Price 1.00.

"The Garden of Allah."

A Trenchant Criticism of a Preposterous Roman Catholic Book.

Having heard so much in praise of a novel by Robert Hickens, called the "Garden of Allah," I recently perused it, and I should like to comment on it in your columns from the Spiritualist's standpoint.

Whether or not the writer is a Roman Catholic, I don't know, but the whole moral of the book is to show that disobedience to a religious vow made to a priest of the Catholic church is a most awful and unpardonable sin, as terrible and wicked as murder, seduction, or robbery!

The entire teaching of the book, inculcating, as it does, an utterly false sense of duty to God and man, is so false and misleading that I feel compelled to enter my protest against it.

The story is very simple. A young English lady of high ideals and strong character goes to North Africa for the winter and meets, in the train from Tunis to Berri-Mora, a mysterious stranger—a strong and fascinating character, with whom she falls in love. Three-fourths of the book is taken up in describing the feelings of these two lovers, their words and thoughts, and particularly a graphic description of their African environment—the scenery, gardens, native life, atmospheric effects, life in the desert, etc., all of which is very interesting.

There is an air of mystery about this stranger around whom seems to hang a shadow of some awful crime, that makes him gloomy, morose and unhappy, and yet he passionately loves the English girl and they marry, and set off for a tour in the desert.

He is a man who has led a perfectly pure, blameless life, from a Spiritualist's standpoint; but his wife is a bigoted Roman Catholic, and suspects her husband to be somewhat of a freethinker, as he seems to shrink from priests. The latter and other true Catholics also shrink from him, and warn her against him, and it is darkly hinted that he must be a man with an awful crime on his conscience. Then finally comes "The Revelation." The husband confesses all to his wife. The reader's expectations are worked up to believing surely that this man has an awful past, must be a criminal of the worst kind, and when he has fully confessed all, his wife, who passionately loves him and is about to become a mother, thinks she is called on by God (which means the Catholic church and the advices of her Father Confessor) to abandon her husband and the father of her child and separate from him, and in the final chapter we read the pitiful story of a heart-broken, lonely mother, watching over a fatherless little boy in a beautiful African garden. And all this self-inflicted torture upon a good man and a good woman is supposed to be the "Will of God," and to be a sublime sacrifice to duty and religion! Anything more utterly false and untrue it would be difficult to imagine. The lesson is to glorify the church and priestcraft, to endorse the machinations and love of power over men's souls, which originated with a combination of designing, self-seeking, crafty men working for their own aggrandizement and glorification in centuries past, and who had the assurance to call themselves the True Church of God on Earth, and to place their "rules" of life, and the "vows" they succeeded in exacting from weak and ignorant young people, on a par with the will of God.

Their narrow-minded, bigoted conception of God and his laws for man's conduct on earth are to be taken by all the world as gospel truth, as a divine revelation, and if the priests can only catch their dupes young enough and mould their immature minds so as to believe that the useless, ascetic, self-absorbed, prison-like life of a monk or nun—everlastingly thinking about the salvation of their own souls and the counting of their beads, and the mumbling of empty prayers, is the kind of life that is most acceptable to God, then of course it is easy to understand how they can persuade their poor dupes that (as they, the priests, represent God on earth) any breach of their vows is a heinous sin.

Now all the crime this young man had committed was that after being immured for nineteen years in a monastery he met a man of the world who inspired him with the desire to see life, and he ran away—went to the desert where he met this English girl, and showed every wish and capacity to become a model husband and father.

In his confession he speaks of the torture he has been enduring, the "knowledge of the unpardonable nature" of his act. "It can never be wiped out. It is black on my judgment book forever"

"I believe in God, I love God, and I have insulted him. I have tried to forget God, to deny him, to put human love higher than love for him."

The blind, priest-ridden bigotry of the wife's mind is shown by the author's remarks where she is made to feel that in marrying a man stained with this unpardonable sin, her personality had been outraged: "She saw it, like a cloth that had been white and that now was stained with indelible filth." * * Anger came upon her, a bitter fury * * she was on her knees hating him, hating—yes, surely hating—God. It was a frightful sensation."

In her husband's confession of his "crime," he is made to say, "Always I have known that I was sinning against God, against you, against myself and my eternal vows."

Eternal vows, indeed! Just as if a merciful God could hold any human being to "vows" sweated out of him (so to speak) by crafty priests taking advantage of a youth's entire ignorance of what he was doing, of the world he was giving up.

The truth is we are sent into this world to learn each his lesson, and this cannot be accomplished, the soul cannot really grow, except by familiar association with our fellow creatures. We have to help others and love our neighbor as ourselves, to resist temptation, to do unto others as we would be done by; to be pure in heart, and to set a shining example to our weaker brothers, and further to perpetuate the race, to increase and multiply; to raise a family of noble sons and daughters who will be a credit to us when we are gone. This kind of healthy, vigorous, manly and womanly existence is ten times more acceptable to God (no matter what priests may teach to the contrary) than the prison-like life of a monk or a nun who shut themselves out from the world and selfishly think only of saving their own souls.

I except those who do useful work: teach school, nurse the sick, etc., but even they, when they go about dressed in gloomy black, with pale, drawn features, seeing nothing but woe and God's wrath, are objects of pity, and miss half the joy of life.

The whole teaching of the book is false; the hero committed no crime against God or man, and the fact that he and his wife could work themselves up into believing he had committed an unpardonable sin, simply shows the distorted views of life and truth and God's will toward us that crafty priests can instill into the minds of good Catholics if they can only have the training of them from childhood up.

There never was a truer saying than this: "The nearer we are to Nature, the nearer we are to God," and this man and woman are described as passionate lovers of Nature and pure and stainless in their past, and yet the man is branded as a criminal of the deepest dye because he refused to live the unnatural (therefore ungodly) life of a hermit when the God in him was calling out for a higher life and he found it.

The last words in the book tell us that this misguided wife rejoices that she has brought her erring husband back to the fold, and we are told "she sees a wanderer who at last has reached his home."

Certainly this poor, misguided creature has a singular idea of what constitutes "home."

Anyone who has the least glimmering of God's truth must know that the most holy place on earth is a home of love, and that implies the loving association of husband and wife, and the loving guidance and care of both father and mother (and not by one only) of these children during infancy, childhood and youth, and the greatest sin against God is to neglect this duty, and yet, here we see H. W. Hickens leaving his hero, the husband of a good woman (whom he truly loves and who loves him dearly) to lead a lonely, unhappy life, depriving his only child of fatherly care and immuring himself in a monastery "to save his own soul" whilst he is really an ignorant coward hypnotized by priests (and she) too) into committing a crime against his wife and a crime against his child.

Verily, the distorted way some people look at truth is a mystery past finding out.

The fallacy of the whole lesson taught by the book lies in the blasphemous assumption that because a youth is hypnotized by the ceremonials of the Catholic church into the belief that a vow of lifelong celibacy, silence and self-imprisonment in a monastery, made to a priest, is a vow made to God! In other words, the priest is God! and to change his mind about it and wish to be released of his vow is an unpardonable crime. As a matter of fact, God has nothing to do with it; it is priestcraft pure and simple, and it was really the voice of God urging him to live in the world and learn his lesson in life like other men.

Spiritualism and Religion.

To the Editor:—In The Progressive Thinker, August 31, I noticed an article entitled "Why Do Christians Reject Spiritualism?" In that article the writer says, "Spiritualism is the coming religion of the world." I would like to ask why he makes such a statement with so little to back it up.

What is Spiritualism?

I would answer by saying it has been scientifically demonstrated that when a person goes through the change called death, such person can, under favorable conditions, communicate with mortals in this life. Is there any more religion about it than there is when a person telephones from New York to some one in Boston?

What is religion?

"It is a certain system of faith, and the worship of God," or "human effort to obtain Divine favor."

Religion has no more to do with Spiritualism than it has with the telephone or the telegraph. It is just as sensible to say the telephone is the coming religion as it is to say Spiritualism is the coming religion of the world. Spiritualism is a science, and whatever there is about it that is not in accordance with science is a delusion or a fraud. Religion has no scientific basis; it is merely a belief.

I have been a Spiritualist during the past fifty years. I accept it as a scientific fact, not as a belief or a religion. Persons who call Spiritualism a religion have not been emancipated from old superstitions of the past.

Many Spiritualists say, "Spiritualism is my religion." It would be just as sensible to say the steamboat is my religion, or any other scientific invention. Therefore when we hear a Spiritualist say Spiritualism is the coming religion of the world, we may conclude that such person has not advanced very far from the superstitions of past ages.

FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

As Exemplified by Absolute Facts—A Condition of Things that Indicate a Dark Future Unless Remedied—A Problem for Spiritualists.

Once speaking of the "fortes" of great men, Artemus Ward suggested that George Washington's forte was in not having any of the modern statesmen resemble him to any remarkable extent. The same might be said of Jesus and his professed followers. He said a tree should be judged by its fruit and not by its professions.

This is a Christian country, but Judge Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, went further and officially decided that our government was technically a Christian government; for surely the church controls it as it does our educational system, and our social system as well.

The church is in the saddle—monarch of all it surveys; and what are its fruits? Saying nothing of ex-convicts and those not found out or not convicted, here is the number of adults (not juveniles) actually in prison at the times the United States census has been taken, and the ratio of same to population:

1850	6,737	1 to	3,442
1870	32,901	1 "	1,171
1890	82,329	1 "	760

For some mysterious reason the prison statistics of 1900 have never been given out, but an alleged "special census" of prison population was taken June 30, 1904, and reported at 81,772, as quoted in this paper for September 14. It is evident that the 1900 census returns of our Christian prison population was above 100,000, and the church being in supreme authority ordered the officials to either reduce it or entirely suppress it and accept a fake census gotten up to conceal the rapidly increasing crime ratio of our "Christian Civilization."

The "special" report quotes the prison population of 1890 at 66,803, but any person who will take the trouble to refer to the census report itself will see that it is 82,329. With the juvenile derelicts (14,846) added the total in "durance vile" was 97,175. Paupers, 73,043; insane, 58,866; inmates of all other asylums and elemosynaries, public and class, 111,910.

The above census reports show that in the short space of forty years our prison ratio increased 500 percent, reminding us of the oft expression: "going to hell across lots." Such rapid moral degeneracy as that is simply appalling. As the crime ratio of "pagan" races is not one-twentieth of what it is in Christian countries, it shows that the pagan religions bear fruit twenty times better than that borne by the Christian religion.

One important function of good government is to keep watch over the world, and if it sees anything anywhere—grain, fruit, breed, machine, method, weapon or system—that produces better results than our own, to get it, adopt it and avail ourselves of it. No difference what, we want the best.

Many of our great writers, scientists and men of learning have studied Buddhism and pronounce it superior to Christianity, and if they are right, why, as sensible people, should we not invite its transplantation in our soil and encourage its growth and development? S. R. SHEPHERD.

Forest Home Camp, Mich.

The 19th annual session of Forest Home Camp proved to be very successful. Camp opened August 4 and closed August 25. Our speakers were of the best, and highly appreciated. Mrs. Nellie Baade, of Detroit, Mich., was with us the first two Sundays. She came to us a stranger, but we soon learned to love her. Her lectures and messages were fine. She also gave a baptismal service which was very beautifully rendered.

Cora Fuller Williams, of Vicksburg, Mich., musician and elocutionist, was with us through the entire season, and was the life of the camp, was ever ready to respond with song or recitation.

Mrs. D. A. Morrill, of Grand Rapids, Mich., was with us the last two Sundays. She spoke to large audiences, which were all attention to her masterful discourse. She is also a fine message bearer. We will not forget Mr. Morrill, who has been a great help to our camp in various ways.

We had our meeting and entertainments during the week, which were very beneficial and enjoyable.

I would like to say to anyone wishing to spend the summer in the North, come to Forest Home Camp, at Snowflake, located on the shore of Intermediate Lake, and on the P. M. R. R. Trains stop at grounds. Nature has done all in its power to make this an ideal spot for rest and recreation. It is 40 miles south of Petoskey, the great summer resort.

The following officers of the Camp Association were elected for the ensuing year:

President, Frank Lesher, Mancelona, Mich.; vice-president, W. J. Nixon, Bellaire, Mich.; secretary, Millie Mitchell, Mancelona, Mich.; treasurer, Sadie Johnson, Central Lake, Mich.

The Psychic Riddle.

By I. K. Funk, D.D., LL.D., Editor-in-Chief of "The Standard Dictionary"; Author of "The Widow's Mite, and Other Psychic Phenomena," "The Next Step in Evolution," etc.

A book full of psychic suggestions, supported by startling experiences, all told in a wonderfully conservative way. It harmonizes with the judgment pronounced by The Review of Reviews, New York, on the author's previous publication of this subject: "A very sensible, cautious, level-headed piece of work all through;" and also with the judgment on the same book pronounced by the Cleveland Record: "There has never been so fair and painstaking a book put forth on this subject as this one." Price, $1.00.

"The Truthseeker Collection of Forms and Ceremonies for the Use of Liberals." Price 25 cents.

The People Must Advance in Honesty or Go Back to Barbarism.

If some unseen power would guide my pen,
And inspire my thoughts to write to men,
Of science, art and nature, I would stay in a den,
To give them facts of now and then.

Nature is sublime, awful and mysterious, but it takes the arts and science of men to make it useful, beneficial and more beautiful to mankind and the animal kingdom.

In a state of nature, the human race are on a level with the brute creation, but have the talents within their natures, for education to a high degree in worldly affairs, morally, physically, mentally and spirituality.

Human growth and development through the evolutionary process, has been slow and tedious during the past ages, on account of ignorance, prejudice, bigotry and superstition in the natures of mankind.

Nations often rise to a state of greatness, and then decay and pass away through human depravity.

Is it not strange that the advanced state of civilization, the so-called enlightened teachers, ministers and educators of christendom will continue to teach and promulgate that old myth about the fall of man, the temptation of Mother Eve and Father Adam, and in the partaking of that forbidden fruit in the Garden of Eden, causing all the woes and calamities of the human race? It is so preposterous, that advanced thought wonders that intelligent beings will continue to teach the old fable as a truth.

The intelligence of the twentieth century will not be able to overcome the errors of the awful teachings and doctrines of past centuries.

Blind faith and priestly teaching, in our day and generation, are yet in vogue all over the civilized part of the world.

Yet, it is taught that man and beast and all animal life of a physical nature, must suffer and die, because of original sin. Why should all the living creatures and kingdoms of creation have to suffer and die for the disobedience of one woman and one man? That is a mystery that is unexplainable by the priest. Freethinkers and Spiritualists do not believe there is a God of wrath and vengeance to punish mankind for their imperfections.

They see the nature, the power that creates and destroys; that builds up the mountains upon the earth's surface, and tears them down; that produces the animal, vegetable and mineral kingdoms of earth, and every living thing in the water, or above them, around or below.

Humanity beholds many beautiful things upon our planet, and above it in the skies, and Spiritualists rejoice in immortality of man. They comprehend the principle, that man is an eternal spirit, clothed for its earthly career, with a fleshly body, that must perish, while man as a spirit must live on for advancement and unfoldment until he reaches the higher spheres. Through progression, Morality, right living and doing, man reaches that blessed state of love, peace, harmony and happiness which is eternal.

On the mundane sphere we pass through sorrows, trials, troubles and great disappointments, but they are only experiences preparing mortals here for immortality over there.

At the time of transition we shall all be changed and assume spiritual forms, in order that we may progress more spiritually into the kingdoms of spiritual life and thought.

Spiritualists alone get evidence and knowledge of continued existence hereafter.

What the world needs in these degenerate dayys, is not so much religion among people, but to have the principles of honesty, morality, cooperation, good cheer, love and kindness instilled into the minds and thoughts of humanity everywhere.

What the masses should have at all times, are teachers and leaders of pure moral characters, and a high degree of genuine spirituality. Ever since the civil war in our country the worship of mammon has been the theme among the wealthy classes, and a few brainy men have monopolized the commerce of the world.

Graft and dishonesty have been on the increase until the nation is overwhelmed with human depravity and intemperance.

Think of the awful statistics of the great city of Chicago, in the 1906.

It has been estimated that nearly one hundred and fifteen million dollars were invested and used for intoxicating liquors, and twenty millions for houses of prostitution. Perhaps Chicago is no worse than other great cities of the nations.

The people of the world must be advancing honestly or they may go back to barbarism.

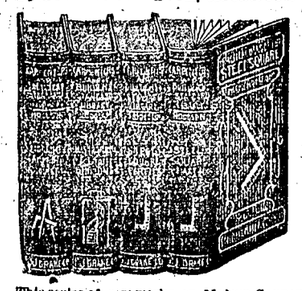
Ashtabula Temple, Ohio.

The First Spiritual Temple of Ashtabula will be dedicated October 5 and 6. The main service will be held Sunday, October 6.

A very attractive program is now arranged. It includes many of our most talented speakers. The musical part of the program will be a special feature. The ceremonies will be modest, not of an elaborate order, but we have spared neither time nor pains to make our program as it should be: simple, sweet, and thoroughly spiritual.

A general invitation is extended to all the readers of The Progressive Thinker and all friends of our beautiful truth to come and enjoy a spiritual feast on this occasion.

The Willing Workers, the Ladies' Aid, will serve meals in their new and spacious dining room, which is a model of neatness, tastefully decorated, complete in arrangement, attractive in appearance, every detail looked after systematically. There the glad hand is extended the same as elsewhere, and every possible effort will be made to give you good value for your money.



Our society deems it best to make the invitation general, so everybody is invited. We ask you all to come. A valuable feast is in store for you. Come and mingle with the sweet influences which will nourish your spiritual nature. You will also have an opportunity to subscribe for The Progressive Thinker, the greatest and grandest of them all.

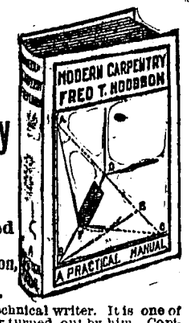
Practical, Mechanical SERIES

The Carpenter's and Builder's Standard Library.
By Fred T. Hodgson, Architect.

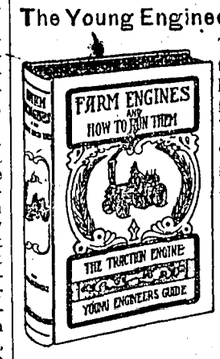


This series of new works on Modern Carpentery and Joinery are to-day the approved and most helpful set of practical builders' "educators," published, consisting of the Steel Square in two volumes, Modern Carpentry and Joinery, and Common Sense Handrailings. Price per set of 4 vols., cloth. $4.00; or $1.00 each; half leather, $6.00.

Modern Carpentry and Joinery

A Practical Manual.

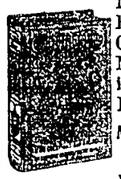
Just Published



By Fred T. Hodgson, M. O., A. A.

The well-known Technical writer. It is one of the best works ever turned out by him. Copiously illustrated with diagrams and figures, making the most intricate problems simple, definite and easily understood. Price, $1.00.

FARM ENGINES, and HOW TO RUN THE.



The Young Engineer's Guide

This book treats upon how to run a farm engine. The young engineer's guide. Fully illustrated. A complete instructor. This is the greatest of all works for the farmer. Price, cloth, $1.00.

By James H. Stevenson, and Other Expert Engineers.

The New Air-Brake Book

Invaluable to Trainmen, Engineers, Firemen, Conductors, Electric Motormen end Mechanics. The Latest and Best 1904 Edition.

Modern Air Brake Practice, Its Use and Abuse.

With Questions and Answers for Locomotive Engineers and Electric Motormen. By FRANK H. DUKESMITH. Price, cloth, $1.50

DYNAMO TENDING, For ENGINEERS

Or, Electricity for Steam-Engineers.

By HENRY C. HORSTMANN and VICTOR H. TOUSLEY, Authors of "Modern Writing Diagrams and Descriptions for Electrical Workers." Cloth 100 Illustrations. Price, $1.50.

The Handy Vest-Pocket ELECTRICAL DICTIONARY.

NEW EDITION.

A book every Engineer and Electrician should have in his pocket. A Complete Electrical Reference Library in itself. Cloth, red edges, Indexed, 25 cents; full leather, gold edges, indexed, 50 cents.

A MASTERLY WORK.
Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth
By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual consciousness selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth. $1.00.

The Majesty of Calmness, The Kingship of Self-Control, New Thought.

Two dainty white gift books by Wm. George Jordan, treating of individual problems and possibilities in the light of New Thought. They are very interesting and instructive and worth more than the price indicates, as an ornamental and valuable addition to the library. Price, 30 cents each.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE WIDOW'S MITE, AND OTHER PSYCHIC PHENOMENA.

BY ISAAC K. FUNK.

A remarkable book, of intense interest to all, whether Spiritualists or Materialists, investigators or believers.

The author has embodied in this book an account of his wonderful personal experience, and has culled from other sources the experiences of others, including scientists of world-wide reputo, making a volume of great value. 488 octavo pages. Price, cloth, $2.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

Published Every Saturday at 40 Loomis Street,

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year	$1 00
Six Months	50cts

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1907.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEAL.

The POSTAGE on papers has been increased to all the British possessions on this continent. . . On a single paper we are compelled to pay ONE CENTS each week, amounting to 52 cents a year, whereas previously we only paid the pound rates—a mere trifle. Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in The Progressive Thinker can be obtained at this office. Express charges or postage prepaid at the price named unless otherwise stated.

Evolution of a Sacred Symbol.

The origin of the halo—or nimbus around the head of saints and martyrs, and of Jesus—now common on paintings and statuary, designed to represent them as holy, is interesting as a matter of ecclesiastical history. It is supposed to represent the crown of glory that awaits the favored immortal, a sort of label equivalent to the schoolboy's "This is a hoss" which he inscribes under his rudely painted equine, fearful the onlooker may be deceived, and call it a donkey.

In the earliest paintings of the artist Giotto, it is said, these halos were simply opaque discs, something like mortar-board hats, not at all like the halos with which the holy figures are now crowned in works of art. This started Giotto on the road of research. He found the halo had its origin in certain small circular coverings used in the eleventh and twelfth centuries to protect the figures of saints, always plentifully distributed around the churches. It was found that the drippings from the roofs of buildings stained and discolored the statues. To protect them it became the custom to place these wooden sheds or umbrellas over them.

When Giotto began painting, he was an ignorant country boy. He evidently supposed these little sheds were parts of the figures, and always painted them in his portraits of the saints. As he advanced in art he began to idealize things, and these little solid coverings became circles in his pictures, and circles, otherwise halos, as they have been, badges of sanctity ever since.

Thus this sacred symbol was born, like the picture of Jesus, of which we gave a history several years ago. With many thousands of new readers it should be repeated.

An Unintentional Deception.

The editor of the Aurora Argus has a copy of the Ulster county (N. Y.) Gazette, published January 4, 1800, which contains the death notice of George Washington and the comments from other papers.—Ex.

About 1850 an Eastern journalist duplicated with old-style type the Ulster County Gazette. A couple of generations have come, and are mostly gone, since then, and he who chances to fall in with a copy of the imitated sheet imagines himself the possessor of the real thing.

The writer of this was complimented by the printer with a copy when published, and the factitious sheet was noticed at the time in his journal. A multitude of sheets were printed and placed on the market, and each copy preserved is held by its owner as a relic of the past, but it is only a copy of such relic.

A Priestly Murderer.

Ludwig Szczygiel, formerly a Roman Catholic priest in Chicago, was lately convicted of two murders in Pittsburg.

These priestly murders are scarcely noticed by the secular press. If such crimes were committed by a Spiritualist it would be heralded world-wide as proving the demoralizing influence of the new philosophy.

All About the Gods.

"The name God," said the late John Fiske, librarian and assistant professor of philosophy in Harvard University, in a note on page 105 of his Myths and Myth-Makers, "is derived from Guodan, the original form of Odin, the supreme deity of our pagan forefathers." He tells his readers in the same connection: "The French Dieu is descended from the pagan Romans."

Some late writers, wholly ignorant of the classics and its history, have ignorantly claimed the word God is but an ellipsis of the word good. Such is not the case. The word God is of pagan origin, and was the title of Odin, the supreme deity of the Scandinavians, "the god who gives victory," identical with Woden, of the German tribes, from whence our name Wednesday, or Woden'sday. And Deus is the Roman form of the Grecian Zeus, better known as Jupiter. Thus Zeus, Jupiter, or Jove, was the supreme god of nearly all the barbarian nations bordering on the Mediterranean. He was governor of heaven and earth, the father of gods and of men, the lord of the elements, and the dispenser of every blessing to man. He was also known as the Thunderer, using the lightning as one of his weapons. He was represented as a majestic man, with a venerable beard, seated on a throne, holding a thunderbolt in his right hand and a scepter in his left. He was the personification of the Christian's God of a century ago, just the character Catholics enshrined and Protestants copied. He had numerous sons, born of mortal maidens. These were known as demi-gods, or half-gods.

The Greek Zeus in process of time appears as Theos, still meaning God. During the fifth century of our era, when a severe intellectual contest was raging between that wing of the Grecian philosophers who were unwilling to recognize the pagan deities as the true God, and they who clung to the old order of thought, the latter invented and applied the term Atheist to their more advanced opponents. It was a compound word, from a—without, and Theos—God.

Thus a term originated which opposing sects have been hurling at each other ever since Roman Catholics adopted it and applied it to Luther and his associates. The Protestants in turn threw it back to Catholics. And now, surprising as it may seem, a writer in The Progressive Thinker of September 21, professing to be a Spiritualist, hurls it at a large wing of the same faith, who reject the narrow concept of God as taught in the Bible, and have enlarged their ideas of such a character, so as to comport with the present knowledge of the great universe, of which all concede he is the energizing spirit, by whatever name designated.

The National Spiritual Convention a few years ago saw fit to call this universal spirit "Infinite Intelligence." The Progressive Thinker would prefer the title Soul of Nature, or Spirit of the Universe, believing either more expressive than the one adopted; but the other gets us away from the old pagan gods which Christians adopted and then falsely claimed to be worshiping the one now known as the barbarous Jew god, which they they have endeavored to dignify by capitalizing him.

The Jews—if there were such a people independent of the Phoenicians, of which there is reason for doubt—borrowed their idea of an avatar, or Messiah, from the Persians; but no such personage figures in the pseudo-Jewish history; but Greece and Rome were over-stocked with sons of gods, having enough to satisfy the ambition of any nation or sect. When Catholicism usurped the Roman religion and government, and paganism was reconstructed and adapted to their somewhat advanced thought, then the gods, both major and minor, of Greece and Rome were canonized, and are now found with Latinized names in the long list of beatified saints. These were the gods the most learned of the pagans repudiated in the fifth century, and for which they were contumeliously called Atheists.

Spiritualists should be very economical in the use of this reproachful term, for none of us, however discordant our views on lesser subjects, deny that Universal Energy, by whatever name designated, pervades all matter. Alexander Pope, the poet, well expressed the enlarged thought in his Essay on Man:

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the Soul;
That, changed through all, and yet in all the same,
Great in the earth, as in the ethereal frame;
Warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze,
Glows in the stars, and blossoms in the trees;
Lives through all life, extends through all extent,
Spreads undivided, operates unspent;
Breathes in our soul, informs our mortal part,
As full, as perfect, in a hair as heart;
As full, as perfect, in vile man who mourns,
As the rapt seraph that adores and burns:
To him no high, no low, no great, no small;
He fills, he bounds, connects, and equals all."

No Christian, however much inclined to deal in terms of opprobrium, dares classify the great poet with atheists; and it is hoped no intelligent Spiritualist will dishonor himself by doing so.

The "Old-School Atheists" were, and are, in full accord with Pope's idea of a god. They have no sympathy with a 7-by-9 god, such as is described in Genesis, halloing "Where art thou, Adam?" setting up a tailor shop in Eden, taking measures to prevent the creatures of his creation from scaling heaven, and driving him from his throne; his wrestling match with Jacob, breaking his thigh, and doing a thousand other things beneath the dignity of a well-informed human.

And as to a "grudge against Jesus," the critic writes like a superannuated preacher, who has adopted the phenomena of Spiritualism, and brought along with him the obnoxious teachings the biographers of Jesus have ascribed to him. He and those sympathizing with that critic will do well to send 15 cents to this office and procure a 48-page pamphlet entitled "The Teachings of Jesus Not Adapted to Modern Civilization." Before concluding the reading, if critically inclined, it will be discovered the Jesus character is not what churchmen have represented, if "inerrant" Scriptures are trustworthy.

Trying to Change the Meaning of Words.

Language is used to express ideas, and many words of immemorial usage have acquired meanings difficult to change. Anger is one of these.

How is it possible to mistake what is meant when this word is used? It is synonymous with the Anglo-Saxon "mad," defined, "Excited with wrath; enraged; furious with anger; angry." The good prophet, God-inspired, declared (Ecclesiastes 7:9) "Anger resteth in the bosom of fools." Certain it is, an angry person is very liable to act the fool when under its influence, and all thoughtful people use great care to not give way to it.

Mark 3: tells of a man with a withered hand who approached Jesus on a Sabbath day and desired to be healed. But Jesus was watched to see if he would disregard the rigid Sabbath laws. Then says the report (verse 5): "When he had looked round about on them with anger" he performed the cure. Man, God, myth or Jesus, ought to have kept his temper, and we protest against his giving way to passion on such an occasion. It is an example none of us should imitate.

But the preachers will meet us with the declaration: "Anger does not mean what is generally understood by the term when used by Jesus." Had he, a God, so poor command of language he could not find a word which would express his meaning, so he had to leave it to the clergy to revise that meaning, or patch it up to suit their need? On nearly every page of the gospels, wherever the language of Jesus is quoted, the good cleric wants to reconstruct the language of their God, so he will not appear in an offensive light. Hate is one of those words they are ashamed of, and have reason to be.

Japanese Rationalism.

The Ecclesiastical Review, published in Philadelphia, quotes Claudius Terrand, a Catholic missionary in Japan, as saying public opinion there is adverse to Catholic thought, and then:

"Protestant propaganda has, without wishing or even suspecting it, been the occasion, more than any other agency, of throwing this country into the fatal current of atheistic rationalism, which predominates everywhere among the educated. * * Our influence has not been felt among the Japanese upper classes—that is to say, among the officers and functionaries, judges and advocates, professors and students."

The alleged conversions to Christianity in Japan, if any are made, are of the lower and uneducated classes, and mostly of persons in some way connected with the missions. Such converts fall from grace when they cease to be employed; such is the report from all quarters.

The Beginning of a Funeral Trust.

Down there in Coffeyville, Kan., the clergy have formed a combination and fixed the price for preaching funeral sermons. The union rates, however, only apply to members of the churches. Those not in the "ring" must pay a higher rate. The idea of a fixed price for funeral services will prove contagious, and may even become universal. All the great trusts, like Christianity itself, had an humble beginning.

Of late the clergy have opposed funerals on Sunday. Probably their motive is to increase their incomes by making another day than Sunday productive. Well, doubtless they need it.

The Pith of a Long Chapter.

Where all are selfish, the sage is no better than the fool, and only rather more dangerous.—Froude.

In the Realm of Science.

Scientist Says We Have All Lived Before and Will Live on Earth Again.

Prof. J. Ellis McTaggart, of Cambridge University, England, says we all have lived on earth before and are all going to live on earth again.

Prof. McTaggart thinks there is a much better chance of proving immortality with the addition of preexistence than without it. There are two ways in which a proof of immortality may be attempted. The first he calls the directly metaphysical way. We may attempt to show that the nature of man is such that he cannot cease to exist while the universe continues to exist; or that his nature is eternal, and that an eternal nature cannot have an end in time; or pursue some similar line of thought.

In this case it seems to him that immortality almost necessarily would stand or fall with the theory of preexistence. He does not see how existence in future time can be shown to be necessary in the case of any being whose existence in past time is admitted not to be necessary. "If the universe got on without me a hundred years ago, what reason could be given for denying that it might get on without me a hundred years hence?"

Or, "if my nature is compatible with its temporal manifestation having begun at some point of time, could we find any reason for supposing it to be inconsistent with that nature that its temporal manifestation should cease at some point in time?" His conclusion, then, is that any demonstration of immortality is likely to show that each of us exists through all time past, as well as future, whether time be held to be finite or infinite.

Improvement Goes on After Death.

There are some considerations which the Cambridge professor finds strongly to suggest that we existed before the formation of our present bodies. In the first place, even the best men are not, when they die, in such a condition of intellectual and moral perfection as would fit them to enter heaven immediately. If heaven is to be taken as a state of perfection which renders all further improvement unnecessary and impossible. This fact is generally recognized, and one of two alternatives commonly is adopted to meet it. The first is that some tremendous improvement out of proportion to that which can be observed in life is effected in the moment of death, at any rate in the case of those who die under certain conditions. For this view Prof. McTaggart knows no argument.

The other more probable view is that the process of gradual improvement can go on in each of us after the death of our present bodies. If we adopt this view, he finds it only reasonable to take one more step, and to hold that this life will be followed by other lives like it, each separated from its predecessor and its successor by death and rebirth. For otherwise we should be limited to the hypothesis that a process begun in a single short earthly life then should be continued in one indefinitely long life not divided by death and birth at all. And to suppose without any reason such a sudden change from the order of our present experience seems unjustifiable.

Single Lifetime Always Incomplete.

Our lives, too, the professor finds to be not only incomplete in their results, but fragmentary in their nature. All continually find that a process is cut short by death; that one life holds a fault without retribution, a preparation without an achievement, while in other cases, where the life has lasted longer, the process is complete between birth and death. The more probable conclusion is that the process which is worked out in an earthly life in the one case will be worked out in an earthly life in the other case also, even though death has intervened.

Such problems as these never have been put with more force than by Browning. Both in "Rabbi Ben Ezra" and in "Evelyn Hope" he adopts, at any rate for dramatic purposes, the hypothesis of a number of earthly lives. If a number of earthly lives once is granted it would be gratuitous to suppose that this was the first of the long chain, and since even the lowest man is high above many living beings, there would be strong reason for believing that it was in previous lives that he had gained this relative superiority.

Again, as a man grows up, certain tendencies and qualities make themselves manifest in him. They cannot be due entirely to his environment, for they often are different in people whose environment has been similar. We call these the man's natural character and assume that he came into existence with it. Now, when we look at the natural character of men, we find that they have a great resemblance to those differentiations which can be produced in the course of a single life. One man seems to start with the impotence to resist some particular temptation which exactly resembles the impotence which has been produced in another man by continued yielding to the same temptation.

Benefit by Experience of Previous Lives.

One man again through life has a calm and serene virtue which another man gains only by years of strenuous effort. Others again have instinctive powers of judging nice and difficult questions of quality, in pictures, for example, or precious stones, which place them soon after they have turned their attention to the subject in a position to which less fortunate men can attain, if at all, only by the experience of years.

A still more striking instance is found in personal relations. Two people who have seen but little of each other often are drawn together by a force equal to that which could be generated only by years of mutual trust and mutual assistance. The significance of this fact Prof. McTaggart thinks has been much underrated. As a rule, the only case of it which is considered is the case when the attraction is between people of different sexes, and the inexplicability then hastily is adjudged to be due to the irrationality of sexual desire.

Here, then, are characteristic ties which are born with us, which are not acquired in our present lives and which are strikingly like characteristics which in other cases we know to be due to the condensed results of experience. Is it not probable that the innate characteristics also are due to the condensed results of experience, in this case, of experience in an earlier life? Thus queries Ellis McTaggart.

Without memory of our present life, however, it may be said our future life would not be ours. We might as well be mortal, it is maintained, as be immortal without a memory beyond the present life. To this the professor answers that memory chiefly is of value in our lives in three ways. In the first place it makes us wiser. The results which we have seen and conclusions at which we have arrived are preserved in memory, and add to our present knowledge.

In the second place it makes us morally better. The memory of a temptation, whether it has been resisted or not, under various circumstances, may help us in resisting present temptation. In the third place, it may tell us that people with whom we are thrown and now are related are the people whom we have loved in the past. And this may enter as an element in our present love for them.

Can we be wiser by reason of something which we have forgotten? Unquestionably we can. Wisdom depends primarily on a mind competent to deal with facts and to form judgments. The acquisition of knowledge and experience may strengthen the mind. And a man who dies after acquiring knowledge—and all men acquire some—might enter into his new life deprived, indeed, of his knowledge, but not deprived of the increased strength and delicacy of mind which he had gained by virtue of that knowledge. And if so, he will be wiser in the second life because of what has happened in the first. Progress, therefore, has not perished with memory.

Virtue Acquired in Moral Contests.

So, again, with virtue. And there the point perhaps is clearer. For it is obvious that the memory of moral vicissitudes is of no moral value except in so far as it helps to form the moral character, and that if this is done, the memory could be discarded without loss. We cannot doubt that a character may remain determined by an event which has been forgotten. "I have forgotten the greater number of the good and evil acts which I have done in this life. And yet each must have left its imprint upon my character."

And so if a man carries over into his next life the disposition and tendencies which he has gained by the moral contests of this life, the value of those contests has not been destroyed by the death which has destroyed the memory of them.

So with love. What is uniquely valuable, the professor argues, is the relation to each particular person, and not the particular acts and feelings in which that feeling is expressed. Much has been forgotten in any friendship, but the friendship is sweet and true and enduring by reason of the accumulated results of these forgotten episodes. So our relations with the people that we meet in this earth life are sweet and friendly in proportion to the character of our past relations with the same people.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Dr. Geo. B. Warne writes: "Too much emphasis cannot be laid upon the fact that anyone who pays full fare one way going to the Washington Convention of the N. S. A. will have to pay exactly the same rate on the homeward trip. There is no certificate plan of one and one-third rate for the round trip granted this year. President Barrett's request for the latter favor is refused in these words:

"In view of the unsettled rate conditions throughout the country we deem it inexpedient to grant any concession from current fares."

Practically a one and one-third rate may be had, or $22.25, on a Jamestown Exposition ticket from Chicago, and one need not stop more than one hour to have it validated and then go on to Washington. Those who do not want to stop for the Exposition can have tickets duly signed at Newport News or Old Point Comfort, and then take steamers up the Potomac River for the Convention. Quite a number from the West will go over the 'Big Four' and Chesapeake and Ohio routes."

An Interesting Phantom.

It haunts the field of Chickamauga—Weird story of Ghostly Experiences by men camped on the old field at the time of the war with Spain—Was the apparition that of a Union Soldier who in the '60s was shot for sleeping at his post?

I told one man this story, and he laughed at me, and I have not told it since. It happened eight years ago, during the early part of the Spanish-American war, when my regiment was camped at Chickamauga, on part of the field occupied by "Fighting Joe" Hooker after the terrific "Battle of the Clouds."

It was a secluded spot, more wooded than open, dotted here and there with monuments indicative of the heroism and heavy losses of the regiment that participated in the battle. We went into camp there on Tuesday, May 17, 1898, as I remember, and remained there thirteen days, until ordered to Port Tampa.

I was a sergeant in my company, and the second day there was selected as sergeant of the guard. We mounted guard in the afternoon, and after the pretty ceremony was gone through with and the old guard had been saluted by the new, we quick-stepped to the shrill music of the solitary fife and drum to the guard-house for twenty-four hours' sentry duty.

The guard line extended around the regiment, through the woodland and over near Reed's run, a small creek where it is said the water ran blood red from a sanguinary skirmish between a body of union and confederate forces just preceding the big battle.

It was a lonely place during the day, but at night was rendered a hundred times more so by the dismal croaking of bass-voiced frogs or the melancholy night cry of birds.

The waters of the run seemed to leave a strange, sad sound as they rushed along over the stones or lapped unceasingly against the reed-grown banks.

About 2 o'clock in the morning a drizzling rain began to fall. The guards of the first and third reliefs, who were off post, lay sprawled out in the guardhouse, sleeping in the strange positions affected by men in overcrowded quarters, when out of the gloom and rain came the cry of a sentry on post:

"Corporal of the guard No. 7!"

The call came around to the guard-house by the endless chain of communication of each guard until it reached home. The cry had hardly been received when when it came again, this time more impatient.

I looked around for the corporal of that relief, but remembered that I had let him go to his quarters for his poncho (rubber blanket). The other two corporals were asleep somewhere in the guard tent. I was going to awaken one of them, but on second consideration decided to go myself.

Wrapped up in my poncho, with my campaign hat drawn far down over my eyes, and with lantern in one hand and rifle held under my rubber blanket in the other, I started out.

No. 7 post was in the woods, near the creek. It was the loneliest sort of a place for night soldiering, which was not enhanced by such a night. I was halted by each sentry in succession, gave the countersign and passed on toward the man who had sent in the call.

I came upon him in the woods. He halted me sharply with "Halt, who is there? Halt! Halt!" I have heard the challenge many times, but never heard it given with more earnestness of command. His "Halt! Halt!" tacked onto the end of the regulation "Halt, who is there?" indicated that he was very sincere in his order.

I stopped short in obedience to his challenge. "Sergeant of the guard," I answered. He kept me there, with his gun at his shoulder.

"Well, why don't you advance me?" I said sharply. I had to speak to him the second time before he slowly took his rifle down and let me advance. He was very much agitated, and so nervous that he could hardly talk.

His eyes had a hunted look. His hands twitched from fear.

"He keeps going through my line," he gasped. "I've halted him, but he won't stop. I thought he was one of the sentries of the other regiments. I called out to him what outfit he was in, but he never answered. He came nearer. I could see his big U. S. on his belt plate, but his uniform was so old that I could not tell him. He carried his musket at a right shoulder, but not like we carry it. It was a musket, not a rifle. He was dressed like these old photographs of soldiers you see in the family albums. He came to my post. I challenged him, but he came on. I challenged again, and the third time said I would shoot. I put the rifle up to my shoulder, although I knew it contained no ball, looked over the sights, but the man was gone. I am not a coward, sergeant, but I'm afraid to stay on this post without ball cartridges."

The man was badly startled. I knew him well, and after posting a relief for him, took him to the guard-house, where he told me that he had been sitting on a log in the woods thinking of his mother and his sweetheart away off in Pennsylvania. He became drowsy, a sense of sleepiness came over him, he closed his eyes a moment and slept.

It was only a second, but a sentry on duty, with the lives of thousands or one hundred thousand men depending on his watchfulness, such a second of slumber spells D-e-a-t-h! Next to the traitor, it is the most ignominious offense of which a soldier can be convicted. He awoke a moment later, but the sense of sleep was so overpowering that he closed his eyes once more.

"I could not have been asleep more than a few seconds," he said, "when I felt a cold draft strike me full in the face. I jumped up, fully awake. I grasped my rifle in both hands and peered forth through the gloom. I looked again. There in the woods I saw a sentry asleep. He shifted his musket from an order to a right shoulder with a dextrous twist familiar to experienced soldiers and started to walk post. He came toward me, and you know the rest."

At 3 o'clock the third relief went on duty. Wet and tired, the second relief was just getting asleep on the hard ground of the guard tent when a faint cry came in:

"Corporal of the guard, No. 7!"

It increased in volume as it came nearer, being repeated by each sentry. When the corporal came back I asked him what it was.

"No. 7, out in the woods there," he replied, "says a soldier crossed his post without stopping at his challenge, and he wanted to know what to do if he came back."

Curious, I went out to see for myself. Under my questioning No. 7 acknowledged that he had sat down on the log, had closed his eyes for a second, but had not slept, when a cold chill had struck him. On jumping up he saw a strange-looking soldier come walking toward him.

He called him to halt, but the stranger walked on. He ran to the edge of the woods after him, but when he reached there the man had disappeared.

I sat down on the log and wondered. The sentry had walked to the upper part of his post. He passed and repassed, but, finding me not communicative, did not speak. I was curious. I wanted to think the thing out. Gradually the trees in front of me changed into a solid black walk. A sense of sleep crept slowly over me.

I was about to close my eyes when a cold draught struck me in the face. I jumped up, startled.

I grasped my gun instinctively and ran forward, hardly knowing what I was doing. My eyes took in the gloom slowly, but when I could see I saw plainly. It was the soldier. He came marching on with slow, steady tread, like an old picture of '61, with low, old-fashioned infantry leggins, a short four-buttoned blouse, an old-time leather cartridge box and funny visored cap, with slanting cardboard disk falling rakishly over the peak.

He passed within fifty feet of me, and as he did he turned his head and gave me a look of such sadness that the thrill of it went to my toes. I followed it with my eyes and called it to halt, but when I looked nothing was there. I even ran forward over to the fringe of trees near the creek, with bayonet fixed, but he had gone.

On May 31 we were ordered to Tampa, and marched to Ringgold, Ga., fifteen miles distant, to entrain.

During one of our short rests I met an old planter, and in response to my questioning he told me that a sentry of the union army, years ago, on duty near the creek in the woods, which I fixed as the exact place covered by the post of No. 7, was caught asleep on post, was court-martialed and shot at sunrise.

Whether it was the spirit of the soldier of '61 coming back to warn the soldier of '98 is more than I can say, but I have my private opinion of the same. I do know that no one went to sleep on duty in our regiment in the lonely stretch of woods near the melancholy murmurings of Reed's Run on post No. 7.—Southern Paper.

TO GEORGIA GLADYS COOLEY.

Written for and read to the Farewell Reception of Georgia Gladys Cooley, previous to her departure for foreign lands.

Blessed sister, in your travels you may never need these things,
But you only need to touch them to discern what each one brings
Of soul value—worth in friendship—and the wealth that interblends
Both in mortal and immortal, 'twixt yourself and your dear friends.

May your trip be one of pleasure and of profit all along;
May your inspiration heighten as you feed the hungry throng;
May you lift the souls of strangers as you do your old-time friends;
May you safely come back to us when your foreign journey ends.

But be sure these small momentoes are true tokens of respect,
And will bring you love-vibrations in sweet soulfulness direct.
We present them with devotion and with gratitude to you
For your sacrifice and honor in your labors ever true.

May they be a bit of comfort to your soul where'er you go;
May they often whisper softly, kindly words you wish to know;
May they lift your inspiration to the height you would attain,
And impress you with assurance that your truth is not in vain.

May your messages of comfort echo round and round the earth,
And all peoples know your value—know your spiritual worth;
May you long be spared to help us in our urging truth ahead,
By your sacred psychic presence 'twixt the earth and so-called dead.

THE DIVORCE EVIL SO-CALLED.

Divorce Is the One Door Open for the Escape of Outraged Wives.

The Catholic clergy are a unit against divorce on any ground. Many Protestant preachers agree with their Romanist brethren, especially of the Episcopal church. Others of the more liberal denominations would permit divorce for but one cause—adultery. There is a concerted movement of Catholics and Protestants to secure the enactment of statutes making divorce almost impossible for any cause. The preachers say "divorce breaks up happy homes and leads to race suicide." Even some religious laymen are afraid that not enough boys will be born to keep up the supply of soldiers for future wars unless women are forced to become mothers whether they desire to be or not.

These people evidently look upon marriage from a very low standpoint. They hold that when a clergyman joins a man and woman in marriage, making the woman promise to "love, honor and obey the man until death doth them separate;" the woman is irrevocably bound to love, honor and obey him, even though he was a deep-dyed scoundrel, brutal, cruel monster, outraging all her finer feelings, assaulting and even murdering her. Though she, for good reasons, may fear, hate and abhor him, she shall still continue to bear his name and be the mother of his children begotten in drunkenness and lust. The laws of man, and the saying of a few words by the clergy, are to be held as more binding that the laws of nature and of God. Do these anti-divorce champions know anything about prenatal influences and the laws of heredity. Evidently not.

Do they know that God has ordained and planted it deep in the heart of the female, that there can be no true marriage without love, and no true motherhood if the mother is forced to become such? Do they know that children who are the fruits of brutality, drunkenness and lust on the part of the father, and fear, hate and abhorrence on the part of the mother, come into the world depraved, and are mental and moral cripples with strong criminal tendencies? Some of them admit this, but their theology teaches that all children are "conceived in iniquity and born in sin" through Adam's fall, and are doomed to an endless hell unless saved through the blood atonement;" hence their contention that once a wife always a wife whose duty it is to submit to unspeakable cruelty and outrage on the part af her husband, if she has been so unfortunate as to marry a man of that sort. Although bruised in body and tortured in mind, she must be the mother of the children of a brutal monster, to the end that the nation may not commit suicide and the "home" be broken up.

A few years ago in an eastern state, a drunken, brutal husband came home because his supper was not ready, he fiendishly kicked his young wife nearly to death, crippling her for life, after which assault he snatched his young baby from the cradle, held the infant on a hot stove and roasted it to death. In every city, town and county of this and other lands, may be heard almost daily, the agonizing moanings and wailings of battered, bleeding, heart-broken wives who are as afraid of their ferocious husbands as they would be of an untamed tiger. Can any anti-divorce law or any clause in a marriage ceremony make these wretched wives love the inhuman monsters whom the law and the preacher says are their husbands? No; for the law of God and nature is higher than are the statutes made by men.

Divorce is the one door open for the escape of outraged wives. Take that right from them and millions of women will be crowded to deeper depths of mental and physical slavery, and into hopeless degradation and despair.

If the clergy succeed in repealing all divorce laws they may diminish the fear of race suicide by preventing the diminishing of the birth-rate of depraved children, but what kind of children will they be—what sort of citizens will they make? I ask, would it not be better for the nation to have fewer marriages, and fewer children, and have those unions based on love, and those children well born, than to have marriages based on force and made undissolvable by law, and children brought into the world—the product of hate, brutality and lust?

Fortunately the editors, the lawyers, the legislators and the court judges hold broader views than the clergy. They are more practical, see more clearly the needs of society. They are less influenced by precedent and "scriptural authority" than the preachers. They have keener sympathies and higher ideals.

Women are slowly but surely emerging from the degrading slavery enforced upon them by the so-called Christian church the past two thousand years. When woman is emancipated and cannot be compelled to continue as the wife of the man who beats her and whom she hates, nor be forced to be the mother of his children, but can control her own body, and bear children who are the fruits of love, then will we have more happy homes; then will inebriety and prostitution, and suicide and murder be greatly diminished if not entirely abolished.

As nations advance from savagery towards civilization, divorce laws become more liberal, each century. The more civilized a people are the less brutally and tyrannically does the male biped treat the female. Many women accord credit to the church for the enlarged liberty they now enjoy compared to their privileges of a few centuries ago. The truth is that the orthodox church is entitled to little credit. the honor belongs to the liberal religious sects and other so-called heretics, and the growing intelligence of each successive age. The "infallible scriptures" command wives to submit to and obey their husbands whether such husbands are good, bad or indifernt, and for twenty centuries orthodox Christian husbands have regarded their wives as menials, inferiors and slaves. Many of them considered they owned the wife as they did their horse or dog. To the non-orthodox belongs the chief credit for whatever of freedom married women enjoy to-day.

Sometimes It Is Delightful to Die.

NEARLY EVERY LIVING BEING LOOKS FORWARD WITH TERROR TO THE MOMENT OF DYING; VAGUELY HE IMAGINES IT TO BE A MOMENT OF GREAT AGONY.

A DISTINGUISHED GERMAN DOCTOR, G. H. BERNDT, HAS COME TO THE CONCLUSION THAT IT IS AN UTTER MISTAKE TO SUPPOSE THAT DYING IS PAINFUL. HE HAS COLLECTED AND PUBLISHED IN A BOOK A GREAT NUMBER OF AUTHENTIC STATEMENTS FROM PERSONS WHO WERE REGARDED BY THE DOCTORS AS DYING, BUT WHO UNEXPECTEDLY RECOVERED. THEY CAME AS NEAR TO BEING DEAD AS IT IS POSSIBLE.

NEARLY ALL OF THEM TESTIFY THAT DYING WAS PLEASANT INSTEAD OF AGONIZING. THEY WERE ALL INTELLIGENT PERSONS, CAPABLE OF DESCRIBING THEIR SENSATIONS ACCURATELY. FROM THEIR NARRATIVES IT APPEARS THAT WHAT HURTS IS THE TERROR OF DYING. YOU MUST BE ALIVE AND COMPARATIVELY WELL TO FEEL THIS. WHEN YOU HAVE PASSED A CERTAIN POINT ON THE ROAD TO DEATH, PAIN CEASES. MOST OF THE PERSONS SAY THAT AT THE VERY MOMENT WHEN THEY ARE PRONOUNCED DYING, THEY WERE SUPREMELY HAPPY.

WHEN THE SUFFERER LIES IN THE ARMS OF DEATH THE NERVES AND THE BODY ARE PARALYZED AND INSENSIBLE TO PAIN, BUT THE BRAIN IS ACTIVE AND CONCEIVES THE MOST DELIGHTFUL VISIONS.

SOME OF THE MOST REMARKABLE NARRATIVES COLLECTED BY DR. BERNDT ARE REPRINTED BELOW.

1—Delightful Sensations of Arnold Siegrist as He Fell from the Korpfstock Peak in the Alps.

My accident on the Korpfstock is now well known to all those who are interested in Alpine climbing, as it is, perhaps, the most remarkable of its kind that has ever occurred. No person, as far as can be ascertained, has ever fallen from so great a height as I did and lived to tell the tale.

By a fortunate coincidence two expert amateur photographers were with our party at the time of my accident. While the other members of the party set about recovering my remains, the photographers naturally busied themselves taking pictures of me. Thus they secured a series of photographs showing nearly every stage of my fall from its beginning to the point where my lifeless body lay in a patch of bushes. These photographs are now among the most interesting possessions of the Swiss Alpine Club.

On this eventful day we had succeeded in making the very difficult ascension of the Korpfstock. We had reached the highest peak—a lofty, narrow projection separated from the main mass of the mountain except at its base. This sharp peak rises 2,000 feet above the rest of the mountain. Between the peak and the mountain there is a very deep and narrow ravine. We had crossed this ravine by means of a rope ladder in order to reach the pathway to the peak. This was a very arduous task and one of considerable danger. It was followed by an exceedingly steep and difficult ascent. Consequently when the party reached the summit they were fatigued and more or less exhausted.

I had, probably, more energy than the others. Exhilarated by the success of this daring expedition, I was anxious to enjoy the scenery to the utmost, to make observations from every point of view and to examine thoroughly the lofty summit we had reached. I therefore rashly detached myself from the rope which, as usual in such cases, connected me with my companions, and proceeded to explore the peak by myself.

After climbing about by myself for about half an hour I sat down near the edge at a point where the peak drops down almost vertically for several thousand feet. I enjoyed the superb scenery immensely and my mind was full of high and noble thoughts.

Suddenly I felt the ground beneath me beginning to slide outward toward the abyss. A portion of the peak near the edge had been disintegrated, probably by the action of frost, and the slight addition of my weight was sufficient to separate it completely and cause it to topple over.

I made a frantic endeavor to save myself by rolling backward away from the edge, but it was too late. In another instant I was falling through the air.

There was a strong wind blowing and, as those who are familiar with mechanical phenomena are aware, this greatly retards the progress of a body falling through the air. The effect of the wind in sustaining a body may be seen very clearly in the case of a bird, which can remain afloat in the wind without the slightest motion of the wings.

Thoughts in Mid-Air.

Consequently I was a very long time falling down. I noted this fact with great interest. I had ample time to consider my surroundings and to think of many things.

I realized perfectly that I was falling to my death, but I suffered neither fear, pain nor discomfort. I dare say that if I had been in a position to struggle for my life, however ineffectually, I should have been in an agony of terror, but as I was absolutely incapable of helping myself, I did not have any cause for anxiety.

For a moment I felt a regret for the new gold chronometer which I was wearing, and which was certainly going to be broken, but this idea quickly passed out of my mind.

My sensations were distinctly agreeable. Probably they resembled those of a person in a very swift automobile, but they were incomparably more exhilarating. I caught a glimpse of my companions looking at me in dismay, while the photographers fixed their instruments upon me.

The wind blew me out from the mountain, which probably saved my life, for although it increased the distance which I fell, it prevented me from striking a bare place, where I should certainly have been smashed to pieces.

When I was some distance from the mountain I saw its outlines with considerable distinctness, just as you are able to see the country at a distance from a swiftly moving train, while the ground close at hand is blurred.

My mind worked with marvelous rapidity. I must have lost all conception of time, for, although I could only have been a few seconds in the air, it seemed to me a very long time. I thought of my dear wife and little ones and deeply regretted that I was leaving them, but remembered what a handsome sum of insurance money they would receive, and I smiled gleefully at the thought that the insurance company would have to pay this amount after receiving one premium only.

I then began to feel ecstatically happy. I had shaken off the bonds of the flesh and had entered into the realm of immortality. Every problem of human existence became absolutely clear to me. I understood exactly how men should live in order to avoid all strife, sorrow, misery and poverty. I possessed the secret of perfect happiness.

"If I can only return to the earth again," I said to myself, "I shall be able to do more good to the world than any philosopher has yet succeeded in doing."

It seemed to me that a delightful harmony was sounding in my ears, as if the sun and the mountains and the woods were singing to me.

I was only vaguely aware of a sensation that I was brushing through something. It was repeated many times. I can only explain what happened from what I learned afterward. When I had fallen about one thousand feet my body reached an almost perpendicular slope, thickly covered with trees. Had I struck any object strong enough to arrest my fall completely, I should have been shaken to pieces, but I fell into the light branches of a young tree and swiftly crashed through it. Then I struck another, and the process was repeated again and again. Each time I struck something was taken from the momentum of my fall. After going through the last of the trees I shot downward into a little gully.

When my friends found me they believed that I was dead. They carried me into a house and laid me tenderly on a bed. My clothes were torn to rags; my breathing was imperceptible and I exhibited no signs of life. Nevertheless I was perfectly conscious and enjoying myself thoroughly.

"Poor fellow," said my old friend Dr. Heim, as he bent over me, "I am afraid there is not the slightest chance of his being alive. It is remarkable, however, that he is not more severely mutilated."

Several of the women members of the club began to weep bitterly.

This troubled me greatly. I wished I could let them know how delightful it was to die.

The doctor bent over me, examined my pulse and felt my bones. Evidently he was greatly perplexed. He could not tell whether I was alive or dead. The fact was I had suffered a severe shock to the backbone and base of the brain, which had produced a kind of paralysis and a partial suspension of the physical functions.

For several days I lay in a critical condition. I was, however, in perfect comfort and suffered not at all. I enjoyed a delicious sensation of rest and freedom from care. My mind was not as active as during my flight through the air, but I indulged in many long speculations concerning the new life on which I felt I was entering.

After hovering in the balance for a remarkably long time I began to return to life, and, as I did so, experienced pain and discomfort once more. When I was convalescent I suffered acutely, and often did I regret the happy moments when I was dying.

Other Remarkable Instances in Which Persons at the Point of Death Describe Their Experience as Delightful.

James Barton, a fireman in the Metropolitan Fire Brigade of London, was caught in the ruins of a burning building in Aldersgate street, London, and remained hidden beneath the debris for eight hours before he was rescued.

When his body was recovered he was lying beneath many tons of hot bricks and burning wood, and it was naturally supposed that he was dead. His body was laid aside while the doctors attended to the more urgent work of looking after the living. In the course of three hours one of them examined his body and found that life was not extinct.

Barton was carefully nursed and eventually restored to health. The doctor who was attending him obtained a statement of his experiences, which he forwarded to Dr. Berndt.

"Dying has been a pleasure to me," said Barton, "and if it were not for my wife and children I should be sorry that I have recovered. I have not suffered at all during my illness. Of course, I do not mean to say that burning and suffocation are not painful, but I was fortunate enough to miss those sensations almost entirely.

"I was on my way across the first floor of the burning building when it gave way and I fell down into the cellar. Before I could think about my predicament a beam hit me on the head and I knew no more.

"When I regained consciousness I was lying in the hospital bed, but I did not exactly know where I was. I did not seem to be on earth. I was perfectly happy and delightfully comfortable. In fact, I had never been so happy in my life before. I was entirely free from any pain. I believe I was incapable of feeling anything with my limbs, but that did not prevent me from imagining that I felt the most delightful sensations—as though I were lying in a bed of roses and being caressed by gentle hands."

The Rev. Hermann Stockler, a Swiss minister, who was lost in a snowstorm on Mount St. Bernard and rescued in a state of insensibility, furnished his experiences to Dr. Berndt. His statement in part was as follows:

"When I found myself blinded by the snow and unable to trace my path I was greatly alarmed. I struggled for hours to find my way to a place of refuge, but was finally compelled to give up the fight and fall exhausted in the snow.

"From the moment that I ceased to struggle I was perfectly comfortable. My hands and feet were frozen and I was incapable of movement or sensation, but my sight remained keen for a long time and I watched the great, big snowflakes with intense enjoyment. This was the most delightful experience of my life. I said, 'I hope no one will come and interfere with me.' Finally my eyes grew dim and I fell into a delicious, dreamy slumber."

Of a most extraordinary character was the experience of Percy Williams, an English divinity student, who sustained a terrible compound fracture of the skull. During the period when he was suffering from the injury, and even when he was on the operating table, his mind was filled with the most ecstatic visions.

"I believed that I was in heaven," he explained.

Dr. Berndt obtained from many of his fellow physicians statements concerning the experiences of their patients, and also to themselves when they were at the point of death. For instance, Professor Metchnikoff, the celebrated scientist of the Pasteur Institute of Paris, who is conducting remarkable researches with the object of prolonging human life, furnished a very interesting statement of his personal experience. He says:

"There are many illnesses and accidents where the approach of death evokes no painful sensations. During the crisis of an intermittent fever, when my temperature fell suddenly from 110 degrees to below the normal, I experienced a sensation of extraordinary feebleness—similar, no doubt, to that which heralds the approach of death. Strange to say, this sensation was pleasant, rather than painful.

"It is probable, indeed, that the approach of natural death is, in many instances, accompanied by the sweetest sensation which can possibly exist on the earth."

Miss Bertha Kuhlmann, of Munich, contributed an interesting statement of her experience.

"I had been stricken with a severe attack of pneumonia. During the early days I suffered keenly, but as the disease grew worse, I suffered less and less, until at last I became perfectly comfortable. When the crisis was reached I was apparently lifeless and was quite unable to move even a finger.

"My relatives, being assured that I was dying, sent for a priest to administer extreme unction to me. When the priest came he said he doubted if I knew anything of what was being done, but nevertheless he proceeded with the ceremony, according to custom. In spite of what they thought, I was entirely conscious of everything that was being done, and the sacrament added greatly to the feeling of peace and comfort which I experienced."

Toward the end of last winter I was skating upon St. Mary's Loch, near Edinburgh. The weather had turned suddenly warmer during the day and the ice must have grown thin in several places.

Darkness had fallen, but I was thoroughly intoxicated with the joy of exercise and thought neither of time nor of my surroundings. I skated to an out-of-the-way part of the lake, far away from the place where most of the crowd were amusing themselves. I was going with tremendous speed. I skirted near some bushes at the edge of the lake, when suddenly I heard a sharp crack, and then my feet began to sink under me.

I knew instantly that I had hit a soft spot, and I threw out my arms to save myself by catching hold of the surrounding ice. But the hole was large and I was going hard and fast. I went straight down through the freezing water, and when I came up I was under the ice, yards away from the place where I went in.

I tried to swim around and swim toward the hole, but I missed my way and I had no strength to try again, hampered as I was by heavy clothing and chilled by the freezing water.

My extremities were chilled into insensibility. I gave up the struggle to hold my breath and the water flowed into my stomach and lungs.

From the moment I ceased to struggle for life I ceased to feel any pain.

I knew that I was dying and I was astonished to find how pleasant it was.

I had no longer any sensations of cold or suffocation. I felt that I was floating on a couch of exquisite softness. The most beautiful music I had ever heard sounded in my ears. It was soft and sweet and marvelously melodious. I was being carried gently upward and unseen angels or spirits were discoursing sweet music to me. I could not identify the melody as resembling any I had ever heard. It seemed to be a combination of sound produced by the human voice and of the most exquisitely-played stringed instruments.

Then a soft, white light flooded my eyes and filled the space about me entirely. I could not understand whence it came. There was neither sun nor lamp. There was something unearthly about it, yet very soothing and delightful. It was a light that never was on land or sea.

The music began to grow softer, but without dying away. Events of my past life ran before my eyes like the scenes of a play. Strange to say, I saw only the pleasant things that had happened to me. I was so delightfully situated that I could only imagine pleasant things.

I felt a desire to see all my old and dear friends, and immediately their faces began to press about me. I began to converse with them.

I am not ordinarily a fluent speaker, but in my dying state I enjoyed a fluency of speech such as I had never possessed before. I was able to express the finest shades of thought and feeling with the precision of a philosopher and the eloquence of a poet. I was able to express all the clever and noble ideas which I had felt before, but had never been able to convert into distinct articulate speech. My friends, like myself, were gifted with an eloquence far beyond anything which I had known them to possess before.

After a time the throng of my friends faded away and I was left alone with my sweetheart. Her face wore an anxious expression as if she were vaguely aware that some disaster had happened to me.

I told her that I was dying, but that I hoped we should meet again.

"Now," I said, "we have still a little time that we can spend together. Let us enjoy ourselves."

"Most willingly," she answered. She smiled sweetly at me and then came and nestled by my side. As we sat there a most wonderful pageant unrolled itself before us. We visited all the beautiful places on earth that we had longed to see and had planned to see when we should have time and money. We went to London and saw the shops along the Strand, and then we visited the Tower of London, and after that we called at Buckingham Palace, where the King and Queen received us most kindly.

After that we passed over to the continent, where we saw all the sights of Paris, climbed up to the top of the Arcade Triomphe and viewed the tomb of Napoleon. We also witnessed the grandest theatrical performance we ever saw. We traveled on to the Mediterranean, stopped at Florence, Rome, Naples and Venice. We journeyed leisurely through Switzerland and made our way northward down the Rhine. Then we came back to dear old Scotland again.

I had a premonition that it was time to part from my sweetheart, although I had still no feeling of pain or fatigue. We kissed one another good-bye without any sadness and she faded away.

Then the face of my dear old mother, who was dead, appeared and leaned over me. She whispered to me to rest and be happy, and that she would watch over me. I then began to enjoy the most delightful sensation of rest and happiness that I could possibly imagine. It was infinitely beyond any feeling of happiness that I had ever experienced on earth. I felt as if I were in heaven, and that this was the place that I had so often tried to picture to myself from my reading of the Scriptures and the sermons of my pastors. I remained in this happy condition for a very long time, as it seemed to me. It might have been thousands of years.

Then came a period of absolute black unconsciousness. From this I was suddenly awakened by the most excruciating pain I had ever suffered. The fact was, as I learned afterward, that I had been rescued from the water and that the strenuous methods of resuscitating the drowning were being applied to me. It was the moment of my return to life that caused me such trouble and pain.

"Why don't you let me stay dead?" I groaned. "I was so happy."

From subsequent consideration of my experience I believe that when I was under the water my body became completely dissociated from my brain and insensible to feeling. My mind remained active and, being freed from the ailments and sensations of the body, it was only capable of conceiving happy ideas.

Chauffeur Sissay's Swift Visions of Joy as He Was Hurled from an Auto Going 94 Miles an Hour.

My astounding experience occurred during the trial races for the championship of the Sarthe. They were held near Evreux in Normandy.

I was driving my 90-horsepower Renault racing machine. I was on a magnificent level stretch of road and was pushing the machine to its utmost speed capacity. Eventually I worked up to a speed of 94 miles an hour. We were no longer sensible of contact with the earth. It was as if we were flying; objects at a distance were visible and then in an instant they vanished, for it is hardly possible to see anything which you pass at a speed of 94 miles an hour.

The road was about fifty feet wide and perfectly straight for a stretch of ten miles. Suddenly I discovered at a probable distance of a little less than two miles another auto standing still on the left side of the road, where it should have been. I kept straight on my course, as the other machine was not in my way.

Suddenly, when I was not more than 450 feet away, I saw, to my horror, the other machine move directly upon me. Such a distance is practically nothing when you are going at a speed of 94 miles an hour. I was within a few feet of the other machine in two seconds. I made a tremendous effort to avoid a collision and keep on the road. I shot past the other machine, missing it by only an inch or two, and for a moment I thought I was out of danger. I caught a glimpse of the road behind the other auto. I saw two soldiers leading motor cycles, and one of my wheels struck the last cycle. I saw its fragments fly into an adjoining field. The soldier was not hurt.

In another instant I realized I had steered just a fraction too far to the right in trying to avoid the other auto. It was just enough to take me off the road. I shot across the ditch, and there I encountered the most peculiar series of obstacles an automobilist ever had to negotiate. I was in a great field filled with irrigating ditches. They ran parallel to one another, and each was about one hundred feet away from the next and about four feet wide. There were twelve of them and my machine was headed straight across them.

The auto covered the space of a hundred feet of ploughed land in a fraction of a second. As it struck the irrigating ditch it leaped high into the air, then it dashed across another hundred feet of dry land until it came to another ditch. Twelve times it repeated this extraordinary performance.

On the bank of the last canal stood the hut of the people who take care of the road. A man and his wife were eating dinner there. The machine flew past the hut, grazing the door as it did so. The hub of one wheel drew a line across the door as sharp and straight as if it had been made with a pencil and ruler. It was only a lucky accident that I did not hit the house squarely, in which case I and all the people in the building would have been killed.

I looked upon myself as a dead man. All the breath was shaken out of me, and I was unable to use the brake. I knew that in another second or two I should strike some unsurmountable obstacle, and that would be the end. Nevertheless I did not feel alarmed, but thrilled with a sensation of the most delightful excitement.

For a mile or more I sped across the country, leaping ditches and hedges. Then the machine ran on level ground for an appreciable period and I was able to apply the brake. Before the machine stopped, however, I ran into a tree and was sent flying through the air, but the speed had been reduced sufficiently to make the shock less destructive than it would have been a few moments earlier.

Even as I hurtled through the air I was not terrified, but experienced what I may call swift visions of joy.

I lay unconscious for many hours. There was scarcely a whole bone in my body, and I had suffered the severest internal injuries. For instance, my heart was moved four inches from its normal position.

When I recovered consciousness I was still unable to move or speak. I was able to open my eyes and see what was going on about me. I heard the doctors shaking their heads and saying that there was no chance for me.

They handled me in order to ascertain the character of my injuries, but this did not hurt me. I felt as light as a balloon.

I heard them say, "Poor fellow, it would be better if he were out of his misery." I was not in any misery, but this remark did not frighten or annoy me. I was not afraid to think that they might let me die, for I enjoyed dying immensely.

My sensations were of delicious peacefulness, and such as I had never experienced even in the remotest degree when I was thoroughly alive. I felt no shocks or jars, no little annoyances or inconveniences. My mind seemed incapable of weariness or fatigue and troublesome questions that had formerly perplexed me appeared perfectly clear. I said to myself that if my mind had been as clear as this at the time of the accident, I could easily have avoided it.

I calculated with absolute clearness how I could make a fortune of 100,000 francs in a few months by selling a certain machine. As I was dying I said I should not be able to carry out my plan, but now it appears just as feasible as when it entered my brain that was half-detached from my shattered body.

I lay in a state of delightful happiness, in which I had visions that were half dream and half reality. I thought that I was riding in the swiftest and most luxurious automobile that had ever been created. It was even faster than the one in which I had met disaster. It flew along with never a jar or jolt, and sometimes I fancied that I was riding on the clouds, but then when I looked at the landscape about me I changed my mind and concluded that I was on a road of inflated rubber.

This machine was steered and driven by thought. I had only to wish a certain speed and immediately I had it. I had only to wish to be at a place and immediately I was there. Sometimes I amused myself calculating the speed of the machine. I took out my watch and looked at a splendid palace on the hillside about twenty miles away. Then I said: "I will go there." Almost instantly my machine was in the courtyard of the palace. I looked at my watch—two seconds had passed. I had been traveling at a speed of sixty miles a minute. That was good, but I could do better.

I did not always scorch. Often I glided softly along on my magically smooth roadbed, enjoying scenes of entrancing beauty.

Then I fell into a dreamy state in which I conversed with my family and friends, or just spent my time in silent communion with them.

There were moments when my mind was absolutely clear; when I knew that I had had a terrible automobile accident and that I was dying. I believe that these were the moments when I was nearest to the point of death. I was just balancing between this world and the next. Even at these times I was entirely free from pain or unhapiness. The fact that I was dying did not seem terrible, as it would have done when I was thoroughly alive and well, but on the contrary, it filled me with happiness. I felt that pain and labor and anxiety and unhappiness were done with forever.

It was not until I began to recover, to everybody's surprise, that I began to know once more what pain and unhappiness meant. I shall always look back to the days when I was supposed to be dying as the jolliest holliday of my life.

"WE SHALL NOT PASS THIS WAY AGAIN."

We shall not pass this way again.
If there be aught of secret pain
'Tween you and me,
In the great sea
Of all men's pain let it be cast
This night, that only love may last.

We shall not pass this way again.
My heart, in pain shall we refrain
From tenderness,
And cease to bless
Each added hour that love may give Us in this piteous space we live?

We shall not pass this way again.
Haply to-morrow comes in vain,
If we shall part
With heavy heart
This night. Ah, then could love forget
The little griefs we cherish yet?
Let us be done with pain—
We shall not pass this way again.

Eyeglasses . . . Not Necessary

Eyesight Can Be Strengthened, and Most Forms of Diseased Eyes Successfully Treated Without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in many cases has been proven beyond a doubt by the testimony of hundreds of people who publicly claim that their eyesight has been restored by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." "Actina" also relieves sore and granulated lids, iritis, etc., and removes cataracts without cutting or drugging. Over 75,000 "Actinas" have been sold, therefore "Actina" is not an experiment, but a reliable method of treatment.

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. It is impossible to do harm with one. Every member of the family can use the one instrument for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, Throat or Head. One will last for years, and is always ready for use. It will be sent on trial, postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 342N, 811 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely FREE, a valuable book—Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

The Wonders of Life.

By ERNEST HAECKEL, Author of "The Riddle of the Universe." This book is confined to the realm of organic science, and treats of "The Knowledge, Nature, Functions and History of Life." Price, [illegible] 50.

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A Very Suggestive Work Which Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What is unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1.00.

TWO IN ONE

A COMBINATION OF

"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books combined at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 462 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

is a careful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism, or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

PRICE $1. FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Force and Matter By Ludwig Buechner. A celebrated book. A profound work upon a profound subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

WEST SIDE SPIRITUALISTS WHO ARE WILLING TO TAKE PART IN ORGANIZING A SOCIETY IN THE DISTRICT OF HUMBOLDT PARK, WILL PLEASE SEND THEIR NAMES AND ADDRESSES TO E. J. CARE OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, 40 Loomis Street.

E. W. Sprague and wife are now at their home in the city of Detroit, Mich., where they expect to remain in the missionary, and other fields of work for the grand cause of Spiritualism. Mr. Sprague's services may be secured for Sunday or week-day meetings, weddings and funerals, anywhere in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, or Canada, in places not too far away from Detroit. Mrs. Sprague will also respond to calls for meetings and seances. They are both well known platform test mediums. Individuals or societies desiring their services can address them at 1082 Trumbull Ave., Detroit, Mich.

George W. Kates and wife can be addressed at 531 N. Carey St., Baltimore, Md., until further notice. They have been called to the local church of Baltimore as pastors for the present season. Their home address at Cheyney, Pa., will continue, from whence all mail will be forwarded to them, if sent there.

C. J. Barnes goes to Canton, Ohio, for a week or two, and will be glad to meet all of his friends while there.

Hon. F. P. Baker of Topeka, Kan., writes: "The Dialogue on Religion between Father Jutz, jesuit priest, and Dr. Bland, ought to sell by the million. It contains in a concise form, information which would disabuse the minds of those who, by false early teaching, have formed erroneous views of the bible and of the history of the church." This booklet can be had at this office for fifteen cents.

Louisa L. Kirby wishes to correspond with some good speaker who wishes a good test medium to work with them. Address her at 118 Upton avenue, Battle Creek Mich.

Word comes that Mrs. Amanda Coffman is improving, and at the present time is able to sit up, and her Grand Rapids, Mich., home has reason to rejoice, as it was a close call for her from the silent Reaper. The good healing thought is still in order for this popular worker.

H. B. Allen writes from Etna, Wash: "The Etna camp closed the 6th of September. We had a very successful one; perfect harmony prevailed. W. W. Aber was with us during the entire camp, and gave some grand materializing circles. P. C. Smith, that grand old worker, was with us through the entire meeting, always ready to do his work, and everyone was delighted with his lectures. He should be kept busy all the time, for he is a grand worker for the truth. We look forward to next year with expectations of having another camp which will surpass all we have ever held. Myself and wife think of taking a trip, possibly East, this coming winter. Would be pleased to hear from parties who desire to witness my phase of mediumship, and will try to give satisfaction. I have been true to my mediumship for fifty years, and expect to die in the harness. I would like to hear from friends in Salt Lake City, also Pueblo, Colorado."

At the annual meeting of theProgressive Spiritualists society of Elyria, Ohio, the following officers were elected. for the ensuing year: F. W. Martin, president; J. M. Wooldridge, first vice-president; C. D. VanHousen, second vice-president; Thad Allison, secretary and treasurer. The above officers, together with F. H. Davis, George Wood and Phillip Peters constitute the board of trustees. The society has shown a healthy growth for the past year and is in a most prosperous condition at this time. The congregation voted to hold afternoon as well as evening meetings during the coming season. Odd Fellows hall has again been secured as a place of meeting and a fine program has been arranged for the coming year, to which the general public is cordially invited. The season will be opened on Sunday, October 6, with Mrs. D. A. Morrell as speaker and message bearer.

George H. Brooks, President of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, has removed from Wauwatosa, Wis., to 856 Holton tsreet, Milwaukee, Wis., where he can be addressed for future engagements.

Dr. Schaffer, President, writes: "The First Church of Spiritual Science will commence a series of meetings on Sunday, October 6, at 3. p. m., and continue until 10 p. m., with special musical, solos, recitations and poems. A circle will be formed at 4:30 p. m., when all will have an opportunity of receiving a test. Good speakers will be engaged for each Sunday, and the test mediums will be the best that can be procured. A lunch will be served by the ladies of the society, and those wishing to remain for the evening service will be welcome, and the society will do all it can to make it pleasant and profitable for all. We meet in Kenwood Hall, 4308 and 10 Cottage Grove ave., corner of 43rd st. One fare for the West Side on Halstead to 43rd st. We will teach Spiritualism as a science and demonstrate the truth by the law of spirit return."

BEAR IN MIND that the editor of The Progressive Thinker is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not agree with their respective views.

Prof. W. M. Lockwood's permanent address is No. 723 Prospect avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

Rev. G. C. Love of Portland, Oregon is now in Chicago, and would like an engagement either in the city or between Chicago and Washington, D. C., as he is on his way to the N. S. A. Convention. Mr. Love is one of our ablest lecturers. Address him at No. 4707 Calumet ave., Chicago, Ill.

George G. Swart writes from Mayger, Ore.: "About three years ago I had a wonderful vision. I heard heavenly singing, far superior to that here on earth, and at the end a voice said plainly and loudly, "Edgar Allen Poe." With this I awoke. I had another vision. The Bible says that in the end of time young men shall see visions and old men dream dreams." In this I saw a great multitude of people. I, with others, seemed to be on flying horses, and was to meet a force "in battle" that came from the crowd observed, but all the force that came against me fled like deserters, and gave us the field, indicating that I should go ahead fearlessly with the banner of Truth, Love and Justice and proclaim it to the world."

Mrs. M. E. Hanvey writes: "The Golden Rule Society held a very interesting meeting at Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue, Sunday afternoon, September 22. James E. Coe read an original poem, and Mrs. Nora Hill and Wm. Traver gave short talks and messages, which were most pleasing. In the evening a large and appreciative audience greeted the Hon. Chas. Hughes. He held the closest attention of all in a masterly address, followed by Jas. E. Coe with a song, with messages by our well known mediums, Mrs. Addie Clyburne and Mrs. Nellie Kusserow. Our speaker for Sunday evening, October 6, will be Dr. George B. Warne, vice-president of the National Spiritualists' Association, and president of the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association."

Milton Baker writes: "I am located in Lawton, Oklahoma, for several months. My mother has charge of the work here, I assisting her when not otherwise engaged. I desire to hear from societies or individuals in towns where there are no societies, who wish to have in their locality inspirational lectures on Spiritualism. I am now eighteen years old, having lectured on Spiritualism since I was thirteen, and I trust that the Spiritualists of Oklahoma will assist me in making it possible for me to do much good for our cause while in this state. My terms are: Railroad fare from the last place I am in, board and room and the collections; those who "work up" the meetings paying hall rent, that I may have the collections in full. As can be seen, this will be no more than enough to meet the numerous incidental expenses which I will have to pay, such as postage, clothing, laundry bills, etc. Address me at No. 416 B. Avenue, Lawton, Oklahoma."

Mrs. L. Holton-Upson writes: "I returned to Kalamazoo, Mich., from my trip through the Southern States, where I found many inquiries into the New Thought and spirit return. A large portion of the South is settled with Northerners, to whom, through the ministrations at Lake Helen Camp, in Florida, the light has been brought. I met some fine psychics while there, all of whom were friends of The Progressive Thinker, and were interested in the grand work that has been done through its pages the past four years, in weeding our ranks of the fraudulent elements, bringing forth the grand philosophy in all its purity and brilliance. I shall remain in Michigan until January, and can be addressed for engagements at 715 Gall street, Kalamazoo, Mich. After that I expect to visit West Virginia and Georgia for the winter."

M. Parmenter writes from Lawton, Oklahoma: "The Church of Spiritual Light, not content with reaching a part of the people, but desirous of reaching all the people, with the message of Truth, concluded to hold an open-air meeting. This plan was consummated Tuesday evening, September 24. The corner of Fourth street and D. avenue, one of the most prominent corners in the city was chosen. The speaker was Milton Baker, a young man, now eighteen years old, who has lectured in many large cities since he was thirteen years old. He lectured for one hour on "The History and Development of Modern Spiritualism." The attendance throughout the lecture was about one hundred, many remaining throughout the entire meeting. September 22 we organized the first Children's Lyceum in the State of Oklahoma here in Lawton."

John W. Ring will be in Ashtabula, Ohio, to participate in the dedication of the Temple there on October 6, From there he goes to Washington, D. C. to the N. S. A. Convention. His permanent address is Shelbyville, Ind.

Prof. J. Madison Allen has been busily at work in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky, since the latter part of June. Points made, Decatur, Ill.; Mulberry, Indianapolis, Anderson, in Indiana; Dayton, Xenia, Yellow Springs, Cincinnati, Camp Brady, Akron, Cleveland, Conneaut, Ashtabula, in Ohio, and Newport, Ky. Societies and camps desiring his services can address him at Washington, D. C., care of H. D. Barrett, 600 Penn. ave., or South Bridgewater, Mass.

The Band of Harmony, auxiliary of the Church of the Soul, meets in Hall 309 Masonic Temple, the second and fourth Thursdays of each month. Supper served at 6 p. m. The Church of the Soul, Cora L. V. Richmond pastor, holds its services in Hall 309 Masonic Temple every Sunday at 11 a. m. Sunday School at 10 a. m. Mrs. Richmond will be at home, 3802 Ridge Boulevard, Friday afternoons, to receive callers.

TAKE NOTICE.— Correspondents are requested when writing for this paper to use either a typewriter or a pen, with black ink. Write on only one side of the paper, and in a plain, legible hand, and thus avoid the necessity of preparing your copy for the printer. Please bear this in mind.

WANTED: One steam heated room with breakfast for gentleman. Address E. P. J., No. 40 Loomis st.

Central Spiritual Church holds service every Sunday evening at Trimble Hall, 1977 West Madison street, near 40th Ave., commencing at 7 o'clock, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Howes.

Harry J Moore organized a class for instruction in Spiritualism in Medford, Oregon, on Sunday, September 22. Address him there, in care of General Delivery, until further notice.

W. J. Howes writes to inform their many friends that they will re-open their meetings Sunday, evening, October 6, at the same place, Trimble Hall, 1977 W. Madison st., near 40th ave, commencing at 7:30; will be assisted by Mrs. Hild and Mrs Cowan. Music by Mrs. M. Calonder. We would like to say that we have met with wonderful success, especially among the orthodox people."

First Anniversary and Spiritualist Mass Meeting of the Plymouth Church, Rochester, N. Y., October 6, 7, 8, and 9, 1907. Sunday services: 10:30 a. m., 2:30 p. m., 7:30 p. m.; Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, 2:30 p. m., 7:30 p. m. The Mass Meeting, under direction of the trustees of New York State Association, Hon. W. H. Richardson, presiding, October 10, 11, 12 and 13, 1907. Conference each morning at 10:30 a. m. Afternoon and evening lecture and Psychic Demonstrations. Speakers and workes engaged: The venerable Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. Edgar W. Emerson, Mrs. Helen P. Russegue, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, Dr. J. J. Lewis, Prof. A. J. Maxham, Prof. W. M. Lockwood, and many mediums for the various phases of spiritual phenomena are expected, among them the following: Pierre L. O..A. Keeler, Dell Herrick, Floy Cottrell, and others. All these services are open to the public. B. F. Austin, M. A., D.D., Pastor.

S. A. Huntington writes from Malden, Mass., of the Progressive Spiritual society: "A very young medium, Fred B. Niles, of Marlboro, Mass, occupied our platform on Sunday evening, September 22. He chose for his theme, "Demonstrations," which he discussed in a very able manner, maintaining that "when the glorious light of Spiritualism radiates the world, then progress and happiness will permeate all things," and in the words of the immortal Thomas Paine, "The world will be our church and to do good our religion. After this fine address, he devoted three-quarters of an hour to giving many fine messages. Our ex-president, Mrs Alice M. Whall, of Everett, will be the speaker on the 29th inst., and Mrs. B. W. Belcher of Marlboro, on October 6. Circles every Thursday evening, and 11 a. m. and 3:30 p. m., Sunday; Sunday evening meeting, 7:30."

Jmes H. Perry writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "Through the courtesy of Mary C. Vlasek the Society of Spiritual Progression tendered the use of its hall to the California State Spiritualist Association for a mass meeting last Sunday. There was a good attendance all day. In the evening many were glad to get standing room. Addresses were given by C. A. Buss of San Diego, A. S. Howe of Los Angeles, Mrs. Wells of San Francisco, and others. Messages were given by Mrs. Cowell of Oakland, Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. Howe of Los Angeles. It is very gratifying to see the interest created by the earnest, conscientious workers of ability in our cause. Much has been done in the way of cleaning our ranks of the strictly "commercial mediums" during the past year, and more will be accomplished as the organized effort throughout the State increases. There are 46 chartered societies in the State and the work goes steadily on. People in all lines of thought are showing more and more interest. An active minister in one of the churches here receives communications from his mother in spirit life and occasionally has visions concerning his work. If you wish to win people, make them your friends and thereby help to spread the truth of Spiritualism."

Dr. George A. Fuller filled a most successful engagement at Madison (Maine) Camp Meeting, and was re-engaged for next season. He also lectured to a large audience at The Independent Liberal Church at Greenwich Village, Mass., Sunday, September 22, and at Providence, R. I., the 29th. Would like engagements near home for October and the first two Sundays in November, also part of December. Address, Onset, Mass.

G. H. Brooks writes from 856 Holton street, Milwaukee, Wis.: 'I am informed from reliable sources that one, Clarence Britten, claiming to hail from Grand Rapids, Mich., is in Manitowoc giving materializing seances, claiming he is endorsed by the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association. I desire to state for the benefit of said Britten, and the public at large, that the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association has never indorsed him, and it is better for the public at large to beware of all who make such claims, and let them pass on. It is far easier for people to tell the truth. I trust a word to the wise is sufficient."

Rev. Albert P. Blinn writes as follows of the First Spiritual Union, Norwich, Conn.: Twenty-five years ago the First Spiritual Union was organized by a band of men and women, who, in a most conservative and orthodox community, were ready and willing to stand for an unpopular cause because to them it was the truth. To-day one or two of that body of pioneers are with us, the rest having passed on; but the work still goes on. Fifteen years after the organization, the society purchased and dedicated a building to the propagation of Spiritualism, under the name of the Norwich Spiritual Academy, and for ten years services have been held every Sunday for a period of eight months a year, and to-day the society is one of the most prosperous in America, owning its own church edifice, free from debt, and a fund in the bank of some thousands of dollars. On Wednesday and Thursday, October 9 and 10, the commemoration of the two events is to be appropriately observed with a joint celebration of the 25th anniversary of the organization of the First Spiritual Union of Norwich, Conn., and the 10th anniversary of the dedication of the Norwich Spiritual Academy. A special musical program has been arranged by Charles A. Dowsett, organist, in which well-known soloists will participate, assisted by the Union Quartette. Rev. R. F. Churchill of Greenfield, Mass., Mrs. M. G. Carbee of Boston, Mass., Mrs. May Pepper-Vanderbilt of Brooklyn, N. Y., Rev. Albert Blinn, pastor of the society, and others, will give addresses or messages. Large delegations from Willimantic, New London, Hartford and near-by towns will attend. Remember the dates: Wednesday and Thursday, October 9 and 10, 1907."

WISE AND WEIGHTY COUNSEL.

To the Delegates of the N. S. A. Convention, and the Friends at Large —A Letter From Miss Elizabeth Harlow.

Here it is again almost Convention time, and I am wondering what this year has done. As we stand singly in our separate locations, we cannot see that very much has been accomplished; but when we meet and the work of the year is collected under one head, I am sure we will find there is much. I hope every delegate going to that convention will realize that this is one of the most important ever held, and be prepared to work for a cleaner and stronger movement.

Let us be prepared to see to it that stroug and fearless men and women are put in office. We need now as never before those who will stand like Adamant against the whole system of Fraud. We certainly have in the last few years made it uncomfortable for these creatures. The N. S. A. has been strong and careful in this; let it continue to be even more so.

All unjust legislation and criticism has come upon us because of these, and no one can defend us as well as we can defend ourselves if we will.

In the season's work among the camps, there is a MARKED effort to CLEAR the platform and grounds of fakers, and the one comment has been, "What a good meeting." The crowds have not been as large, but the quality better. Let all honest workers and the N. S. A. encourage and help all officials that are trying to have things better. We will find ourselves coming back to primitive methods, but it was such that established us in the first place. And the sooner we realize that and stand by it, the sooner our cause will grow stronger and beloved.

There is a cry, "Oh! the public demand the other." I ask, why? Simply because you have lent yourselves to it. You can educate them to the right and honest the same way you have let them drift into the other. Simply refuse to endorse or employ any except the straight goods. And it won't be long until the public will realize and demand the genuine, the same as now it clamors for a "show."

I do hope the delegates will work to keep the regulations for ordaining where they now are, and if anything make them more stringent.

In the last year there has been some very careless and disgusting ordaining done by one of the middle west states; and the work of this state has been in the face of the protest of the best people of the state. When we ordain people that have several times been exposed, and known to sell charms that proved to be baked potato skin, we realize that the N. S. A. cannot be too emphatic along this line.

But all honor to our President, he has refused to endorse this affair, and every true Spiritualist should uphold him in these trials he has to meet. I hope, too, the convention will be prepared to act wisely and well on the Definitions—this is one of the BUSINESS NEEDS. I

In fact let us go there not to "BLOW HOT AIR," but to legislate in the interest of Spiritualism CLEAR, INTELLIGENT and PROGRESSIVE, and keep the best men and women at the helm. Let self drop out of sight and the Truth and work only be in view. Sincerely, ELIZABETH HARLOW.

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE.

Auspicious Opening of the School, for the School Year of 1907-8.

The School Year of the Morris Pratt Institute never commenced under more favorable conditions than those attending the opening exxercises on September 19, 1907.

The weather was perfect. The students gathered from far and near for the opening day, (an unusual fact) and the newly elected officers of the Association were present to take part in the exercises and be duly installed in their official positions, while the Faculty were present to rejoice and lend the light of their illumed countenances to the outlining of the course of studies to be pursued during the incoming term.

The entire building (as far as means and hard work would allow) had been renovated throughout, and put in perfect order.

The Matron, Mrs. Weaver, was smiling among the students and guests who seemed to arrive from all directions, by every train.

A bulletin announcing the order of the opening day, Thursday, September 19, was conspicuously posted, which was followed as far as possible.

In the morning we are expected to arise at 6:30 and be ready for breakfast at 7 (a little indulgence was permitted on account of the visitors) however, all were present at breakfast at 7:30.

At 9:45 a. m., all assembled in the recitation room while Prof. Weaver, Principal of the School, outlined the course of the studies for the year, and gave out the studies for the day.

Mr. Weaver's benign face was particularly radiant as he looked upon the number of students present, "the largest number ever present on any opening day since the school began, five years ago," Prof. Weaver said.

The advantage of beginning with the opening day lessons cannot be over-stated. Students, everybody, I agree with Mr. Weaver. When you are to begin, begin at the time and place of the beginning, whether you are to attend a school, a church service, a funeral or a wedding.

After the studies had been assigned, Mr. Weaver called on Mrs. Alfaretta H. Nivers (daughter of Moses Hull) who has taught in the Morris Pratt Institute so acceptably and successfully in the department of Oratory and Physical Culture. Of Mrs. Niver's work I have spoken and written on previous occasions—too much could not be said of her work. She briefly and gracefully outlined her class work for Juniors and Sophomores, for the coming term.

Mrs. Mattie E. Hull for the Psychic department was present. Although earlier in the morning I had seen her, and she then thought that for the opening morning she must be excused, "For you know," she said, "I have never been present at an opening of the school without his presence in bodily form. (Moses Hull.) "But," I said, "he will be there as truly, as palpably as before." "I know it, I know it," she said, "but human nature is weak, and I miss his mortal presence at every turn."

Brave little Mattie, she WAS there, and gave a beautiful little outline of what might be done in the Psychic Class, if all were in accord. Her voice trembled a little at first, but the great sympathy of all present and the strength given by the invisible helpers enabled her to proceed.

When the prospective lessons in all the departments had been outlined, Mr. Weaver called upon Mrs. Richmond for a few remarks. At the close of these remarks the writer noticed tears in the eyes of most of those present, and smiles, also, wreathed their faces.

Prof. Weaver said, "that the most noticeable things in Mrs. Richmond's remarks were: 'It is not what you are here to be taught, but what you are here to learn. You are the principal factor in the learning," etc.; "and," said Mr. Weaver, "the other notable feature was, that our arisen Brother, Moses Hull, has spoken to us through Mrs. Richmond's lips and made us know his presence. What a glorious thing could all the world know of it!"

This, then, explained the tears and smiles and the sweet kiss Mrs. Richmond received from dear Mrs. Hull.

Mr. Weaver called upon Dr. Warne to make a few remarks. The Dr. arose, and in a voice trembling with emotion, said, that as he was to speak later in the day he thought they ought to adjourn with a benediction upon them that they had received from the arisen one. And adjourn they did.

Among the interesting reports made were of scholarships secured by Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague in their travels, and one sent by Mrs. Richmond, from friends in Chicago as a memorial tribute to their beautiful son, suddenly taken from mortal life. What better memorial to a young life could be given than to aid another young life to be prepared for the work of life here?

At 4 p. m., the bulletin called students, Faculty and Officers together (by request of Mrs. Nivers) to thoroughly organize the new system of the cuisine, which had been voted for last spring by the students and Board of Directors to take effect on the opening of the school. The object being to relieve Mrs. Weaver of the care of the food department, she being Matron and assistant secretary of the Association—work enough for two or three—and also to give the students a possible lesson in domestic economy.

The students, with Mrs. Nivers as their head, formed a CLUB, and their cuisine is on the cafeteria plan, and they serve themselves from the things provided, paying FOR WHAT THEY EAT. This may be more for those endowed with a large appetite, but is more just to the delicate ones.

The noticeable feature of the meeting was, the freedom with which all the students were encouraged to "speak their minds," which they certainly did. An experimental arrangement was made for one month, and if they did not like the plan they were to change it.

Speaking of Mrs. Nivers, she had arranged for entertaining us all, and had ample provisions for the "first day's" for the students, and she and her husband had painted the spacious kitchen, ceiling, walls and woodwork with delicate light color, like the dawn, and she came across from her little cottage to see that we had everything served—Oratory, Physical Culture:—Yes, actions are very eloquent

At 6:30 we were invited to be present at a session of a class being instructed in oratory, a class that has been in session during the vacation, and consists of pupils of the Whitewater High School—For so highly is Mrs. Nivers appreciated that she has classes from the State Normal School, and the Whitewater High School every year. We enjoyed the lessons very much.

This brought us to the evening and the formal opening of the School, to which the public were invited, when the following published program was carried out in the presence of an appreciative audience:

1. Singing.
2. Invocation—by Mattie E. Hull.
3. Singing.
4. Official announcement by Prof. Weaver, chairman of the Executive committee of election of officers.
5. Installation of officers (informal) and address on behalf of Directors, by Cora L. V. Richmond.
6. Music.
7. Greeting on behalf of Students —by one of the students.
8. Address by President Geo. B. Warne.
9. Address, "The Present Outlook."—George H. Brooks.
10. Remarks by Vice-President, Judge Smith.
11. Informal reception to students and visitors.

President Warne's address was a masterly production and fully justified the choice of the Board in making him the President of the Association.

All the speeches were greeted with cordial and intelligent appreciation.

This last number was changed, by some fairy-like and mysterious process to a more formal reception that, by unanimous and intuitive consent centered upon Dr. and Mrs. Warne, the bride and bridegroom of the occasion. For, be it known, President Warne is twice what he was when elected to fill the office, he is a Whole President now. Well—ice cream, cake ("angel food," of course) and felicitous remarks and congratulations were in order. Just the household of the students and members of the Board and Faculty were present.

An exalted and long address by Brother Brooks (owing to his length of body), felicitous remarks by Mr. Weaver and Judge Smith. Recitation by Mrs. Nivers—("My Ships") —poem by Ouina. Delightful response by Dr. Warne, with smiling assent from Mrs. Warne. A song by all of us.

The writer has known Mrs. Warne for years, and I know of no better, stronger, truer woman. Every work in which Dr. Warne is interested and so active will be doubly enhanced by this beautiful helpmeet.

The hour was much later than the "regulations" permit at the school, but we felt that the season had opened with everything favorable for the best year of the school.

The Board held a hurried meeting at 6 p. m. the next morning to enable the secretary to take the 8:10 train for Chicago. Other directors had to depart and with a blessing on Brother and Mrs. Weaver, Mrs. Hull, Mrs. Nivers and all, we said "Good Morning."

FAREWELL RECEPTION.

Tendered Georgia Gladys Cooley by Her Many Close Friends, in view of Her Departure for New Zealand and a Trip Around the World.

One of the most beautiful and most affecting occasions recently held in Spiritualistic circles in Chicago, was the farewell reception given to Georgia Gladys Cooley, at the Hall of the Hyde Park Occult Society, under the motherly supervision of the president of the society, Mrs. O. B. Wilson, whose hospitality is too well known to need comment here.

Dr. George B. Warne, the ever ready, genial, philosophical and warm-hearted man that he is, took charge of the program, and opened the meeting with a short talk of the impending crisis that Spiritualist mediums and Spiritualism are now facing, in the threatened legislation against mediums in Chicago, and paid a glowing tribute to the work of Mrs. Cooley at Lily Dale, as well as elsewhere over the country. His words were fitting and sincere, and full of earnestness in behalf of genuine mediumship.

Brother Coe sang "Home and Mother" beautifully. Dr. T. Wilkins read an original poem written for the occasion, after which Mrs. Cooley was called upon, and it seemed that every word she spoke came from the depth of her womanly soul, and fell into the souls of her friends like dewdrops upon the thirsty and fragrant petals of beautiful flowers. It was one continuous wave of love and harmony from beginning to end, and we here bespeak for our Spiritualist brothers and sisters in New Zealand the greatest treat they have ever had, in our energetic, courageous, genuine message-bearer and eloquent lecturer, Mrs. Cooley.

Mrs. Alice Sexsmith sang, and was followed by Dr. Burgess in a real Indian song. Mrs. Lichtig talked and recited. A recitation by Mrs. Uling, was the first number on the program, and was a good one. Mrs. Nora Hill sang "We Parted by the River Side.," and after Mr. Warne had related interesting reminiscences of the past in his friendly experiences with Mrs. Cooley, coffee, cake and sandwiches were served to an appreciative horde of hungry people.

At a late hour, with loving kisses (which were confined to the ladies) and a general hond-shake the little band of friends parted; but not until Mrs. Cooley had asked the glad hand be given the new Mrs. Warne, which was done with congratulations to the twain.

She may anticipate a still warmer and a welcome reception when she returns. A. FRIEND.

From Lawton, Okla.

To the Editor:—I wish to state that we have accepted an engagement with the Church of Spiritual Light here for this season. We came here from the Oklahoma State Convention, commencing our work here September 8.

We were greeted with large and appreciative audiences. I organized the Church of Spiritual Light last November on one of my missionary tours in this State, with a membership of ten persons. It has already grown out of its infancy and is self-supporting. Perfect harmony exists; every member is busy—not a single drone in the hive, and new members coming in every Sunday.

However, we are not altogether without our troubles here, because this is, strictly speaking, an orthodox city; but organized spiritual Spiritualism is presenting something to the people here that is attracting them, and giving them food for thought, consequently the various leaders of orthodoxy are getting uneasy.

The First Spiritual Society of Oklahoma City, and its pastor, Rev. S. E. G. Thorpe, deserve much credit for the kind way in which they entertained the Convention.

The speakers were at their best; the business sessions were all attended with a spirit of harmony, and an honest desire upon the part of all the delegates was manifested, which augurs well for the good of the cause.

Speakers, teachers, mediums, Spiritualists, all over this broad land, let us, with a voice that has no uncertain sound, cry for organization. Ten years of unorganized effort in Oklahoma could not have resulted in what one year's organized work has done for the enlightenment of humanity, and the building of the religion of all religions: Spiritualism.

Fraternally yours,
REV. ALICE BAKER.

She Saw Her Spirit Father.

Passed to the higher life from her home in Flint, Michigan, September 22nd, Esther May Wright, aged 18 years. She leaves a widowed mother and one brother to mourn her loss. She was an exemplary character, and a medium. She saw her father as she was dying. He came for her as he had promised. They have the knowledge of Spiritualism, and the sympathy of their many friends.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About 7 words constitute a line.]

Andrew J. Hankey of Baltimore, Md., passed to spirit life, Sept. 24, aged 78 years. He was one of the pioneer Spiritualists of Baltimore, and had been faithful to the trust given him by the spirits. As a Spiritualist he lived, and by his conscious knowledge of spirit communion, his last days were gladdened by the expected reunion with wife and children gone before. He left a document clearly proclaiming his convictions, which was read at the funeral services, conducted by George W. Kates and wife.

Missionary Effort On Osmon Island

Starting a New Religion, and What Came of It. By Hudson Tuttle.

It was late noon and the servants, of whom we had an endless retinue, came trooping in bringing the native fare—cocoanut milk, fruits, shell fish and fished baked, without sauce or condiments—a plain diet, unpoisoned by microbes or preservatives. After this we were conducted to our prison pen and securely fastened. Weary with our exertion and overcome by the listless weather, we fell asleep and not till the shades of evening were we awakened. The noise that came to us would have answered for Gabriel's horn. Shouting, halloing, the deep tones of shell horns, the banging of spears on shields arose in horrible medley. It all came as response to the message sent by heralds that Bimbumbo himself had promised to speak to his chosen people and give them laws for their conduct. There was no sleep in the villages that night of continuous revelry and overflowing joy. The sun had no more than appeared above the rim of the sea than every man, woman and child on the island was assembled in the meeting house. They had snatched their breakfasts from the trees as they came. Our guards led us along a path which made a short cut, and we soon faced the most astonishing spectacle I ever witnessed. The house was so densely packed that it seemed paved with faces, and these faces were expressive of mingled fear, reverence and curiosity. They were children's faces like those of all inferior races—emotional, questioning. Coswell had fully carried out my instructions. He had taken up a sacred post, remnant of the old superstition, and planted it in front of the altar. It was grotesquely carved in rude imitation of a row of human heads, and gaudily painted with splashes of red, yellow and black. The phonograph was firmly placed on top of this sacred object, and a monkey skin thrown carelessly over it. One change in the appearance of my dear phono at once interested me. Coswell had, from some old tin found in the jetsam, fashioned a prodigious horn, such as never was attached to as small an instrument before, and probably never will be again. How the sounds will bellow in that monstrous megaphone! My spirits rose at the sight, and I said to myself, "Missionary Coswell, you are 'it!' "

Profoundest silence reigned. It became oppressive. All eyes were fastened on the sacred post and its strange surmounting. At length there came from the instrument, in tones deep, bellowing, sepulchral as of thunder seeking vent, the defiant warcry of their bloodthirsty god!

"Wah! wah! wah!"

Had lightning struck that assembly, heads would not have more closely pressed the dust. A cry of anguish and despair went up like the shriek of doom. I confess I was startled out of reason, and half persuaded that the old god had come to his own. Some time passed before the voice could be heard again.

"I have given you, my chosen people, the fairest spot on the whole earth. You are fed without toil. In the old days I asked sacrifice of you. This I want no more. The white men come as my messengers, to teach you my word. You must protect them. It is I, Bimbumbo, who say it. Hearken to my words."

Of course this was uttered in native speech, afterwards translated by Coswell, yet it was scarcely necessary, for I could read in the expression of the crowd what the instrument was saying.

"The coast is clear for us," said the Captain. "We shall not be driven back to the pen."

He was right, for the crowd pressed around us, almost crushing us with attentions, offering their dwellings, and the bringing of endless amounts of fruits and nuts. It was an ovation such as divine messengers, or those thought to be divine, always have received.

That day was indeed marked as a red-letter day, for we were feasted and taken from one village to another, and the chief men allowed no others to wait on us. They wanted to stand next to the gods, and no service was menial enough to satisfy them.

In consultation with the missionary that evening I suggested that as the scheme was working so well, it might be extended, and a complete redemption of these fallen savages effected. Let Bimbumbo do the preaching.

"I can't go further," protested Coswell; "it strains my conscience, and only did I consent because of your imminent danger. What will the missionary board at home say about it when it is reported?"

"Nonsense," I replied; "it will not be reported or known except by the report you send home yourself. Talk into that phone what you think the people ought to hear, and give it the force of their superstition."

After lengthy parley he yielded, and the heralds went out to call the people together the next morning. The scene was repeated. The warcry thrilled them into awful silence. Then came the command from the instrument:

"I, Bimbumbo, command you, my chosen people, you are no more to war on each other. You are to plant your spears in front of the temple; let them be there. You are to attend to the meetings. Bring the best nuts and fruits, the largest fish, the most tasteful shell-fish, to the house of my messengers. You are to obey them. If you do I will guard and protect you. If you do not I'll smite you with thunderbolts, send tempests to level your fruit groves, and drive the fish away from your shores. Hear me, for thus saith Bimbumbo."

After the people had recovered from the effect of the awful voice, Coswell arose and said he was glad to have direct communication with their god, and more gratified that he was pleased with the work of his humble servant. Then persuasively he asked if they were satisfied, and how many were ready to join the church he had established among them.

As one voice the cry arose. Every man, woman and child sprang to their feet, eager to be counted among the elect. It was a great success as a revival meeting; one that would make the heart of any evangelist swell with pride. Not a person on that island was excluded, for there were no infirm nor aged people at home. And here I may remark that there were no such people on the island. I at first referred this strange fact to the healthful climate. Afterward it came to my knowledge that up to the time of the missionary's coming—two years before—the aged and infirm, and children unpromising, had been sacrificed to Bimbumbo in a way that made them most useful to the community.

Coswell was elated. Such successful labors had no like in the missionary field. He was not at ease until he had reported to the home board. That very day he devoted long hours to his report. By divine grace he had gathered every individual of the Ozone Island into the fold. The Holy Ghost had literally descended and over six hundred souls had been saved. From lowest savagery they had become Christians, and bowed their knees to the throne of grace. I don't give more that an outline, gathered from his reading it to me. It was never seen by the board. He had no means of forwarding it, but many similar reports have been sent and published in religious organs with stunning headlines.

One day, after matters had become relegated into the routine of ordinary life, and we felt somewhat secure in the position we had taken of being the head of a theocratic government, Coswell grew confidential, and I found his faith was subject to doubts, such as have disturbed the souls of all infidels. He had put on a new dignity since the turn of affairs, and affected a reserve which held the too forward natives in check. From this I was the more surprised by his admisions.

"Do you know," he began, "that I have the translation of the New Testament under way into this island language?"

On my expressing my surprise he continued:

"Yes, I want them to read and study the life of Jesus the Redeemer."

"Do you not find it a difficult task?"

"Assuredly; much more so than I expected. The language, though easy in idiomatic forms, and from its preponderance of vowel sounds, soft and musical, has a deficiency of words. There are none to represent love, humanity, humility, self-devotion, spirituality, or abstract ideas. The ineffable mystery of the Godhead has no phraseology. I had to translate it by 'three-branched coral,' which is one, yet three. As for the Devil, there is no name, and as the shark is the most dreaded being to these frequenters of the water, every native having been frightened at some time by attack, or seen someone drawn into the voracious jaws, I translated Devil as "Chief Shark." In the exceedingly dry season fire rages in the thickets, and I have used "brushwood fire" to translate hell. A raging fire in the woods, not going out, but burning forever, gives them a realistic idea. I have Matthew nearly finished, and I don't think the other three evangelists will add anything to its value, do you?"

"You are the best judge," I replied, "but really I think they would not; sort of confuse the savage mind by too many stories."

"Exactly. I want this one alone, and when finished I shall attempt to return home with the manuscript and urge on the board the immediate publication for use in the schools I shall establish."

"They have no writings then?"

"Not a page, not a letter. I had to invent an alphabet and the combinations to express modified sounds."

"So if you had your testament they could not read a line until they had learned your alphabet and how to read."

"Just so, and for this purpose I shall have to establish schools and educate the people."

"My dear Coswell, you have more Christian grace, I mean hope, than I ever expect to gain. I would as soon translate Matthew into goose language and attempt to teach a flock of geese. I have no doubt you have succeeded as well in your translation as any of the countless ones who have given good time to such tasks. Did you ever make a literal translation of your translation back into English? It strikes me it would be more comical than a comic almanac. For instance for 'the Father, Son and Holy Ghost' you say 'three-branched coral;' 'cast into the bottomless pit,' 'cast into a brushwood fire,' and that Jesus went up into the temple and was tempted by 'the chief shark.' "

"You misunderstand," he quickly interposed. "It is the native mind I appeal to, and they get a different meaning."

"I hope so," I responded. "It is not your fault, but of the natives. They have no words because they have not, and never had, the ideas. I am not prepared to say they cannot have. All the translators of the Bible into the hundreds of savage tongues into which it has been translated have met the same difficulties. If their Bibles could be literally rendered into English, they would be the most comical books in all literature."

"I believe you, yet a Book of Books we must have, and in the translation I can make one better adapted to the requirements of the occasion than the Bible itself."

"Certainly, just as you made the 'phono' serve better than a real god, because you know better what was wanted."

It was the only time he confided in me; in fact, I've become so busy with events that there was small opportunity. He withdrew himself, I believe, to work on his book of Matthew, and had completed it when the great catastrophe came to us.

We had started a new religion, and in our limited empire it had full sway. We were forced to carry on the humbug for self-preservation. Things went on swimmingly. We lived on the best the land afforded, and wherever we went, met service akin to adoration. For a time, to me it was enjoyable. The Captain chafed under it. "I never was cut out for a saint," he muttered. "I'd rather pick my own cocoanuts. What does it all count for while we are as prisoners, and have no hope of again seeing home. I'd rather be with my wife and children than be this kind of a god-man, were it in heaven itself."

"Don't fret, Captain," I replied; "we will bring it around and pull out of this snug harbor in good time."

"You have more hope than I. Just as well think of a barnacle getting loose from a rock. I tell you they have us foul, and an attempt to get away would be the death of us."

"I have already a plan, Captain, which we must patiently work for. Did you not notice, one of the ship's boats has been driven ashore, in a not damaged condition? It at once occurred to me that we could repair it, and when the time came, make our escape."

I think I never met a man so utterly devoid of hopefulness as the Captain. He expects a coming storm when the skies were clearest. One of those who never takes the initiative, but would go strong enough when started. You could not propose the least thing that he would not object to; kick in slang, and after a while he would take hold as though it was the thing to do.

"Not me," he said despondently. 'We are here for keeps, and to attempt to get away will spoil the delusion which now holds these rascals as our slaves. Suppose we do get away in that cockle-shell, and nary a ship in a thousand miles? Oh no, not for me!"

Yet he went with me to see the boat—a good strong yawl, built for service. The islanders had numerous canoes, drawn upon the beach. They were adepts on the water, and swam like fishes. The comparative size of the boat to their own must have prevented them appropriating it. In attempting to disengage it from the wreckage, and seaweed washed over and around it, we made an important find, the value of which at the time was not so manifest as afterward. It was a box containing several shotguns, which had been consigned to some port at which we had failed to stop, and a canister of powder. As the latter had been sealed it proved uninjured by its rough usage. Searching farther we came on a box of shells. It was a wooden box inclosing one of tin in which the shells were packed, and there we found them uninjured. Here was a full equipment for attack or defense, and summoning to our aid the obedient natives we had the boxes carried to the mission house.

The event was like the interposition of providence, for, without these munitions a few days thereafter, the island folk and ourselves would have been swept from the earth. Chance voyagers in canoes, coming as spies from no distant islands, had seen and reported the beauties and opulence of Ozone, and the cupidity of these foreigners had been excited. A great war expedition had been planned, of which rumors came to us. The chiefs were alarmed, for they knew the strength of their fierce neighbors, and that in numbers they could not resist successfully. They clamored for their spears; called for advice from Bimbumbo; reproached Coswell, and ended by defiantly seizing their weapons.

Then Coswell authoritatively commanded them to wait for the oracle, and after a short seance with the "phono," called them into the temple. "As Bimbumbo says, so shall it be," he said. And the instrument spoke:

"You may take your spears; you will not need use them. I will smite the foe with thunder and flame. I will keep you safe. Wah! wah! wah!"

The effect was magical. With lofty strides the chiefs marched out and reported to the people, who set up a shout of "Wah! wah! wah!" that might have been heard on the farther shore. The great Bimbumbo was with them, and few as they were against the swarms of the northern isles, what he had decreed would be.

There was one point where the enemy would be quite sure to land, and the path leading to the village was through a tangle of tropic growth and this they were sure to follow. In this path the Captain and I dug a pit in which we placed the canister of powder, after taking out a part for other use. We laid a train and covered it carefully, finishing with a surface of leaves. We estimated that the enemy would be ten minutes from the landing to that point, and prepared the fuse accordingly. The Captain's duty was to be on watch and set off the fuse at the proper time.

Having this arranged, we returned to the mission and cleaned two of the guns. They were so-called repeaters, to the extent of six times, and fairly serviceable.

All these preparations had taken time and were scarcely completed before a messenger came breathlessly to us from the other side of the island, reporting that the enemy was in sight. Nor did we have long delay before, rounding the jutting point one after another, twenty-two war canoes, each propelled by ten paddles on a side, followed each other, turned with the precision of naval tactics, aligned abreast and, with paddles beating in perfect time, stood for the shore.

It was a thrilling scene, those long, slim boats, with their crowded armament, the men perfect in form, of the color and mould of bronze statues, their spears gleaming, and their shields of shagged monkey skins held aloft. Then silence added to the thrill of awesome fear which possessed the heart of the on-looker as they swiftly came forward. I confess an almost overwhelming fear, and the Captain, as usual, kicked against hope.

"Three hundred of the pirates, if one," he exclaimed, "and not half that number skulking up in the thicket!"

"Get to your post, Captain," I cried, "and as soon as you light the fuse, run up through the thicket and join me, where our spears and men are in ambuscade."

He seized the punke we had lighted by a pile of fagots used for cooking, and disappeared in the thick undergrowth. I went in the other direction until I came to our men, who, had they not been sustained by the assurance of their mighty Bimbumbo, would have fled into the forest, leaving their villages at the mercy of the foe. As it was, they were strong in the faith of deliverance at his hands, with ready arms to give their assistance when the moment came. I was surprised to find Coswell with the chief men, and to him belonged the plan of the ambush, which, without other assistance, would have been the height of strategy.

The enemy formed in line and started up the path made broad and hard by the feet of generations. They had passed half the space when the Captain joined us. As they came, cautious and wary, on to the very spot where I knew the mine was placed. Half the column had passed over. Would the explosion come, or were we to be trapped by our own device? The seconds were drawn out to hours.

"If it fails, we have our guns," grimly said the Captain in a voice trembling with excitement.

"Yes, our guns must do the thunder act—" I did not finish, for there was an upheaval, a huge volume of smoke rolled up, with flash of flame and a booming thunder which made the palm tops tremble. It was like the intensified war-cry of the great Bimbumbo, and the awed natives first fell on their faces, to spring on their feet to shout back as an echo "Wah! wah!"

At first the smoke, like a pall, concealed the havoc, soon drifting aside and showing the terror-stricken savages. The center of the column was annihilated; the savages at the head stood fixed as statues; those that had not reached the mine turned and fled like sheep for their boats. It was merciless, but I was seized with the fierce desire to kill, and the Captain was no less enraged. We stepped into the open and discharged our six cartridges into the huddled mass of fear-stricken warriors. Then our spearsmen, no longer to be restrained, rushed at them, and they recovered sense enough to run for the landing.

It was a miracle of human agility the way those demented fugitives gained their boats and pushed from shore. I doubt, had they not left guards to hold the boats, if one would have escaped.

There was little Christian grace in our natives. The war spirit bred in countless generations asserted full sway, and their spears struck home in the backs of the fleeing crowd. When the last boat pushed out beyond reach, there was nothing left to do but shout the terrible war-cry and brandish dripping spears. There were ten war canoes in our possession and more than a hundred of those splendid, proud and arrogant warriors lay dead or dying. On these the victors spent their unappeased vengeance, a movement of a hand, or a gasp, brought a spear thrust, which, though given in cruelty, was really a mercy.

When the victors gathered around the spot where the torn earth and broken trees showed the power of the promised thunderbolt, the chiefs prostrated themselves, and in their own crude way offered thanks to their protecting god. Then they fell at our feet, for we, too, had been thunder-bearers.

It was a great victory, and made our position secure. It turned the tide of events in that little empire, as Marathon, Waterloo or Gettysburg did in greater civilizations. Henceforth the State and the church were one, and that one an unlimited theocracy.

When a god backs a nation it becomes a slave to his priests, and the greater its victories in war, the more abjectly it is crushed by superstition. The priest holds the stirrup for the king to mount the saddle. Poor humanity, from the most ancient recorded days, has been crucified between these two thieves.

There was trouble ahead to keep the heredity of ages in check, and it showed itself before we left the battlefield. The warriors at once began gathering in the dead as hunters bag game.

"The pots will boil to-morrow," sententiously said the Captain.

'No, they must not," replied Coswell. The lesson must be taught now. No more heathen feasts, no more pagan ceremonies."

'You'll have to bend, and let them have their way in this," I said. "They are in no humor to be crossed now, and this will probably be their last opportunity."

"I will not yield," he said pettishly; "I will argue this matter with the Chief, and if he refuses, I shall call on the Oracle."

"No, you must not," I said positively. "We must not put that stain on Bimbumbo, or the spell will be broken. He must not contradict their conceptions of him." He was headstrong and called the Chief.

"Are you to take up your old customs and offend the God you have vowed to worship?"

"For his pleasure, by his command we will do this," replied the Chief. "He brought the enemy to give to us. He promised to crush the foe with his thunderbolt, which he has done, and now what can we do if not give him this sacrifice?"

"If he now told you you must not?"

"He would not. He never contradicts himself. If he did now, I would say this is not the real, it is a make-believe—a liar. Why for you no speak to-day what you talk last Sunday. Then you had a feast in the meeting house. Bimbumbo had a son Jesus, whom he sacrificed. You white men killed him. You gave us a piece to eat of what you said was his flesh, and to drink what you said was his blood. It was sacrifice. We eat these enemies as sacrificed, just as you eat God's son, and say we must eat him to be Christians."

A heathen can be fooled by an oracle, but to be held in the meshes he must have specious consistency, and the oracle keep in memory preceding revelations.

The feasting must be allowed. Even the narrow mind of the missionary clearly saw the futility of opposition.

Preparations began that night and the carnival lasted two days. A serving on palm leaves was brought to us, and most savory morsels piled before the post bearing the oracular "phono." Never in the island's history had there been such victory, never such celebrations. Some of the older warriors told stories of past raids, when they had been driven into the jungle, and seen their villages burned and many of their friends carried away dead or alive for the feasting of the enemy. Now was the time of sweet veangeance, and the obliteration of these same enemies. The Chief made a speech in which he said they had a navy now of their own—ten superb vessels of war, strong men to man them, and proposed before the northern isle recovered to raid their coast. The scheme was received with uproarious approval.

It was weeks before the excitement grew to anything like the old level, and a curb could be put on the spirit of enterprise.

During this time there was great preparation for a raiding expedition. The fleet of war canoes was carefully guarded and provisions gathered, spears sharpened and their handles polished and ornamented. It was like a martial camp. The Captain and I promised to accompany the expedition, for an excuse to repair the ship's boat, in which we proposed to lead the fleet. A spar was rigged for a mast, and a rescued sail was fastened into a mainsheet. Everything we needed we found in the wreckage, and we designed the rigging more like a racing yacht's than a lugging sail-boat. In all this work, to the making of the oars, we had our own pocket knives—good, strong ones, such as seamen carry, yet demanding patience in making things for which an ax is more useful.

Our promise to join the expedition and carry our thunderbolts to discomfit the enemy had greatly offended Coswell. "If you are victorious, you will bring material for another of the orgies, and the people will be entirely uncontrollable," he said peevishly.

"We do not intend to go," I replied. "Can't you see that it is an excuse for us to get our boat, having which we will sail away, to be lost or found, as chance decides."

"Go away and leave me?" There was terror in his voice. "You must not."

"Well, well," I replied, soothingly, "we are not going to-day or to-morrow. Our object is accomplished by having the boat, and the expedition may be delayed at least until a little sense gets into the heads of these savages."

"How would the Oracle answer?" he asked.

"Don't meddle with that. There is a better way. Fan the jealousy between the chief men who aspire to be leaders. They have left it for you to decide, and you tell them they must decide it among themselves."

Thus was dissension introduced, for the head man of each village claimed the right to lead the raiders, and their followers clamorously joined, making two factions which indulged in furious partisanship, such as occurs in the most civilized States.

It was an old, adroit move of statesmanship, and the expedition was kept in the middle ground of the island's politics. It became time to consult the Oracle again, for the temper of the people was prepared. They were called to the assembly and Bimbumbo gave them a talk on moral character, not a word of which to them had meaning.

The Christian seers and the greatest thinkers of the ages, with thousands of years of civilization wrought into the fiber of their brains by heredity, utterly fail to explain or understand the mysteries of their religion. What then of this same religion presented to savages?

No, they did not understand, yet were impressed and ready to say yes to all its requirements.

The "phono" shouted: "I, Bimbumbo, have saved you, my chosen people, and now I require a sign from you. My messenger must lead you into the water and make you a sacrifice to me. Then when you come out you will be like my messenger: free from sin, and when you die you will come to me, where the cocoanuts grow within reach, ten times the size of yours, and are filled with honey, and the fish are already baked for the feast."

OCEANIDES

A Psychical Novel.—Price Paper, Cover, 50 Cents.

This great novel is written with a distinct purpose, to set forth certain phases of spirit life and experience, as related to the gifted and inspired author. The question of soul mates or of the united male and female constituting the completed ego or angel, is advanced as a vital truth of spirit experience in the higher realms. The work radiates a good spiritual influence, and is very interesting.

It is a spiritual book for Spiritualists, and interesting for everyone.

MARY ANNE CAREW

Wife, Mother, Spirit, Angel.—Neat Cloth Cover, Price $1.00.

This great work relates the experiences of a young wife and mother, early called to the portals of death. It is very realistic, and the narrative is charmingly natural, and beautiful in its tone of sweetness. It brings that other world very near to us; the comfort it brings to those bereaved of the dear ones of the home and family, is beyond one's power to describe. All readers will be charmed with it as well as spiritually aided and uplifted.

Prof. Lockwood's Books.

Store your mind with the great but demonstrative truths found in consecutive order only in these writings.

Prof. Lockwood is the only writer, thinker and lecturer in this country who affirms that the evolution of the soul of man is in strict accord and agreement with the evolution of the soul of nature; and that the only proof of immortality inheres in an analysis of nature's fundamental principles and the co-relation of cosmic elements and energies.

These great truths are explained and demonstrated from the plane of the Spiritual Philosophy founded on Nature itself.

The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature and Its Relation to the Philosophy of Spiritualism. A scientific demonstration of the invisible principles and attributes of nature and Modern Spiritualism. A mint of scientific truths as the basis of its phenomena. Price 25 cents.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism—A Menace to the American Civilization. The entire hierarchy of Ecclesiasticism arraigned as infidels for subverting the scientific demonstrations of universities and colleges, by substituting the immoral phantoms of the Mosaic Hypothesis. It is a hot shot. Price 25 cents.

Historical, Logical and Philosophical Objections to the Dogmas of Reincarnation and Re-Embodiment. A concise and masterly review of the historical origin of Reincarnation as an ancient dogma. Its illogical claims and inconsistent assumptions. Its glaring defects and dogmas dissected. Price 25 cents.

The Spiritualism of Nature. Modern Spiritualism has its basic truths in nature, and is proven not by the bible or any sacred cosmogony, but by an analysis of nature's self-existent principles. Price 15 cents.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth. The greatest book, and the greatest truth of any age; a book of 212 pages with several telling scientific illustrations. Continuity of life and the association of spirit realms demonstrated to be in scientific accord with principles of the Co-relation of Force, and the Conservation of Energy. The greatest book ever written in the defence and support of Spiritualism. Price $1.

All of Prof. Lockwood's publications are on sale at The Progressive Thinker office, Chicago, Ill., and at the rostrum when he lectures. These treatises contain the wealth of a vast historical and scientific research.

NEW INVENTION. CLEANS CLOTHES WHILE YOU REST.

NO WASH BOARDS, WASHING MACHINES OR CHEMICALS. NO WASH DAY. NOTHING LIKE IT. NOT SOLD IN STORES.

Easy Way as seen by the Artist.

SEE HOW SIMPLE, different, easy. Put on stove—add water, then soap, then clothes—that's all. In 5 to 8 minutes, clothes clean. Laundries clean clothes without rubbing—EASY WAY does same at your home. You can rest or read between batches. Dirt removed automatically except to move knob occasionally. Clothes cleaned while you get breakfast. With wash board you rub, then boil 20 to 30 minutes, then rub again. Or you boil, then tire yourself running heavy machine, which wears, tears and rubs the clothes—and afterward rub by hand anyway. The EASY WAY does alone in one operation the combined work of wash boiler, wash board and washing machine—less time, almost no labor—no injury to clothes.

EASY WAY creates energy by mechanical manipulation associated with hot water, soap suds, heated steam, and scalding vapor, utilized as a compound force, all contained in a closed compartment. Special operating arrangements.

Cleans woolens, flannels, blankets, colored clothes, as well as white goods, finest laces, curtains, bed clothes. Saves your time, fuel, labor, clothes, buttons. Saves your strength, looks, health, money.

WITH EASY WAY, 30, 40, 50 minutes cleans washing which before took entire day.

No rubbing, wear, tear or injury. No soggy, bad smelling, heavy wood—but all metal, sanitary, light in weight. Easily used, cleaned, handled—always ready. Child can use it—no experiment.

USED BY THOUSANDS WHO PRAISE IT.

J. McGEE, Tenn., writes:—"One young lady cleaned day's washing by old method in one hour with Easy Way. Another in 45 minutes." E. CRAMER, Tex., writes:—"Gave Easy Way a thorough trial. After 10 minutes clothes nice and clean." ANNA MORGAN, Ills., writes:—"I washed a woolen bed blanket in Easy Way in just 3 minutes, perfectly clean." J. H. BARRETT, Ark., after ordering 38 Easy Ways, says:—"You have the grandest invention I ever heard of." J. W. MEYERS, Ga., says:—"Find check to cover one dozen Easy Ways. Easy Way greatest invention for womankind, forever abolishing miserable wash day. Sells itself." I. BECK, Ga., writes:—"Enclose order. Easy Way as represented. Worked 4 days—have 15 orders." J. T. PEAY, N. C., says:—"Been out 2 days—sold 17, for which enclose order. Everybody is carried away that sees it work." C. O. GARRETT, O., writes:—"Showed Easy Way to 7 families, sold 6. Most wonderful and grandest invention." N. BOUCHER, Mass., writes:—"Enclose order for 76 Easy Ways. Everybody wants one—best business I ever had."

Price, only $6.50, complete, ready to use—sent to any address. Not sold in stores. Order now. You won't be disappointed. Mrs. Annie Besant

She is a leading character in Theosophy. She is a brilliant Lady, and a Profound Thinker along Occult Lines. There is very little difference between Theosophy and Spiritualism, and the following report made by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, a devout Spiritualist and a prominent lecturer, will be read with interest.

Through the ceaseless hours of toil, along the years we count a few days which we set apart in the inner chamber as special days, because some great unexpected joys were bestowed upon us. These days are so few we can count them each New Year's night on our fingers—such have been the experiences of mankind since old Sol sent out his first morning edition of sunshine, and since then down through the ages, great lights have appeared in the world of art, literature, invention, commerce and statesmanship, great masters who pushed mankind upward another notch and helped them into a wider horizon.

A great light shone in Chicago for one week, during September. A chosen few were expectantly looking forward to her coming, a few more went to see and hear her, largely, perhaps, from curiosity, but the great majority of our citizens heeded her not, the mart and daily toil, claimed their time and attention.

Mrs. Annie Wood Besant, the head of the Theosophical Society of the world, came quietly to town, with a satchel full of clothes, a brain full of great thoughts, and a soul illuminated. She brought her Karma, Aura and other Theosophical paraphernalia and her charming companion, Mrs. Marie Russak, an American lady with a large solar plexus, engaging manner and becoming gowns.

The special occasion of Mrs. Besant's visit was the 21st annual convention of the American Section of the Theosophical Society. This cult was founded September 17, 1875, by Madame Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, and Colonel Henry Steele Olcott, to form I, a nucleus of Universal Brotherhood of humanity without distinction of race, color, creed, sex or caste. II. To promote the study of Comparative religion, philosophy and science, and III. To investigate unexplained laws of Nature and the powers latent in man.

Madame Blavatsky, H. P. B., as she is called, became the head of the society. She was a superior physical medium, with a large variety of phases, including materialization, and was also a strong mental medium. She worked with great energy and several societies were founded in different parts of the world.

At her death a few years ago, Colonel Olcott became her successor. He was a broad-minded altruist, with fine inspirational gifts and other excellent mental and some physical phases of mediumship.

At his death Mrs. Besant became the leader. Since May, 1889, when she offered herself a pupil, she had proven herself a faithful and advanced teacher and leader, and in May, 1897, she was elected the President of the World's Theosophical Society.

Mrs. Besant delivered her opening lecture in Orchestra Hall, 169 Michigan Boulevard, on Friday evening, September 13, choosing "Psychism and Spirituality" for her subject.

The large auditorium was crowded with an exceptionally intelligent audience anxious to hear her.

The stage was entirely devoid of flowers and all other decorations. A prelude was played on the magnificent pipe-organ, and as that was finished, a side door opened and the speaker stepped upon the platform. She wore a white cashmere embroidered robe, is unassuming, yet possessing an inborn majestic bearing, every fold of her gown, every gesture and even her repose bespeaking her power.

Without preliminaries or introduction, she began speaking and from the time, she had uttered the first word until the close, she swayed that vast audience as with magic wand. She spoke not as man spake, but with gentle authority she taught the people, chained their attention and won their hearts and applause.

Psychism, the speaker said, is the working of one power of intelligence and knowledge, the knowing whether through brain or matter.

Plato said the man who sees the one in the many do I revere as a God. The oneness of all. This is the foundation of every true state of every nation, the losing of the smaller in the larger.

Not HAS man a soul, but man IS a soul. The body is secondary, the spirit is the producer, the body you took on at birth, and at death you cast it aside. The life is the I, the body the garment I wear.

Solids, liquids, gases and ethers, compose matter; some of these ethers science has begun to observe, but there are far subtler ethers, which we call the Astral, and as certain vibrations in the ether which we call electricity carry messages, and as you see through some vibrations carried to your consciousness, hear and feel through others, so there are thought-vibrations which carry their messages to your consciousness, and it is constantly being touched by these subtle forces. Through your thoughts and desires you build the Astral form in which you will dwell to-morrow. If you desire basely, as the brute, it will be base; if lofty, you will ascend to higher spiritual heights.

These psychic faculties though inborn in the human, are but little understood. Through these forces men and women are receiving warnings of approaching accidents or death, premonitions, and messages, the source of which they do not understand. This force when undeveloped, lacks precision and order and cannot be controlled by the will. As man becomes more intelligent, the untrained part of psychism disappears, and he evolves a subtler organism in the astral body, building it along more intelligent lines.

Psychism, the speaker affirmed, has nothing to do with spirituality. Spirituality is the higher perception of the oneness with all, and living according to this vision. You cannot conceivve the spirit of the great masters and follow in their footsteps, unless you feel your unity with the lowest, most helpless and ignorant mortal. The speaker illustrated this by telling the old fable of a woman who, on her way to heaven came across a fallen sister and stepped on her, to facilitate her own progress.

When she arrived at the gate, it was found that she had a stain from the fallen sister upon her garment. The angel turned her aside. Penitently she returned to earth, but soon returned bringing the erring sister with her, when both were admitted.

Mrs. Besant laid stress on honest work, and said that the highest crown with which God can crown his children is the ability to labor, claiming the dawn despite the darkness of the night.

At the conclusion of her lecture the speaker walked to the rear of the platform, made a graceful bow or two to the applauding audience, and retired, trailing in myriads of light and love in the hearts of those unto whom she came to minister. As she left we woke up and realized that it was not what she had said, nor how, but what we felt, that she felt, and knew and REALLY WAS, the mighty power she had breathed upon that audience, which had made the lecture one to think of, to dream over, and to remember always.

On Saturday afternoon from 3 to 5 a reception was given in her honor at the Hotel Stratford, and the entire parlor floor was thronged with the elite of the brain workers of this silk-lined cult, their faces wreathed in smiles, and the rest in lace or broadcloth with white kid gloves, full-buttoned and skin-tight.

It was a very sociable function, old acquaintance was renewed, new workers met, and then everybody had a chance to meet the "Light of Asia," who was good to look upon.

Saturday evening Mrs. Besant delivered her second lecture in Orchestral Hall, speaking on "The Place of Masters in Religion," showing how from time to time the great religious leaders of the world have appeared, each giving to his people a little higher ideal and a different road for the same goal, the teaching suited to the advance of the times and the pulse of its own age. (As the special reporter of The Progressive Thinker was present at that meeting, I will not attempt to cull from the rich ball Hall. None but members were admitted, even reporters were rigidly excluded, though they urged permission to be present. There were about 166 delegates present from 67 societies, distributed in 23 states including Canada and Hawaii. Mrs. Besant held the convention well in hand, and and preliminary business was disposed of easily and quickly. She then gave her annual address, full of ideal teachings as to what the aim of the members should be. Our brothers sins are ours, she said; our brothers' victories ours and our brothers' loss is ours. As much as ye have expelled the least of our brethren ye have expelled us.

Spirituality knows no personality, and therefore, under the law of separateness the excluder becomes excluded.

Imputation and persecution are offenses often committed by those who consider themselves very moral, yet these are deadly sins against the law of love. Sins of the mind are more far reaching than of the body. The criminal is locked up, but the criminal against the code of the brotherhood of man triumphantly escapes. We want no bigotry, but lofty ideals of morality, such as will affirm our brotherhood with the lowest. Fight ignorance with knowledge, darkness with light and console the bereaved by tearing the veil from their eyes, showing them there is no death, teach the erring he is the author of his own errors.

Ye are the threshold of the coming civilization, the bringers of glad tidings, cease bickering as children, become the conscious living men and women, conscious in your own strength and divinity, the strenuous co-workers with your elder brother, Christ.

At the close of the address the business of the convention was again taken up, and Mrs. Besant proved herself Supreme Commander of the gavel as well as the tongue or pen.

I have attended no State or National Conventions for 30 years which were conducted with more business-like progress, order and enthusiasm. Every moment was occupied and no one spoke until recognized by the chair.

If an impulsive delegate would jump upon his feet and begin to pour forth the fullness of his mind, the chairman, with a smile and the most gracious firmness, would ask him kindly to "defer," until the matter under consideration or some matter about to be considered was settled.

The confused, irregular "defers" and so did everybody else until proper time, and recognition.

Questions came up in that convention in which the opinions were as decidedly divided as they were intense, questions which would have put some conventions into an uproar, but the tactful pilot guided the members around the Charybdis Colofarro into smooth waters with the diplomacy and skill of a veteran general, and the delegates did themselves proud.

The value of their high teachings, exemplified in their acts in trying moments, spoke louder than all else, proclaiming that this splendid convention was composed of the cream of the cult, who did not teach cream and practice skim-milk, but lived and practiced what they taught.

The Secretary's report showed that there were 74 branches in America, with 2559 members. Their total income had been $3,868.33 and the expenses $3,120.02, leaving a balance of $748.31 in the treasury.

Much of their propaganda work is done by a field committee whose courage had never failed, whose persistence had never flagged and whose faith never cooled, sending the word into every land.

The election of the American Secretary resulted in the election of Dr. Weller Van Hook of Chicago, who will be the head of the society in the U. S. in the absence of Mrs. Besant, who makes her headquarters in Adyar, India.

To see all the departments of a National Convention carried out and finished in one day between breakfast and supper is a new experience, belonging to the times of rapid transit and hurried living, but the Theosophists did this and did it well.

Before closing Mrs. Besant gave her followers a few parting words, advising them that within the society there is room for every view, and by expressing principles openly, each to strive to serve the master in his own way, giving each the credit for the same earnestness and desire to serve.

When knowledge becomes wider, intuition will be more complete. We may differ, no one of us is great enough to see it all, no one is strong enough to hold the great pole of truth within his feeble hands, and the most opposite truths on this plane may unite on higher planes.

Tolerance is to see how the world looks through another man's eyes; in many ways we cannot dictate how man shall walk. If two members or societies do not agree, separate and let each work in his own way, the truths we serve are greater than our conceptions of them; live the truth and you will have no time to judge your neighbor, each has his own word, syllabled out by his own vision.

Serve the truth as you see it, fearlessly, and though you cannot understand your brother, that which seems discord may bring the most beautiful harmony.

Not a song was sung, not a flower to decorate, no music, yet all was beauty and music, and poetry, and song, and I think I like it quite as well that way. Squabbling amidst flowers and song is like a frost at midsummer, it makes the roses fade and the music seem out of tune.

In the evening Mrs. Besant spoke on "The Value of Theosophy in the World of Thought."

The speaker handled her theme as does the artist his brush and colors, mingling them deftly, producing a living picture in your mind. She pictured the enormous power of thought and hence the value of right thinking.

To the view of the middle ages it was of more importance that a man be orthodox than in right relation to his fellow-man. It was not conduct but belief; to-day we say conduct is everything. No conduct, however, can be right unless the thinking is right. Man is created by thought, what he thinks of, that he becomes.

She demonstrated the fact that we as a people have not risen to the influence of artistic powers, everything centers around our moloch—money—and she showed the refining influence of the artistic, stating that beauty was one of God's greatest gifts to man. The elevating influences of the high teachings of Theosophy will improve art, enlarge science, cleanse politics, and thus help make mankind better. None should be happy while one is degraded— by closing your windows and living at home, forgetting your neighbor, you cannot be happy.

The redemption of human misery will be carried on only as we become fellow-workers with the great redeemers of the world, assisting your brothers to their rights, their duty, their highest happiness and their supreme good.

Each morning at 10 this busy guest of ours received the hosts waiting to see her, and as an overflowing well, so was she giving comfort, and counsel to each.

In the afternoon she answered questions at the headquarters, 26 Van Buren street, where over 100 thronged to get added crumbs of wisdom.

On Tuesday morning she gave some fine stereopticon views in Kimball Hall on the work done in India, and for the benefit of the same, and though the admittance was 50 cents, hundreds were turned away, unable to get in.

The pictures were fine, but the lone woman who stood silhouetted against the screen, picturing the work done by men and women imbued with the spirit of brotherhood for their dark-skinned brother in India, was by far the more attractive to the people. Rajahs, temples, Hindu schools, and altars of the Mahatmas, were new to many and interesting to all, but wherever Annie Besant was she became the center and all else was but as a setting to the central figure.

On Wednesday evening she delivered her final talk to her own, and answering questions, admitted that Madam Blavatsky had again returned to earth in a new incarnation. She spoke on the physical phases of the phenomena, and showed the different manner in which spirits can return and communicate, gave her experiences and told how she had seen her "Master" materialized repeatedly; how easy it is to slip out of the body and dwell in the astral while you are in the flesh. She, however, does not recommend the practice, believing it is an experience and a growth which will inevitably come in the process of your advancement.

Where does Theosophy differ from Spiritualism? It does not; every doctrine taught is a part of the tenets of the faith of Spiritualism. They believe most thoroughly in all the phases of mediumship, but they are not interested so much in the physical phases as are the large majority of Spiritualists.

Were it not for the fact that our mediums make their gifts the means of making their living, in giving demonstrations (this open door through which so much that is unworthy and undesirable has come into our ranks) we would not be the cause for so much offense to the unbeliever.

The Theosophists live their teachings in their daily walk and earn their bread and butter by the toil of hands and brains. Their "gifts" are higher perceptions and more lofty ideals.

The two Philosophies are actually one—but many of the Spiritualists are still flocking in the outer courts of physical demonstrations which appeal more to the sensations, while the Theosophists have entered deeper into the philosophy, fully recognizing the facts and truths and value of the phenomena but needing and desiring no daily or weekly physical demonstrations. After all the differences are simply in the names. You can go into the West Madison street lunch room and get a small steak, garnished with onions and potatoes for 15 cents, or you can go to the College Inn and call for a chataubriant and pay $1.50 and after you have tried each and figured it all out, you find you simply had—beefsteak each time.

So the main difference is in the name, and as our followers of the blessed truths of Spiritualism shall rise above the planes of sense to the planes of inspiration and high living, loving their brothers and sisters, without guile and criticism, seeking not their own, they will find in that highway men and women of all religions, creeds and cults of all colors and races, each seeking the same goal with eyes strained to reach the same haven and there in unity and loving comradeship finding that after all we are all One.

THE GREAT WORK is Vol. III., of the "Harmonic Series." It makes clear the Way of Mastership. This is the Way that leads to Individual Liberty here and hereafter.

Every intelligent man and woman who is seeking for Spiritual Truth should read THE GREAT WORK. Why? Because:

1. It teaches the Constructive Process of Spiritual Development whereby we may communicate with our spirit friends without becoming Mediums.

2. It explains the most mysterious and fascinating phenomena of human life simply and clearly.

3. It presents a new array of demonstrated facts which prove that MASTERSHIP, and not Mediumship, is the Constructive Road to Spiritual Unfoldment, and that it is open to all who elect to travel it.

4. Its author speaks from the standpoint of one who has "had the personal experience and made the demonstration."

5. It presents to the world a Moral Philosophy so simple and exact that it may be understood by a child, and yet so profound as to meet the deepest and most exalted demands of the human soul.

It will be sent post-paid to any address on receipt of $2.00. Address, Department P. T.

SECTIONAL OUT OF GENERATOR.

NEW INVENTION. BURNS AIR. NOTHING ELSE LIKE IT.

MOST WONDERFUL HEATING STOVE EVER INVENTED—CAUSING GREAT EXCITEMENT WHEREVER EXHIBITED. Fuel drawn principally from atmosphere. Uses 395 barrels of air, while consuming 1 gallon of oil. Wood, coal, cost money. ONLY FREE FUEL IS AIR. Supply unlimited. No trust in control. Air belongs to rich and poor alike.

HARRISON'S VALVELESS WICKLESS OIL-GAS AND AIR BURNER STOVE

Automatically generates gas from kerosene oil, mixing it with air. Burns like gas. Intense hot fire. Combustion perfect. To operate—Turn knob—oil runs into burner—touch a match, it generates gas which passes through air mixer, drawing in about a barrel of air, to every large spoonful of oil consumed. That's all. It is self-regulating, no more attention. Same heat all day, or all night. For more or less heat, simply turn knob. There it remains until you come again. To put fire out, turn knob, raising burner, oil runs back into can, fire's out. As near perfection as anything in this world. No dirt, soot or ashes. No leaks—nothing to clog or close up. No wick—not even a valve, yet heat is under perfect control.

D. CARN, IND., writes: "It costs me only 4½ cents a day for fuel." L. NORRIS, VT., writes: "The Harrison Oil-Gas Generators are wonderful savers of fuel, at least 50% to 75% over wood and coal." E. ARNOLD, NEB., writes: "Saved $4.25 a month for fuel by using the Harrison Oil-Gas Stove. My range cost me $5.50 per month, and the Harrison only $1.25 per month." M. KING, VA., writes: "Using one Burner and Radiator, I kept a 16x18 foot room at 70 degrees, when out doors 15 to 20 degrees were registered." REV. WM. TEARN, ME., writes: "This morning 16 below zero, and my library far below freezing point. Soon after lighting the Harrison Oil-Gas Stove temperature rose to summer heat." WM. BAERING, IND., writes: "We warmed a room 13x14 feet, when it was about 10 below zero with one Radiator." Objectionable features of all other stoves wiped out.

Not like those sold in stores. Ideal for heating houses, stores, rooms, etc., with Radiating Attachment; also cooking, roasting, baking, ironing, etc. No more carrying coal, kindling, ashes, soot and dirt. Absolutely safe from explosion. Not dangerous like gasoline. Simple, durable—last for years. Saves expense, drudgery and fuel bills. ALL SIZES. PRICES LOW—$3.25 and up. Sent to any address. Send no money—only send your name and address. Write today for our 30 day trial offer—full description—thousands of testimonials. 1907 Proposition. Catalogue free.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 36 CHICAGO, ILL., OCT. 12, 1907 NO. 933

HELL'S HORRORS.

As Vividly Portrayed by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

A very grim and gruesome pamphlet (grim considering its contents) of 32 pages, from the facile and pungent pen of Dr. Peebles, has just reached us. This pamphlet, handsomely put up in a black paper cover, is entitled, "The Orthodox Hell, Church Creeds, and Infant Damnation." It baounds in quotations from the sermons of orthodox preachers, past and present, with selections from their creeds, their hymns, their teachings concerning infant damnation and a real hell of fire and brimstone.

Here is a sample of their hymns sung to the "praise of God:"

"Far in the deep where darkness dwells,
The land of horror and despair,
Justice has built a dismal hell,
And laid her stores of vengeance there.

"There Satan, the first sinner, lies
And roars and bites his iron bands;
In vain the rebel strives to rise,
Crushed by the weight of both his hands.

"The guilty ghosts af Adam's race
Shriek out and howl beneath thy rod;
Once they could scorn a Savior's grace,
But they incensed a dreadful God.

"Tremble, my soul, and kiss the Son;
Sinner, obey thy Savior's call;
Else your damnation hastens on,
And hell gapes wide, to wait your fall.

"Tempests of angry fires shall roll,
To blast the rebel worm,
And beat upon his naked soul
In one eternal storm.

* * * * * * * * * *

"The breath of God, his angry breath
Supplies and fans the fire—
There sinners taste the second death
And would, but can't, expire.

"Eternal chains and heavy plagues,
Tormenting racks and fiery coals
And darts to inflict immortal pains
Dy'd in the blood of damned souls."

Here follow some of the headings in this breezy pamphlet: "Hell in the Original," "The Devil in Hell," "Hell Within Hell," "Infants in Hell," "Eating Delicious Grapes in Hell," "Hell Being Modified and Cooled Down;" candidly, then, what is hell?

The Doctor published a pamphlet similar to this, though much smaller, a number of years ago, an issue of a thousand copies, which was soon exhausted. The surprising energy and amount of work in travels, lectures and writings that the Doctor at 86 brings out yearly, is a study that may well interest both physiologists and psychologists.

The price of this pamphlet, "Hell's Horrors," is 15 cents. For sale at this office.

SUGGESTS A RELIGION.

And a Very Sensible One.

To the Editor:—There is a saying which goes:

"For every evil under the sun
There is a remedy or there is none.
If there be one, try to find it;
If there be none, never mind it."

The evil which has been attracting the attention of the Spiritualists for the last six months is the persecution of mediums.

It is about time we get to business. To be hauled into police courrts and harassed by lawyers is no pleasure, and our people are finding out that the public needs some concise information or knowledge of Spiritualism.

"Beautiful Fields of the Summerland," "Happy Hunting Grounds," etc., may be all right for decarnated spirits, but we who are still clothed in the flesh need to learn how to live here.

The N. S. A. convention, to be held in October, will be watched earnestly for the solving of this problem.

Are we not to have pamphlets or the equivalent, which can be purchased by all societies and individuals, defining the terms of Spiritualism in intelligible language?

Are we so bigoted (and Spiritualists, heaven knows, can be!) that we cannot accept a broad definition of religion as:

"Religion is that which tends to the best development of the spiritual within man, and brings him into more perfect sympathy and harmony with his fellowman," etc., as defined by Dr. J. A. Marvin in No. 931 of The Progressive Thinker?

The adoption of that will place Spiritualism in that class, and at the head.

One of our greatest speakers has urged the study of the dictionary, and while about it, English grammar might be reviewed, and it seems we ought to be able to find words and expressions ample and suitable to show the world we are not ignoramuses, and our religion, Spiritualism, too lofty in sentiment, too honest in practice, to allow a believer to be a villain or an impostor.

When a man finally does graduate from the school of experience, the flowers he receives are hauled to their destination by the undertaker.

Instead of the workers of every nation trying to oust each other from the means of existence, let them know each other more intimately, and war would soon become impossible.—Hoveden.

A MODERN TRAGEDY.

Beautifully and Comically Illustrated.

A can of nitro-glycerine was lying on the ground,
A full-blown Christian Scientist was promenading 'round.
"Look out!" a little boy cried out, "there's something harmful there!"
He did not heed, he did not hear, but kept his forward stare.

With lungs inflated, head erect, he said "All things are mine!
I am a part of God! All Good traces my life's design.
Fearless am I! I dare to do whatever I desire,
For I am life; I choose, I make, suggest, command, aspire."

"I am peace, joy, prosperity, power, wisdom infinite;
I am a soul! I can control matter with subtle might.
A man is what he thinks; I pulse with God's almighty heart!"—
That nitro-glycerine went off and blew him all apart.

EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

REMARKABLE OCCURRENCE

A Spirit Initiated by a Saint.

Speaking about death, Mr. C. W. Leadbeater, in his book, "On the Other Side of Death," says: "It is impossible for us to calculate the vast amount of utterly unnecessary sorrow and terror and misery which mankind in the aggregate has suffered simply from ignorance and superstition with regard to this one most important matter. There is amongst us a mass of false and foolish belief along this line which has worked untold evil in the past and is causing indescribable suffering in the present, and its eradication would be one of the greatest benefits that could be conferred upon the human race." Now the incident I am going to narrate will go a great way in showing that the spirits of the departed can come to us and we may speak with them and, if they so please, they may as well show us their bodies, that is, the bodies in which they lived in this world.

Swami Satchidananda Balakrishna Brajabala, a devout Baishnava of Brindaban, dictated to me the following incident which I took down in my note-book in Bengali, a translation of which is here given. It may, therefore, be said that the narration is not secondhand, but by the man who himself is connected with the affair.

While the Swami was in Bhagalpur, he used to spend his nights in the verandah of a Mandir on the banks of the river Ganges.

One night when he was alone there, a luminous body approached him from a distance of a few yards.

On approaching him, the luminous figure, which seemed to him to be a vapory and indistinct human form, asked him that some Nam (name of a God, by way of Diksha or initiation) might be given to him. Swamiji replied, "I know not who you are, I don't understand whether what is happening before me is merely a product of imagination or is a real fact. Let me see your form distinctly." Whereon the form became distinct. His body, as it was before his death, appeared in full form and size, and Swamiji noted that the form had a bald head. The form said, "I am the father of your disciple, Pran Krishna." However, to make himself positive and to ascertain the earnestness of the spirit, Swamiji directed him to depart that night and to come back on the next at the time when Swamiji would be in Sankirtan. The form then melted away in his presence.

Next day, when Swamiji was bathing in the Ganges, Pran Krishna came to bathe. From the look on Swamiji who was laughing at him all the while, he presumed that Swamiji had something to say to him. On being asked, Swamiji enquired whether his departed father was bald in his head. He was answered in the affirmative. Whereon Swamiji related to him the affair of the previous night.

Pan Krishna also made arrangement for the Sankirtan that evening, brought flowers, etc., and the Sankirtan that evening became a little grander in the course of which the spirit of Pran Krishna's father came. Swamiji embraced him and gave him a Nam and thus the spirit was initiated and departed fully satisfied.

HERE THE FIRST THING TO BE NOTED IS THE MATERIALIZATION, THAT IS TO SAY, "THE BUILDING OF THE PHYSICAL MATTER ROUND SOME ASTRAL FORM OF THE SPIRIT BODY, IN ORDER THAT THROUGH IT, THE EGO INHABITING THE ASTRAL FORM MAY BE ABLE TO PRODUCE RESULTS UPON THE PHYSICAL WORLD."

The spirit in the first appearance became so materialistic as to be able to make himself visible to the Swamiji and on the next day it became so much materialized that Swamiji was able to embrace him just as a living man would be. The form of the spirit on the first night appeared surrounded by a halo of light; this is why the body of the departed is called his or her astral body. Astral means starry or shining like a star. Secondly, it can be inferred that spirits in the Bhubaloka live in carrying out those of their pursuits which they loved most while in this world. Here Pran Krishna's father might have been a devout man uninitiated in his physical life, who felt the need of initiation very much.—Kartik Chandra Benerjee, B. I., in the Hindu Spiritual Magazine.

When any one of the prouder passions are hurt, it is much better philosophy to let a man slip into a good temper than to attack him in a bad one.—Thomas Paine, in Crisis.

Duty is carrying on promptly and faithfully the affairs now before you. It is to fulfill the claims of to-day.—Goethe.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.

An Old Worker Depicts the Situation in the Silver Gate City.

As usual, spiritual matters are well at the front in the "Silver Gate" city, and under the intelligent and faithful guidance of Chas. A. Buss we are more than holding our own. Our annual State meeting at Santa Barbara was a decided success, and prominent workers there deciding to pay a visit to this locality gave a new impetus to the work here. Mrs. Kate Heussmann-Harveston, Mrs. Sexton, and Mrs. Wells of San Francisco, held three meetings in our temple, which were largely attended, arousing an interest of uncommon degree.

As a test and message medium, Mrs. Harveston has few equals; none better has appeared upon our platform. Mrs. Sexton's work was also highly appreciated, as were the lectures by Mrs. Wells, who claims to be eclectic, as she freely concedes and recognizes the good in all cults and organizations, and is none the less a Spiritualist on that account.

These workers have a decidedly pleasant personality and are ladies in the true sense of the word.

On Thursday evening, September 19, our temple was filled to overflowing, necessitating an extra meeting in lyceum hall, and even then quite a large number were compelled to stand.

Here, as elsewhere, are a number who are disgruntled and who decided to start another meeting in G. A. R. hall, but they have already subdivided—another case of "who shall be greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven."

In the meantime there is no diminution of interest in the First Society, whose members are moving steadily on to unqualified success. Just now we are blest with the services of Dr. Ada Horman-Patterson, who speaks with no uncertain sound, always good, but, it seems to the writer, has added powers with the advancing years.

It is the policy of the management to have none but first-class workers, possessing ability and character as well, hence negotiations are pending for the services of W. J. Colville, for October, who is always a favorite with San Diego people, and there is much pleasurable anticipation in the return of John W. Ring, who is to begin a five-months engagement the first of November.

There was never a time when more interest was manifested by the general public than now, and the First Society is fully equipped to meet the demands of investigators. Truly we are on the top wave of prosperity, and during the fall and winter months there wil be something doing in San Diego.

A HAVEN OF REST.

There dwells one bright Immortal on the earth,
Not know of all men. They who know her not Go hence forgotten from the House of life,
Sons of oblivion.
To her once came
That awful Shape which all men hold in dread,
And she with steadfast eyes regarded him,
With heavenly eyes half sorrowful, and then
Smiled and passed by. "And who art thou," he cried,
"That lookest on me and art not appalled,
That seem'st so fragile, yet deflest Death?
Not thus do mortals face me! What art thou?"

But she no answer made; silent she stood;
Awhile in holy meditation stood,
And then moved on through the enamored air,
Silent, with luminous uplifted brows:
Time's sister, Daughter of Eternity,
Death's deathless enemy, whom men name Love.

WHEN I GO HOME.

It comes to me often in silence,
When the firelight sputters low—
When the black uncertain shadows
Seem wraiths of the long ago;
Always with throb of heartache
That thrills each pulsive vein,
Comes the old, unquiet longing
For the peace of a home again.

I'm sick of the roar of cities,
And of faces old and strange;
I know where there's warmth of welcome,
And my yearning fancies range
Back to the dear old homestead,
With an aching sense of pain;
But there'll be joy in the coming
When I go home again.

When I go home again! There's music
That may never die away
And it seems the band of angels,
On a mystic harp to play,
Have touched with a yearning sadness
On a beautiful, broken strain,
To which is my fond heart wording—
When I go home again.

Outside of my darkening window
Is the great world's crash and din,
And slowly the autumn's shadows
Come drifting, drifting in,
Sobbing, the night winds murmur
To the plash of the autumn rain;
But I dream of the glorious greeting
When I go home again.

MENTAL HEALING.

Something In Reference Thereto from a Scientific Standpoint.

Those who preach the gospel of mental healing [as set forth in the Medical Brief] tell us that sickness is to be cured by disbelieving it, and firmly believing in the universality of divine truth, goodness, or God. As to just what is the curative agent that brings healing to the sick man who thus denies sickness, they speak in vague and general terms, and leave us somewhat in doubt.

They cannot mean merely to affirm that mind acts on body, and that our beliefs may, and to a considerable extent do affect our physical health; for that is admitted by medical men it is a fact, however brought about, it as by themselves. I have known more than one physician who, finding the patient not seriously ill, and needing nothing more than mental treatment, administered bread pills.

And surely, mental healers do not mean to affirm that physical disease can be cured by the mere act of believing. Physical disease is either a fact, or it is not a fact. On the assumption that it is not a fact, it can not be cured at all; for there is nothing to cure. On the assumption that it is a fact, however brought about, cannot be cured by the mere act of disbelieving it. In the nature of things, facts cannot be made other than they are by our beliefs of them. If a man eats poisonous mushrooms, believing them to be esculent, his belief cannot alter the fact that they are poisonous, and save him from their poisonous effects. If a man's lungs are diseased whether by mortal mind or something else, his belief that they are sound does not make them so. Besides, if the relief of pain depends on the sufferer's belief that he has no pain, it can not possibly be effected; for such a belief gives the lie to his consciousness, and is a mental impossibility. The pain is there. He is conscious of it. He may persistently deny it; but he can no more believe that it does not exist than he can believe that he himself does not exist.

Mental healers then, as I understand them, do not mean that the cure is effected by the mere belief of the patient; but they mean that the patient's belief calls into exercise in his behalf the healing power of God. They cite the alleged miraculous cures wrought by Jesus in support of their claims, and lead us to infer that their cures are effected in the same way—that as divine power was put forth to cure the sick who, turning from material aids, came to him in faith; so divine power will be exerted now to heal those who, refusing the help of doctors and drugs, lift their minds and hearts to the Universal Spirit for help. So, we are told, Mrs. Eddy read the story of the man who was healed of the palsy, and "the power which gave him strength," she felt. The life divine which healed the sick of the palsy restored her."

Thus the theory of mental healing seems to be in line with the old conception of divine providence, according to which God, as Luther said: "powerfully and miraculously preserves and defends" those who trust in him. The mental healer, in substance, says to the sick man: Deny your sickness; believe in the all-pervasiveness of good; thus bring yourself into accord with truth, love, goodness, or God, and you will be healed by divine power, as the sick were healed by Jesus. In some wonderful way, your organs, however diseased they may be, will be restored to perfect health, so that they will perfectly perform their proper functions. A miracle will be wrought on you, like that said to have been wrought on blind Bartimeus.

Of course, men of the medical profession deny this theory. They do not believe in miraculous cures. They do not deny that God heals the sick; but they maintain that, whatever we may call the power that heals, it effects the healing through the action of natural forces—cures by the use of natural means. In many cases (such as are said to be cured by mental healers), the natural forces of the body, making for health, are able to throw off its ailments. In other cases these forces are so weakened that they cannot throw off disease without the aid of medicine which, by its action, works with them to produce the desired result. In any case, it is nature effecting the cure.

But God is in nature. The forces of nature, animate and inanimate, are but different forms of the one divine energy. The properties of medicine, as truly as the powers of mind, are expressions of this energy. Hence, what is effected by the one, as well as what is effected by the other, is effected by God; and, even if mental healing were true, it would be no more divine than healing by the use of medicine.

CORPSE SITS UP, CAUSES PANIC.

Woman Surprises Mourners' Assembled for Her Funeral.

Wheeling, W. Va., Sept. 30.—Relatives of Mrs. Frederick Hartzell, the young wife of a farmer living near Huntington, were bemoaning her death to-day a few minutes before the minister arrived to conduct the funeral rites, when she suddenly sat up and climbed out of the coffin.

There was a rush of mourners for the open air, windows being used as exits. The minister swooned when a pale-faced woman over whose body he had been called to conduct services met him at the door.

The family was too poor to have a physician, and the woman fell into a swoon in which state she remained four days. Her husband believed her to be dead and sent for the undertaker. He prepared her for the interment without discovering that life lingered in the body.

People may outgrow natural ignorance, but ignorance carefully cultivated, polished, propagated, and called divine truth, can rarely be outgrown, because it paralyzes the power of growth.—Moncure D. Conway.

LOOKING BEYOND.

The Future State of Existence as Viewed From the Higher Spiritual Standpoint.

That the soul survives the body, and continues its existence in another state, is the belief of the Christian religion; this belief is the foundation of the Christian religion and is based on faith and divine revelation; said divine revelation is believed by Spiritualists to be spirit revelation.

Spiritualists believe that the truth of an existence after this life, has been verified by the return and manifestation of the spirits of those who once lived here in a physical body.

Christians are disposed to contend that the spirit has no power or inclination to return to earth and manifest its presence to the living.

Spiritualists affirm that sympathy survives death, and is an element of attraction by which the spirit is enabled to approach and remain near the loved ones of earth; that there are persons so endowed with a natural constitutional attribute, that they are able to transmit messages of disembodied souls to their friends in earth life; that by this means the truth that the soul survives the body is verified.

Why the church contest this doctrine with the Spiritualists, is because it is not the doctrine of the church. It is a matter of dogmatism.

There is not a person in the world who would not gladly believe the doctrine of spirit return and communion if their minds were not enthralled by prejudice.

The church opposes progress in this direction; progress is not a principle of the church. Progress would disrupt the ignorance involved in their dogmas, and disrupt their church organization. Ecclesiasticism is too strong for this. The preacher would be deposed unless a medium, hence the influence of position which the minister occupies is arrayed against any reform.

The Church and the Spiritualists are directly arrayed against each other in the matter of the origin of phenomena.

The church stands for supernaturalism, and Spiritualists believe the possibilities of nature are sufficient to account for all things.

The church is continually importuning God to turn aside the laws of nature and grant favors to its members.

Spiritualists expect to pay the penalty for violation of nature's laws.

The prayers of the Christians avail them nothing, and yet they profit not from their failure, but continue to pray.

Spiritualists expect a benefit from the influence of good spirits. They have no Jesus to cast their sins upon, but expect to bear the consequences of wrong doing.

Christians do good to please God. Spiritualists do good to benefit their fellowman, that they themselves may be benefited. The only responsibility that they recognize is to their fellowmen. The wrath of God or fear of hell has no influence with Spiritualists. The only hell they have is a consciousness of moral degradation for wrong doing.

Christians do not believe in progress in the other life; they propose to pray and sing around the great white throne of the New Jerusalem forever, conscious, but not caring for the suffering of the eternally damned in hell.

Spiritualists believe in eternal progress here and hereafter; that it is our duty to try and elevate the degraded of earth while here, and hereafter as spirits to continually strive to influence mankind to lead better lives, also to seek to aid the undeveloped spirits to improve their moral condition. They believe that progress is moral improvement; that all will eventually develop out of sin into a better life; that happiness consists in doing good. They do not believe that sin can be forgiven. Jesus did not die for them that they might be saved. Their duty is to save themselves and others by moral improvement.

Now, in reply to the annihilationists as to the nature of the soul. Both Christians and Spiritualists believe that the soul is of a material substance, more intangible than the matter of the physical form.

The Christian doctrine of rewards and punishments indicate that the sensation of pleasure and pain in the other life, are the same as in the life here, and they have a physical conception of their spiritual heaven. The inhabitants of heaven are the same in many respects as the inhabitants of earth, but there is one exception: They are divested of a moral consciousness as to the inhabitants of this world as they have no desire to come back and influence the inhabitants for their good, or to let them know that they have survived death; neither have they sympathy for those that they have eternally damned. This loss of moral consciousness is strictly an orthodox view. I believe that there are many good Christians who do not share in this belief, but there are diverse views among Christians in regard to this matter, yet the Christian heaven is a place of physical or material enjoyment, and their hell is a place of material suffering.

The Spiritualists believe that spirits are material; that their joys and sorrows are the same as the physical, and that moral consciousness is not changed by death. There is no difference between Spiritualist and Materialist when this matter is properly understood.

The primitive idea of spirit has much to do with this misconception, as also has imagination.

There are some who try to convince themselves that they can think of something that is not material.

The ancients thought that the spirit was the wind, and when the body had ceased to breathe the spirit or breath had gone. The word soul gives a better idea of corporeality pertaining to that which survives the body after death. There can be no conception of a thing that is not material. A thing that is not matter has no existence; it is nothing. Even thoughts are things.

Every sense of the body depends on the material out of which the body is composed.

We cannot receive or give out an idea that does not involve the existence of matter, yet with matter, in whatever form it is presented, there is ever present force that is eternally persistent. There is no matter without force, nor force without matter. Life is a form of force by which the spirit animates the body. There is no vacuum in space; attenuated matter as ether fills all space.

Death is only a change in the form of matter. The matter of the physical body is thrown off, leaving the ethereulized spirit body, and nearly all the characteristics of physical life with the spirit.

Now as to the eternal existence of the soul, no one can say.

Proof of immortality is impossible, as it involves the idea of infinity.

We have evidence that the soul survives death, but the duration of that other life we do not know.

The primary concepts of science are the indestructibility of matter—(No matter was ever created or ever destroyed), and the eternal persistence of force. Force varies and changes into different forms of manifestation, but never is less persistent.

Life and intelligence are presented to us as forms of force in connection with matter. All the phenomena of nature are presented to us in the same way.

Force is presented in connection with organic matter, as motion without cessation.

There is no stability; change, eternal change is the the order of nature. The soul of man is exempt from this immutable law of nature. We change from birth continuously through life to the old age that ends in death, when a radical change is made into another life, and where according to the testimony of those gone before, change unending, continues, is.

When more perfect means of communication between that other world and this is established we will be better able to understand the development of the soul involved in this change.

The soul of the infant is not the soul of old age. Even the trace of identity is lost in the lapsing memory of age. Memory alone identifies us with the past. When memory fades identity is lost.

The soul of earth is not the soul of a future life. Change has marked its advent into that better land, free from the environment of earth.

There is reason to believe that the soul comes into being with the body, and developes with it, and when the body is cast off continues to develope in another condition of life, and may continue on in this way for all eternity; but infinite existence would necessarily be accompanied by infinite transmutation.

Having survived the change of death in the ending of this life who would say that the soul of man may not survive all the changes which eternity may bring.

It has been urged by annihilationists that matter would in time all be made into souls; but I would urge that the quantity of matter is infinite.

Great is the reasoning powers of the human intellect, but the infinite potentiality of nature transcends its capabilities.

THIS WAS THE SONG.

We have forgotten. This the rowers knew,
Straining within the galley's reeling night,
Life bent on breaking, while their souls grew
Strong in the ancient purpose of Time.
This was the song whereby they made their fight,
Laughed as they swung. Gods! how the cord bit through!

This was the song the lovers heard.
Wakened by flowers in a rose-red dawn,
Through the bright dew they fled, like ocean stirred
With morning. Bare and beautiful they ran,
Holding each other's hand.
Through leaves they're gone,
Cleaving the silver pool with flash of bird.

Carven in stone, Abydos holds it fast:
The little Eastern dancer with her lute,
Wild Erin's fairies crying for the past,
They keep the deathless secret of the word
Hid behind Nature's lips who, krave, remote,
Guard from the profanation till the last.

Not unto us who bide the ebb and flow,
The senseless order of the tide of law,
We have forgotten to be free, we know
Only the iteration of the day.
The priceless moon, white pearl without flaw,
Drowns in the muddy stream of worldly woe.

We take the petty part and leave the whole,
Lost to our ken the song of Nature's youth,
The great barbaric winds that sweep the soul
And leave it emptied of all else but truth.

FROM A PRISON CELL.

Sweet spirit voices sing over me
Tuneful and jubilant. How can it be
That the songs of gladness which float so far,
As if they fell from an evening star,
Are the mates of one who never may see
Visible music of flower and tree?
Purple of mountain, or life of the free,
Or ruby and gold of the sunset's glow,
Oh never the sight of a loving face—
Must not my cell be a desolate place?
For my soul is sealed with the seal of years;
Mine eyes are opened only to tears.
How can I live in the dark like this?
Where is my fountain of life and bliss?

Oh! My spirit can see! My spirit can see,
And it's sight is strong, and swift and free.
Never the ken of a mortal eye
Could pierce so deep, and far and high
As the eagle vision of hearts that dwell
In the lofty sunlit citadel
Of Faith, that overcomes the world;
Its banners of Hope and Joy unfurled;
Garrisoned with spirits of perfect peace,
Ringing with harps that never cease,
Flooded with glory from throne above,
Celestial sea of the Spirit of Love!

My soul can see! My soul can see!
Well may I sing so joyously,
For my guides themselvves, with tender grace,
Have shown me the brightness of spirit face,
And who shall pine for a glow-worm light
When the spirit goes forth in radiant might?
I can read his word as a shining chart:
"Thou shalt not from this path depart."
Through joy and sorrow, every day
His hand has written it all the way,
And so from the path I'll seek not to stray.

My spirit can see! My spirit can see
Beyond the gloom and the mystery
Glimpses of glory not far away,
Nearing the bright'ning every day,
Golden, crystal, and emerald bow,
Lustre of pearl and sapphire glow,
Sparkling rivers and healing tree,
Evergreen palms of victory,
Harps and crowns and radiant white,
Holy and beautiful dwellers in light,
And the holiest sight in that holy place
Is the radiant smile on my baby's face.

My Darling Babe! 'Tis joy for me
That my ears can hear, my spirit see;
I am drawn by love and faith so strong,
That my thoughts flash forth on the pathway long.
I am in prison, but you up there
Dwell 'mid the spirit's tend'rest care,
My prayers are for you whom my soul loves best,
And I ask the angels to give you sweet rest.
O, Babe! What shall our greeting be
When our spirits shall meet and our eyes shall see,
When the severing sea with its restless tide
Never shall hinder, never divide?

HAS THE BEE A SOUL?

And Does the Soul Live After the Death of the Bee?

How doth the little busy bee improve each shining hour with the honey which is not found ready made in the flower? The saccharine liquid which the bee extracts from the flower is collected in a pouch of the digestive tube. It is disgorged in the hive, where the greater part of the water is evaporated while the sugar is transformed by chemical action. When this transformation is completed and the quantity of water is reduced to 25 per cent the honey is stored in the cells which are sealed hermetically with wax. The sweet liquid which is secreted by many flowers has received the poetic name of nectar. It exudes from the surface of organs called nectaries and consists chiefly of cane sugar, fruit sugar and water. But nectar is not the only source of honey. On sunny days in summer and late spring objects placed under the linden and some other trees soon become covered with drops of sweet, viscous liquid known as honey dew. It exudes from the general surface of young and even of full grown leaves. Honey dew may be produced on extremely hot days, and it is abundant in dry seasons, when it forms a valuable supply for the bees, although it yields an inferior honey owing to the presence of gum. Some of the trees and shrubs which frequently produce honey dew are the oak, ash, linden, maple, poplar, birch, hazel, blackberry, and barberry. Usually the honey dew is produced through the agency of plant lice, which extract the sweet sap of leaves and digest only a small portion of it. But Gaston Bonnier has demonstrated the possibility of its production without the insects. He placed a cut branch in a moist atmosphere and immersed its end in water. In a short time many fine drops of sweet liquid appeared on the under surface of the leaves.

A MOST EXCELLENT MAN.

The Passing on of Another Lifetime Spiritualist.

To the Editor:—I think it due our long-time upholders and workers that we erect mausoleums of loving remembrances to their memories and keep the flowers of appreciation ever fresh upon them as we too journey along the pathway they have gone.

On July 29, there passed over the divide, our friend and brother, George L. Congdon, of Elgin, Ill. I say our friend because he was the friend of every Spiritualist in the world. To him the name was precious, the phenomena were precious and the philosophy a delight.

When a prosperous merchant and manufacturer in Chicago the cause was dear to him, and when he made Elgin his business and social home he abated none of his interest in the workings of the spirit world in our behalf. He gave of his means and opened the doors of his rooming house for seances and meetings and was instrumental in bringing many into the light of the new dispensation.

In later years, after marrying the third time, he lived in a lovely home in the north part of the city of Elgin, on what was at one time a part of the large estate which he purchased in 1881, when he built the first shoe factory in Elgin, and opened up Congdon's addition to the city.

Those who attended the grand picnic of the Spiritualists of Chicago and outlying towns this last summer, will recall the beauties of our brother's home and his genial presence even though then he was rapidly nearing the day of transition. It came by growing weakness until he could not rise from the bed and in a week's time the silver cord was loosened and the golden bowl was broken without suffering of any kind.

Mr. Congdon was born in Northbridge, Mass., May 7, 1839, and began the work of manufacturing boots and shoes in Grafton, Mass., when little more than twenty-one. After a few years he went to Chicago and became one of the builders of that new city's great industries, running both factory and stores. The great fire destroyed these, but not his intrepid energy and enterprise. Putting up a board shanty, he was soon under way again with a remnant of machinery, tools and stock which two hours' time had enabled him to save in two wagons drawn by horses and one by his men who had to hold a fourth wheel on as they trundled out to the west of the fire line. When the change was made to Elgin, ten years later, he stood for twenty thousand dollars before the business world.

The same enthusiasm he put into his work he put also into Spiritualism, but one misfortune followed another until ill health brought him to the place of rest, his work all done except to hold still true to the religion he had held from his boyhood days, the best he could find.

His funeral was largely attended, the Silver Leaf quartette rendering fine music, Mrs. West officiating as speaker.

Although a Mason of high degree, the Modern Woodmen, of which order he was a member, attended to the funeral rites. The worn casket of the soul was laid beneath the evergreens in the cemetery of McHenry, the former home of Mrs. Congdon, while that soul reveled in the new delights of freedom and of reunion. To your correspondent he has given back the word that "It was the happiest experience of all his life." He has left his earthly home in fleshly form but in conjunction with his arisen friend, George Bowen, there is a work to be done in Elgin, of which we shall hear before many years.

MRS. M. A. CONGDON.

MIDNIGHT HOUR.

'Tis silence o'er the midnight plain,
I hear your gentle voice again,
My soul delights to view the scene,
The valley fair in fertile green.
The moon whose silvery brightness spreads
Around the vale, and nature sheds
Her emerald mantle on the trees—
Your voice is wafted on the breeze.
Of summer night like long ago,
As we two rambled to and fro.

Methinks it is that night again,
When first I whispered love's sweet strain
Into your ear, with loving voice,
When soul to soul we did rejoice.
You vowed to be my very own,
But now my life is cold as stone,
For death's fair angel came one day
And bore my gentle love away
To mansions fair in Spirit light,
And now she lives with angels bright,
In home of beauty by the shore
Of Beulah Land, and pain no more
Can reach her soul so pure and true,
Alas, my love, I mourn for you.

In path of life I'll e'er incline
To keep my soul as pure as thine,
And know when I throw off the coil
Of earthly chain and free from toil,
I'll come from earth to your bright home
And clasp your loving hand and roam
Through fair, bright landsscapes studded o'er
With gorgeous flowers and birds that soar,
And sing among the happy bowers
Where we shall spend the happy hours,
And dwell and sing forevermore
With angel bands on Beulah shore.

Woman Completes a Voting Machine.

A Columbus woman has submitted a voting machine for formal approval of the State Commission, and it is said that the machine will do more and better work than any other machines brought to the commission's attention. Women get a vote only at school elections in this state, but it appears that this fact did not destroy interest in voting and the possibilities of a voting machine, upon which the Columbus woman's husband spent 10 years of toil and study, he dying 6 years ago, leaving the machine in an unfinished stage. She took up the work and finished it and now has a voting machine which it is said will do all that is required of such a machine.—Youngstown (Ohio) Vindicator.

Four Great Sins the Church Is Called Upon to Combat.

One Is Viewed from the Catholic Standpoint---Three from the Protestant---Some Comments Thereon, by R. A. Dague.

The Pope of Rome has issued an encyclical in which he condemns modern thought as a great sin. Among other commands are the following:

"MODERNISTS ARE TO BE REMOVED FROM PROFESSORSHIPS AND THE DIRECTION OF EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

"THE CLERGY AND FAITHFUL ARE NOT TO BE ALLOWED TO READ MODERNIST PUBLICATIONS.

This is in keeping with the custom of the Catholic church since the days of Constantine. Science, philosophy, inventions, education, liberal government, the right of men to think, has had to fight the church inch by inch in the long weary centuries past. The early astronomers, philosophers—reformers of every kind, were persecuted, imprisoned, tortured, burned, and beheaded by the church. Gutenberg and Faust, who invented printing, were imprisoned because the church said they had invented a black art and were in league with the Devil. The inventor of the umbrella was persecuted as a heretic for his wickedness in "inventing a contrivance which would prevent God from sending his rain on the just and unjust."

The Catholic church has always taught, and now teaches, the impossible doctrine of transubstantiation, which is, that when a priest mumbles some words over some wine and fragments of bread, that those substances are instantly changed, and become the REAL, ACTUAL body and blood of Jesus Christ.

In the long ago, on one occasion, it has been stated, a mouse ran out of the wall, seized a morsel of this divine bread and carried it into his hole. A council of Right Reverend and holy bishops, priests, archbishops and cardinals, discussed earnestly and protractedly this proposition:

"CAN A MOUSE EAT A PORTION OF THE BODY OF GOD?"

It was finally decided that the animal had committed a heinous sin; the walls were torn down, a mouse captured which was then burned to ashes and the ashes sprinkled over the altar with solemn and befitting ceremonies. Poor old Pope! Doubtless he is sincere. Amid the blaze of enlightenment of this progressive age he is pained and bewildered, and hopes to turn the world about face, and compel it to go back to the good old times when the roasting of astronomers, inventors, scientists and philosophers, was a frequent pastime of "holy men."

And now a few words about our Protestant friends. An annual State Conference of a powerful Protestant denomination, held at Seattle, adjourned last week. They discussed several propositions. None elicited more eloquence and denunciation than the awful sin of dancing, playing cards for social recreation, and attending the theater. Vivid word pictures were drawn of how Satan was destroying the rising generation, and luring them to an endless hell through whist, and euchre, and the waltz, and Virginia Reel, and the awful theater. So far as I could learn from the published proceedings, nothing was said about the small sins of the killing of Jews by Christians in Russia, nor about war, nor the enslaving of two millions of children in the shops and factories of this country, nor about wholesale land stealings, political thievery, and stock watering, and grafting, and the exploiting of the working people; nor about infanticide, and abortion, and race suicide so prevalent among church people and others.

Evangelist Hart, who is one of the same faith as those who composed the conference referred to, held a great revival in Tacoma last winter, in a tabernacle erected for that purpose. Night after night he thundered against the awful sins of dancing and theater-going—especially the latter. Scores of converts flocked to the altar, a large portion being schoolgirls in short dresses. These children were frightened at the preacher's awful threats of what his God would do if they didn't repent of the heinous crime of "tripping the light fantastic toe" when they heard a fiddle, and going to matinees. Scores of these boys and girls—mostly girls—were frightened into the folds of the church. Two went insane, one of whom is now in the asylum.

Are some Protestants any less superstitious and narrow-minded than the Catholics?

Here is an incident which would indicate that they are not.

A few days ago tiny Countess Magri, aged 65, formerly Mrs. Tom Thumb, was in this city. In an interview she said that when many years ago she traveled with P. T. Barnum, the country people would not enter a tent to see an exhibition. Mr. Barnum had to hire a hall or put up a wooden structure. Quoting from the published interview she said:

"We traveled with Barnum, but did not appear under canvas. That was 45 years ago. The church people would not go near anything under canvas, nor would they go to a place where there was a stage curtain that rolled up or down. Barnum therefore arranged a curtain which drew back on a wire. The church people thought that was all right, but for my part I could not see why it wasn't as sinful with one kind of curtain as another."

Now, seriously, were not these church people about as superstitious as their brethren of the long ago who thought God would damn the inventor of the umbrella?

Ought simple amusements to be held up by the clergy as soul-destroying sins? Take the theater for instance. But little progress was made against slavery in the United States until "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was dramatized and played in the theaters all over the land. I am informed that nearly all the great authors of the drama were educated, refined, moral men and women. In their plays they have extolled honesty, justice, mercy and love. I do not remember any play of note in which villainy was not defeated, and honor, and justice, and virtue vindicated. I have, at the theater, heard high-class music, seen beautiful scenery and paintings, and have been stirred by the thrilling oratory, and have had my deepest sympathy and sense of justice aroused. I have, with hundreds of others, lustily cheered the hero who fought for honor and justice, and who defended the defenseless and weak. I have scorned and hissed the seducer, the oppressor, the tyrant and the vile. Often have I heard great audiences applaud over some act in which intrigue and villainy were thwarted, and virtue and innocence defended and made to triumph. I have seen thousands weep over the representations of the wrongs and sufferings of the poor, the oppressed and the friendless. The stage has its faults, but it is a powerful educator. The pulpit is a great educator also, but it lives too much in the past.

I have a son whom I devotedly love. Shall I sometimes send him to theatrical plays where he will hear excellent music, and where hypocrisy, sensuality and villainy are defeated, and truth, virtue and honor are made to triumph, or shall I send him to those Sunday schools and churches which present to him old Bible characters guilty of all the crimes in the calendar as "holy men" worthy to be patterned after? Shall I send him to those places to be taught that God put lying spirits in the mouths of his own prophets; that he approved of the lie told by Jacob to his old blind father, through which he cheated Esau, his brother, out of his portion of his father's estate; that he authorized Moses to kill all the wives and mothers taken prisoners in war, and turn over the virgins to the soldiers; that he confirmed and carried out and confirmed to this day the curse pronounced by the drunken Noah, of everlasting slavery on unnumbered millions of the descendents of his son, whose offence consisted in chiding his father for getting intoxicated and indecently exposing his person; that the murderous, adulterous King David, who burned prisoners of war, sawed off their arms and legs, and tore away their flesh with harrows of iron—that this monster was "a man after God's own heart;" that God demanded the cruel death of his only begotten son to appease his wrath toward the other children of his own creation, and that now, no matter how immoral or criminal may be our lives, we may escape all the consequences of wrongdoing through the "vicarious atonement," and that if we do not accept this "free salvation," no matter how good we may have been, God will torture us in hell forever?

Yes, I think I would prefer that my boy should occasionally go to a good theatrical exhibition than to the "sanctuary" where such "religion" is taught. Doubtless there are theaters whose exhibitions are not of a high character, but for fifty years I have frequently attended the theater, and I never saw a play which did not teach higher ideals than those taught by the above-mentioned orthodox beliefs and doctrines.

John Calvin, Jonathan Edwards, and other "holy men," taught that God eternally damned babies before they were born for his own glory; that Satan once thwarted God's plans, and that in consequence of that, this world has ever since been a vale of woe; that all joy, and happiness, and worldly amusements and pleasures, are but cunning schemes of the Devil for the destruction of our souls. The dark shadow of those dismal teachings still befogs the brains of many of our Christian ministers to-day.

Poor, old, deluded Pope! He is a back number. By his bulls he hopes to stop progress and the working of the law of evolution.

Narrow minded and frightened, however good their intentions, are many Protestant orthodox pulpiteers. Blinded by creeds and theological teachings formulated in an ignorant age, deluded by the idea that the Bible is inerrant and infallible, and that all wisdom was revealed in the infant age of the world, they tremble with fear of their God if they should dare to indulge in a little freedom of thought, and they sit looking backward for light and inspiration while the Car of Progress and unfettered thinking goes by them.

Spiritualists and Christian Scientists, and Universalists and Unitarians, and all New Thoughters, should pity our dear brethren of the cloth. They are in "fogland;" they are confused; they believe their "holy scriptures," which say that "Satan is going up and down in the earth seeking whom he may devour;" they believe "Old Scratch" invented the fiddle, the theater, and the games of euchre and "seven-up," and they cry aloud their warnings, but the people will take no heed of their cry; their pews are nearly empty; but few students are found in their theological colleges; the young people prefer going to the skating rink, the parks, the theater or other places of amusement to attending church to hear eulogies pronounced upon the savage, adulterous, polygamous slave-holding old kings and warriors of the past, and to listen to the threats of what the wrathful, jealous, changeable orthodox God will do with them if they don't stop their fun and hilarity.

Come, you brethren of the sanctuary, out of the dismal theological caves and get into the glorious sunlight of New Thought. Put aside for a while the writings of men who lived centuries ago, even before printing was invented, and when the earth was believed to be flat, and investigate what is taught now by able, thinking, illuminated men on science, inspiration, immortality, life, death, and God. The minds of men of this day, unfettered by the cobwebs of old theologies, are being flooded with light. Old theologies, as well as old machines and old methods of doing things, are rapidly passing away. A glorious new cycle is being ushered in.

DO NOT MAKE THE MISTAKE OF THINKING THAT BECAUSE YOUR SYSTEM OF RELIGION IS VERY OLD IT IS THEREFORE INFALLIBLE. OLD THINGS MAY HAVE BEEN USEFUL ONCE AND BE WORTHLESS NOW. ABOUT FACE, BRETHREN; FORWARD MARCH INTO A BROADER, A MORE SENSIBLE, A MORE CHEERFUL AND A HAPPIER THEOLOGICAL CAMP.

A Noble Man's Ascension.

IN MEMORY OF HON. A. GASTON.

Impressive Services Held at the Home—A Large Number of Relatives and Friends Were Present to Pay Their Respect to the Memory of a Man Beloved by All.

Athelston Gaston was born in Castile, Wyoming County, N. Y., April 24, 1838. At the age of two years his parents moved to Allegany County, where they resided fourteen years.

They moved to Crawford County, Pa., where his home has since been, with the exception of four or five years.

He was a farmer in early life and later became engaged in the lumber business, in which he was very successful, combining the qualities of strict attention to business, hard work and sterling integrity in all his dealings.

He became interested in Spiritualism when seventeen years of age, and after a careful investigation of the phenomena, became convinced of its truth and has always been a devoted student of its teachings and a fearless supporter of the cause. He was elected one of the trustees of Cassadaga Camp (Lily Dale) in 1884, and upon the resignation of Mr. Skidmore as president, in 1887, Mr. Gaston was unanimously chosen as his successor.

He was most efficient and far-reaching in his work and influence for the good of the camp.

In 1861 he married Miss Thankful C. Hammond, a lady of great culture and refinement. There has always been the deepest sympathy between them both in the matter of Spiritualism (their mutual religion) and all great purposes of life. Mrs. Gaston was a fine medium for messages from their personal friends, and the hour of "communion" was ever held sacred and inviolable by them.

She passed on four years ago to join their lovely daughter and many friends awaiting them in that better land.

He was twice chosen Mayor of Meadville by popular vote, and once represented his district in Congress, but he did not care for political life, and in later years lived for his friends and family.

In the last few years his health has been failing and it was in the hope of gaining somewhat of his impaired strength that he joined a club having for their camping and hunting grounds the wilds of Canada. It was during one of these trips, in company with friends and the hunters or guides, that he met his physical death by a fatal shot from one of the party, he having remained behind to rest and one of them mistaking the figure in the canoe for the coveted game, he having changed his position after they left.

It was a great shock to the entire community, but more so to the unfortunate friend who unwittingly fired the gun.

A human loss that none can fill has come to us all, but we know he, with the hosts of arisen ones, liveth and worketh for the truth and for all who need his aid. C. L. V. R.

Rogers Park, Oct. 1, 1907.

The Meadville Messenger says:

"The funeral of Hon. Athelston Gaston was held at the home, 581 East Chestnut street, Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and was attended by a large number of relatives and friends, who came to pay the last tribute of respect to an honored and distinguished citizen of the city and the State, and a generous and sympathetic friend of the community in which he lived.

"Assembled beneath the shadow of a great sorrow, the friends who knew Mr. Gaston in all his relations in public and private life, and who recognized his integrity of character, his kindness and his generous deeds of charity toward those who were in need, manifested an especial and added sorrow in the thought of the sudden and tragic ending of his life. But they recall that for years he had been a sufferer, and would possibly have fallen long ere this were it not for the indomitable will and determination that withstood all trials, and was still cheerful and thoughtful for the sufferings and afflictions of others. His time had apparently come, and God in mercy called him by a sudden and painless death. His friend who became the unconscious instrumentality of the final ending of the life that was almost as dear to him as his own, has the sincerest sympathy of all who realize the sad and sorrowful circumstances under which it occurred.

"The impressive funeral ceremonies were opened by a quartet composed of Miss Helen DeArment, Miss Gillespie, Mr. E. L. Lawrence and Mr. H. S. Robinson, who sang with fine expression the hymn, "Some Time We'll Understand," which was followed by an earnest and eloquent prayer by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, of Chicago, Ill. The choir then rendered another selection entitled "My Jesus as Thou Wilt." Mrs. Richmond then paid an eloquent tribute to the life and character and faith of the deceased.

"'The great, noble, generous-hearted friend and brother now lies with arms folded across his breast cold in death. The man whom those who knew him best, loved him most. As a citizen and a man he held a place in the hearts of friends and acquaintances to which few, if any other, can ever aspire to occupy. He was not afraid to die. He often spoke of death and the future life as a living change from earth and its turmoil and its trouble. He felt that he had nearly served his time here; that his activities of life were nearly ended, and though he was not hastening, yet he longed to go. His faith was ever strong and steadfast that he would meet the loved ones that had gone before. His faith and his religion were his own, but he granted to others the full enjoyment of their faith and hope and consolation that he enjoyed, however theirs might differ from his own.

"'All who knew him can testify his interest in every great movement for the relief of suffering humanity throughout the world. As a friend he was faithful and true; as a husband thousands have witnessed his loving care and ministrations to relieve the suffering and cheer the despondency and make the years of an invalid wife comfortable and happy. As a brother, he was always helpful and kind and generous.'

"The eulogy of Mrs. Richmond was a masterpiece of poetic imagery and beauty of expression. Mrs. Richmond was followed by Lyman C. Howe, of Fredonia, N. Y., who paid a beautiful tribute to the life and personality of Mr. Gaston, with whom he had a near and dear relationship as a friend and brother of the same faith. The addresses of Mrs. Richmond and Mr. Howe were given marked attention by the large audience, many of whom were affected to tears.

The choir closed the services by singing "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me." The benediction was pronounced by Mrs. Richmond and the audience took their last view of the departed friend. The remains were laid to rest in Greendale cemetery. The services at the grave were conducted by Mrs. Clara Watson, of Jamestown, N. Y. By the special request of Mr. Gaston eight nieces assisted as honorary pallbearers: Mrs. H. H. Haseltine, Mrs. O. H. Hood, Dr. Sarah Gaston-Frack, Mrs. William Dunbar, Mrs. John Whitling, Mrs. Glen Hawkins, Mrs. Holmes and Mrs. G. G. Gaston. The active pallbearers were John J. Shryock, W. S. McGunnegle, Thomas Roddy, James P. Colter, E. W. McArthur and F. E. McLean."

Resolutions of Respect.

The following resolution was passed by the Meadville Spiritualist Society at its regular meeting on Sunday evening, and it was voted that a copy be sent to each of the Meadville daily papers for publication, and that copies be sent to the members of the family:

Resolved, That the members of the Meadville Spiritualist Society, by the passing to the higher life of their president, the Hon. Athelston Gaston, has lost the bodily presence of an efficient and beloved worker in the cause of Spiritualism. The Society as a whole hereby acknowledges the eminent service he has rendered to the cause of liberal religion. Prominent for long-continued and loyal service, his name stands honored among his co-workers. He was fearless in promoting the cause of religious freedom and in his declaration of truth. With a heart open and loyal in the service of good works to his fellow man, he gave his willing help, his constant support and best judgment to the cause he loved.

A Prominent Medium Passed to the Region of Souls.

To the Editor:—Mary Wakeman, at her home, 437 West 57th street, passed to spirit realms at the age of 87 years, on the 26th inst.; also the home of her sincere friend, Joseph F. Snipes. He has supplied her physical needs for many years, and has been as dutiful as a son could be.

The funeral services were conducted by Mrs. Helen T. Brigham, on the evening of the 28th ult. She is a gifted inspirational speaker. I have heard her during the last thirty years on many funeral occasions, and do not know of one that can excel her in rendering rational consolation to the bereaved.

There was an abundance of beautiful floral tokens at Mrs. Wakeman's funeral, including "Wheel of Life," and flowers from the First Association of Spiritualists; Mary A. Mewton, president, and Margaret Gaule Reidinger, psychic and speaker.

Mrs. Reidinger, at the meeting on the 29th ult., rendered a beautiful tribute to the memory of Mrs. Wakeman, who was one of the oldest Spiritualists of New York. She was a trance medium from childhood, and gave comfort to hundreds of sorrowing friends during the last 34 years, and is deeply mourned by them. She had a gentle, loving nature, and was charitable to the poor.

A few days before her departure, a friend called upon her, and as she left, bid her good-by, and said: "I will call again Friday." Mrs. Wakefield replied: "That will be too late, as I shall pass away Thursday" (which was the 26th ult.).

Mrs. Wakeman was a member of a club called The Society for Political Study, whose president, Mrs. John S. Judge, was a personal friend. The remains were cremated at Fresh Pond, L. I., by her earnest request.

Those who have attained to four-score and over are unconscious but a few moments when dying, and to one who had lived the principles of love and wisdom or true, exalted Spiritualism, how glorious must be the awakening in spirit realms. The heavenly visitors descended to enfold Mrs. W. in their exalted love. I have been three months in my 81st year, and realize that I am approaching the period when I shall take the grandest excursion of my life—to the Summerland, to mansions not made with hands, on beautiful islands floating upon a still finer ether than Mother Earth. A NEW CATECHISM

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

Fourth Edition—Six Additional Chapters—260 Pages, Bound in Cloth, $1.00.—Containing Likeness of the Author.

"A New Catechism" has enjoyed a remarkable sale both in America and England. George Jacob Holyoake, in his introduction to the English edition of "A New Catechism," says:

"A New Catechism" is the boldest, the brightest, the most varied and informing of any work of the kind extant. The principal fields of human knowledge, which the churches have fenced round with supernatural terrors, the Catechism breaks into, cherishing what is fair and showing what is deformed. The notes, of which there are many, both ancient and contemporary, are as striking as the text. The book is a cyclopedia of theology and reason in a nutshell.

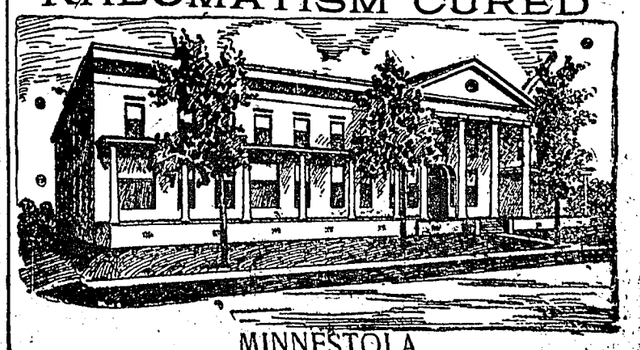
JESUS CHRIST A MYTH.



A New Book.—Price 25 Cents.

This book examines the evidence for the historical existence of Jesus, and finds it quite insufficient to prove that such a man as Jesus ever lived. It is a most important contribution to Modern Thought. It is prefaced by a letter to the Christian Clergy, and concluded by an answer to an editorial in one of the Chicago morning papers, attacking Mr. Mangasarian's position. Send your orders at once, as the first edition will soon be exhausted.

A MOST EXCELLENT MAN.

The Passing on of Another Lifetime Spiritualist.

To the Editor:—I think it due our long-time upholders and workers that we erect mausoleums of loving remembrances to their memories and keep the flowers of appreciation ever fresh upon them as we too journey along the pathway they have gone.

On July 29, there passed over the divide, our friend and brother, George L. Congdon, of Elgin, Ill. I say our friend because he was the friend of every Spiritualist in the world. To him the name was precious, the phenomena were precious and the philosophy a delight.

When a prosperous merchant and manufacturer in Chicago the cause was dear to him, and when he made Elgin his business and social home he abated none of his interest in the workings of the spirit world in our behalf. He gave of his means and opened the doors of his rooming house for seances and meetings and was instrumental in bringing many into the light of the new dispensation.

In later years, after marrying the third time, he lived in a lovely home in the north part of the city of Elgin, on what was at one time a part of the large estate which he purchased in 1881, when he built the first shoe factory in Elgin, and opened up Congdon's addition to the city.

Those who attended the grand picnic of the Spiritualists of Chicago and outlying towns this last summer, will recall the beauties of our brother's home and his genial presence even though then he was rapidly nearing the day of transition. It came by growing weakness until he could not rise from the bed and in a week's time the silver cord was loosened and the golden bowl was broken without suffering of any kind.

Mr. Congdon was born in Northbridge, Mass., May 7, 1839, and began the work of manufacturing boots and shoes in Grafton, Mass., when little more than twenty-one. After a few years he went to Chicago and became one of the builders of that new city's great industries, running both factory and stores. The great fire destroyed these, but not his intrepid energy and enterprise. Putting up a board shanty, he was soon under way again with a remnant of machinery, tools and stock which two hours' time had enabled him to save in two wagons drawn by horses and one by his men who had to hold a fourth wheel on as they trundled out to the west of the fire line. When the change was made to Elgin, ten years later, he stood for twenty thousand dollars before the business world.

The same enthusiasm he put into his work he put also into Spiritualism, but one misfortune followed another until ill health brought him to the place of rest, his work all done except to hold still true to the religion he had held from his boyhood days, the best he could find.

His funeral was largely attended, the Silver Leaf quartette rendering fine music, Mrs. West officiating as speaker.

Although a Mason of high degree, the Modern Woodmen, of which order he was a member, attended to the funeral rites. The worn casket of the soul was laid beneath the evergreens in the cemetery of McHenry, the former home of Mrs. Congdon, while that soul reveled in the new delights of freedom and of reunion. To your correspondent he has given back the word that "It was the happiest experience of all his life." He has left his earthly home in fleshly form but in conjunction with his arisen friend, George Bowen, there is a work to be done in Elgin, of which we shall hear before many years.

MRS. M. A. CONGDON.

MIDNIGHT HOUR.

'Tis silence o'er the midnight plain,
I hear your gentle voice again,
My soul delights to view the scene,
The valley fair in fertile green.
The moon whose silvery brightness spreads
Around the vale, and nature sheds
Her emerald mantle on the trees—
Your voice is wafted on the breeze.
Of summer night like long ago,
As we two rambled to and fro.

Methinks it is that night again,
When first I whispered love's sweet strain
Into your ear, with loving voice,
When soul to soul we did rejoice.
You vowed to be my very own,
But now my life is cold as stone,
For death's fair angel came one day
And bore my gentle love away
To mansions fair in Spirit light,
And now she lives with angels bright,
In home of beauty by the shore
Of Beulah Land, and pain no more
Can reach her soul so pure and true,
Alas, my love, I mourn for you.

In path of life I'll e'er incline
To keep my soul as pure as thine,
And know when I throw off the coil
Of earthly chain and free from toil,
I'll come from earth to your bright
home
And clasp your loving hand and roam
Through fair, bright landsscapes studded o'er
With gorgeous flowers and birds that soar,
And sing among the happy bowers
Where we shall spend the happy hours,
And dwell and sing forevermore
With angel bands on Beulah shore.

Woman Completes a Voting Machine.

A Columbus woman has submitted a voting machine for formal approval of the State Commission, and it is said that the machine will do more and better work than any other machines brought to the commission's attention. Women get a vote only at school elections in this state, but it appears that this fact did not destroy interest in voting and the possibilities of a voting machine, upon which the Columbus woman's husband spent 10 years of toil and study, he dying 6 years ago, leaving the machine in an unfinished stage. She took up the work and finished it and now has a voting machine which it is said will do all that is required of such a machine.—Youngstown (Ohio) Vindicator.

Four Great Sins the Church Is Called Upon to Combat.

One Is Viewed from the Catholic Standpoint---Three from the Protestant---Some Comments Thereon, by R. A. Dague.

The Pope of Rome has issued an encyclical in which he condemns modern thought as a great sin. Among other commands are the following:

"MODERNISTS ARE TO BE REMOVED FROM PROFESSORSHIPS AND THE DIRECTION OF EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

This is in keeping with the custom of the Catholic church since the days of Constantine. Science, philosophy, inventions, education, liberal government, the right of men to think, has had to fight the church inch by inch in the long weary centuries past. The early astronomers, philosophers—reformers of every kind, were persecuted, imprisoned, tortured, burned, and beheaded by the church. Gutenberg and Faust, who invented printing, were imprisoned because the church said they had invented a black art and were in league with the Devil. The inventor of the umbrella was persecuted as a heretic for his wickedness in "inventing a contrivance which would prevent God from sending his rain on the just and unjust."

The Catholic church has always taught, and now teaches, the impossible doctrine of transubstantiation, which is, that when a priest mumbles some words over some wine and fragments of bread, that those substances are instantly changed, and become the REAL, ACTUAL body and blood of Jesus Christ.

In the long ago, on one occasion it has been stated, a mouse ran out of the wall, seized a morsel of this divine bread and carried it into his hole. A council of Right Reverend and holy bishops, priests, archbishops and cardinals, discussed earnestly and protractedly this proposition:

"CAN A MOUSE EAT A PORTION OF THE BODY OF GOD?"

It was finally decided that the animal had committed a heinous sin; the walls were torn down, a mouse captured which was then burned to ashes and the ashes sprinkled over the altar with solemn and befitting ceremonies. Poor old Pope! Doubtless he is sincere. Amid the blaze of enlightenment of this progressive age he is pained and bewildered, and hopes to turn the world about face, and compel it to go back to the good old times when the roasting of astronomers, inventors, scientists and philosophers, was a frequent pastime of "holy men."

And now a few words about our Protestant friends. An annual State Conference of a powerful Protestant denomination, held at Seattle, adjourned last week. They discussed several propositions. None elicited more eloquence and denunciation than the awful sin of dancing, playing cards for social recreation, and attending the theater. Vivid word pictures were drawn of how Satan was destroying the rising generation, and luring them to an endless hell through whist, and euchre, and the waltz, and Virginia Reel, and the awful theater. So far as I could learn from the published proceedings, nothing was said about the small sins of the killing of Jews by Christians in Russia, nor about war, nor the enslaving of two millions of children in the shops and factories of this country, nor about wholesale land stealings, political thievery, and stock watering, and grafting, and the exploiting of the working people; nor about infanticide, and abortion, and race suicide so prevalent among church people and others.

Evangelist Hart, who is one of the same faith as those who composed the conference referred to, held a great revival in Tacoma last winter, in a tabernacle erected for that purpose. Night after night he thundered against the awful sins of dancing and theater-going—especially the latter. Scores of converts flocked to the altar, a large portion being schoolgirls in short dresses. These children were frightened at the preacher's awful threats of what his God would do if they didn't repent of the heinous crime of "tripping the light fantastic toe" when they heard a fiddle, and going to matinees. Scores of these boys and girls—mostly girls—were frightened into the folds of the church. Two went insane, one of whom is now in the asylum.

Are some Protestants any less superstitious and narrow-minded than the Catholics?

Here is an incident which would indicate that they are not.

A few days ago tiny Countess Magri, aged 65, formerly Mrs. Tom Thumb, was in this city. In an interview she said that when many years ago she traveled with P. T. Barnum, the country people would not enter a tent to see an exhibition. Mr. Barnum had to hire a hall or put up a wooden structure. Quoting from the published interview she said:

"We traveled with Barnum, but did not appear under canvas. That was 45 years ago. The church people would not go near anything under canvas, nor would they go to a place where there was a stage curtain that rolled up or down. Barnum therefore arranged a curtain which drew back on a wire. The church people thought that was all right, but for my part I could not see why it wasn't as sinful with one kind of curtain as another."

Now, seriously, were not these church people about as superstitious as their brethren of the long ago who thought God would damn the inventor of the umbrella?

Ought simple amusements to be held up by the clergy as soul-destroying sins? Take the theater for instance. But little progress was made against slavery in the United States until "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was dramatized and played in the theaters all over the land. I am informed that nearly all the great authors of the drama were educated, refined, moral men and women. In their plays they have extolled honesty, justice, mercy and love. I do not remember any play of note in which villainy was not defeated, and honor, and justice, and virtue vindicated. I have, at the theater, heard high-class music, seen beautiful scenery and paintings, and have been stirred by the thrilling oratory, and have had my deepest sympathy and sense of justice aroused. I have, with hundreds of others, lustily cheered the hero who fought for honor and justice, and who defended the defenseless and weak. I have scorned and hissed the seducer, the oppressor, the tyrant and the vile. Often have I heard great audiences applaud over some act in which intrigue and villainy were thwarted, and virtue and innocence defended and made to triumph. I have seen thousands weep over the representations of the wrongs and sufferings of the poor, the oppressed and the friendless. The stage has its faults, but it is a powerful educator. The pulpit is a great educator also, but it lives too much in the past.

I have a son whom I devotedly love. Shall I sometimes send him to theatrical plays where he will hear excellent music, and where hypocrisy, sensuality and villainy are defeated, and truth, virtue and honor are made to triumph, or shall I send him to those Sunday schools and churches which present to him old Bible characters guilty of all the crimes in the calendar as "holy men" worthy to be patterned after? Shall I send him to those places to be taught that God put lying spirits in the mouths of his own prophets; that he approved of the lie told by Jacob to his old blind father, through which he cheated Esau, his brother, out of his portion of his father's estate; that he authorized Moses to kill all the wives and mothers taken prisoners in war, and turn over the virgins to the soldiers; that he confirmed and carried out and confirmed to this day the curse pronounced by the drunken Noah, of everlasting slavery on unnumbered millions of the descendents of his son, whose offence consisted in chiding his father for getting intoxicated and indecently exposing his person; that the murderous, adulterous King David, who burned prisoners of war, sawed off their arms and legs, and tore away their flesh with harrows of iron—that this monster was "a man after God's own heart;" that God demanded the cruel death of his only begotten son to appease his wrath toward the other children of his own creation, and that now, no matter how immoral or criminal may be our lives, we may escape all the consequences of wrongdoing through the "vicarious atonement," and that if we do not accept this "free salvation," no matter how good we may have been, God will torture us in hell forever?

Yes, I think I would prefer that my boy should occasionally go to a good theatrical exhibition than to the "sanctuary" where such "religion" is taught. Doubtless there are theaters whose exhibitions are not of a high character, but for fifty years I have frequently attended the theater, and I never saw a play which did not teach higher ideals than those taught by the above-mentioned orthodox beliefs and doctrines.

John Calvin, Jonathan Edwards, and other "holy men," taught that God eternally damned babies before they were born for his own glory; that Satan once thwarted God's plans, and that in consequence of that, this world has ever since been a vale of woe; that all joy, and happiness, and worldly amusements and pleasures, are but cunning schemes of the Devil for the destruction of our souls. The dark shadow of those dismal teachings still befogs the brains of many of our Christian ministers to-day.

Poor, old, deluded Pope! He is a back number. By his bulls he hopes to stop progress and the working of the law of evolution.

Narrow minded and frightened, however good their intentions, are many Protestant orthodox pulpiteers. Blinded by creeds and theological teachings formulated in an ignorant age, deluded by the idea that the Bible is inerrant and infallible, and that all wisdom was revealed in the infant age of the world, they tremble with fear of their God if they should dare to indulge in a little freedom of thought, and they sit looking backward for light and inspiration while the Car of Progress and unfettered thinking goes by them.

Spiritualists and Christian Scientists, and Universalists and Unitarians, and all New Thoughters, should pity our dear brethren of the cloth. They are in "fogland;" they are confused; they believe their "holy scriptures," which say that "Satan is going up and down in the earth seeking whom he may devour;" they believe "Old Scratch" invented the fiddle, the theater, and the games of euchre and "seven-up," and they cry aloud their warnings, but the people will take no heed of their cry; their pews are nearly empty; but few students are found in their theological colleges; the young people prefer going to the skating rink, the parks, the theater or other places of amusement to attending church to hear eulogies pronounced upon the savage, adulterous, polygamous slave-holding old kings and warriors of the past, and to listen to the threats of what the wrathful, jealous, changeable orthodox God will do with them if they don't stop their fun and hilarity.

Come, you brethren of the sanctuary, out of the dismal theological caves and get into the glorious sunlight of New Thought. Put aside for a while the writings of men who lived centuries ago, even before printing was invented and when the earth was believed to be flat, and investigate what is taught now by able, thinking, illuminated men on science, inspiration, immortality, life, death, and God. The minds of men of this day, unfettered by the cobwebs of old theologies, are being flooded with light. Old theologies, as well as old machines and old methods of doing things, are rapidly passing away. A glorious new cycle is being ushered in.

DO NOT MAKE THE MISTAKE OF THINKING THAT BECAUSE YOUR SYSTEM OF RELIGION IS VERY OLD IT IS THEREFORE INFALLIBLE. OLD THINGS MAY HAVE BEEN USEFUL ONCE AND BE WORTHLESS NOW. ABOUT FACE, BRETHREN; FORWARD MARCH INTO A BROADER, A MORE SENSIBLE, A MORE CHEERFUL AND A HAPPIER THEOLOGICAL CAMP.

A Noble Man's Ascension.

IN MEMORY OF HON. A. GASTON.

Impressive Services Held at the Home—A Large Number of Relatives and Friends Were Present to Pay Their Respect to the Memory of a Man Beloved by All.

Athelston Gaston was born in Castile, Wyoming County, N. Y., April 24, 1838. At the age of two years his parents moved to Allegany County, where they resided fourteen years.

They moved to Crawford County, Pa., where his home has since been, with the exception of four or five years.

He was a farmer in early life and later became engaged in the lumber business, in which he was very successful, combining the qualities of strict attention to business, hard work and sterling integrity in all his dealings.

He became interested in Spiritualism when seventeen years of age, and after a careful investigation of the phenomena, became convinced of its truth and has always been a devoted student of its teachings and a fearless supporter of the cause. He was elected one of the trustees of Cassadaga Camp (Lily Dale) in 1884, and upon the resignation of Mr. Skidmore as president, in 1887, Mr. Gaston was unanimously chosen as his successor.

He was most efficient and far-reaching in his work and influence for the good of the camp.

In 1861 he married Miss Thankful C. Hammond, a lady of great culture and refinement. There has always been the deepest sympathy between them both in the matter of Spiritualism (their mutual religion) and all great purposes of life. Mrs. Gaston was a fine medium for messages from their personal friends, and the hour of "communion" was ever held sacred and inviolable by them.

She passed on four years ago to join their lovely daughter and many friends awaiting them in that better land.

He was twice chosen Mayor of Meadville by popular vote, and once represented his district in Congress, but he did not care for political life, and in later years lived for his friends and family.

In the last few years his health has been failing and it was in the hope of gaining somewhat of his impaired strength that he joined a club having for their camping and hunting grounds the wilds of Canada. It was during one of these trips, in company with friends and the hunters or guides, that he met his physical death by a fatal shot from one of the party, he having remained behind to rest and one of them mistaking the figure in the canoe for the coveted game, he having changed his position after they left.

It was a great shock to the entire community, but more so to the unfortunate friend who unwittingly fired the gun.

A human loss that none can fill has come to us all, but we know he, with the hosts of arisen ones, liveth and worketh for the truth and for all who need his aid. C. L. V. R.

Rogers Park, Oct. 1, 1907.

The Meadville Messenger says:

"The funeral of Hon. Athelston Gaston was held at the home, 581 East Chestnut street, Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and was attended by a large number of relatives and friends, who came to pay the last tribute of respect to an honored and distinguished citizen of the city and the State, and a generous and sympathetic friend of the community in which he lived.

"Assembled beneath the shadow of a great sorrow, the friends who knew Mr. Gaston in all his relations in public and private life, and who recognized his integrity of character, his kindness and his generous deeds of charity toward those who were in need, manifested an especial and added sorrow in the thought of the sudden and tragic ending of his life. But they recall that for years he had been a sufferer, and would possibly have fallen long ere this were it not for the indomitable will and determination that withstood all trials, and was still cheerful and thoughtful for the sufferings and afflictions of others. His time had apparently come, and God in mercy called him by a sudden and painless death. His friend who became the unconscious instrumentality of the final ending of the life that was almost as dear to him as his own, has the sincerest sympathy of all who realize the sad and sorrowful circumstances under which it occurred.

"The impressive funeral ceremonies were opened by a quartet composed of Miss Helen DeArment, Miss Gillespie, Mr. E. L. Lawrence and Mr. H. S. Robinson, who sang with fine expression the hymn, "Some Time We'll Understand," which was followed by an earnest and eloquent prayer by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, of Chicago, Ill. The choir then rendered another selection entitled "My Jesus as Thou Wilt." Mrs. Richmond then paid an eloquent tribute to the life and character and faith of the deceased.

"'The great, noble, generous-hearted friend and brother now lies with arms folded across his breast cold in death. The man whom those who knew him best, loved him most. As a citizen and a man he held a place in the hearts of friends and acquaintances to which few, if any other, can ever aspire to occupy. He was not afraid to die. He often spoke of death and the future life as a living change from earth and its turmoil and its trouble. He felt that he had nearly served his time here; that his activities of life were nearly ended, and though he was not hastening, yet he longed to go. His faith was ever strong and steadfast that he would meet the loved ones that had gone before. His faith and his religion were his own, but he granted to others the full enjoyment of their faith and hope and consolation that he enjoyed, however theirs might differ from his own.

"'All who knew him can testify his interest in every great movement for the relief of suffering humanity throughout the world. As a friend he was faithful and true; as a husband, thousands have witnessed his loving care and ministrations to relieve the suffering and cheer the despondency and make the years of an invalid wife comfortable and happy. As a brother, he was always helpful and kind and generous.'

"The eulogy of Mrs. Richmond was a masterpiece of poetic imagery and beauty of expression. Mrs. Richmond was followed by Lyman C. Howe, of Fredonia, N. Y., who paid a beautiful tribute to the life and personality of Mr. Gaston, with whom he had a near and dear relationship as a friend and brother of the same faith. The addresses of Mrs. Richmond and Mr. Howe were given marked attention by the large audience, many of whom were affected to tears.

The choir closed the services by singing "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me." The benediction was pronounced by Mrs. Richmond and the audience took their last view of the departed friend. The remains were laid to rest in Greendale cemetery. The services at the grave were conducted by Mrs. Clara Watson, of Jamestown, N. Y. By the special request of Mr. Gaston eight nieces assisted as honorary pallbearers: Mrs. H. H. Hasseltine, Mrs. O. H. Hood, Dr. Sarah Gaston-Frack, Mrs. William Dunbar, Mrs. John Whitling, Mrs. Glen Hawkins, Mrs. Holmes and Mrs. G. G. Gaston. The active pallbearers were John J. Shryock, W. S. McGunnegle, Thomas Roddy, James P. Colter, E. W. McArthur and F. E. McLean."

Resolutions of Respect.

The following resolution was passed by the Meadville Spiritualist Society at its regular meeting on Sunday evening, and it was voted that a copy be sent to each of the Meadville daily papers for publication, and that copies be sent to the members of the family:

Resolved, That the members of the Meadville Spiritualist Society, by the passing to the higher life of their president, the Hon. Athelston Gaston, has lost the bodily presence of an efficient and beloved worker in the cause of Spiritualism. The Society as a whole hereby acknowledges the eminent service he has rendered to the cause of liberal religion. Prominent for long-continued and loyal service, his name stands honored among his co-workers. He was fearless in promoting the cause of religious freedom and in his declaration of truth. With a heart open and loyal in the service of good works to his fellow man, he gave his willing help, his constant support and best judgment to the cause he loved.

A Prominent Medium Passed to the Region of Souls.

To the Editor:—Mary Wakeman, at her home, 437 West 57th street, passed to spirit realms at the age of 87 years, on the 26th inst.; also the home of her sincere friend, Joseph F. Snipes. He has supplied her physical needs for many years, and has been as dutiful as a son could be.

The funeral services were conducted by Mrs. Helen T. Brigham, on the evening of the 28th ult. She is a gifted inspirational speaker. I have heard her during the last thirty years on many funeral occasions, and do not know of one that can excel her in rendering rational consolation to the bereaved.

There was an abundance of beautiful floral tokens at Mrs. Wakeman's funeral, including "Wheel of Life," and flowers from the First Association of Spiritualists; Mary A. Mewton, president, and Margaret Gaule Reidinger, psychic and speaker.

Mrs. Reidinger, at the meeting on the 29th ult., rendered a beautiful tribute to the memory of Mrs. Wakeman, who was one of the oldest Spiritualists of New York. She was a trance medium from childhood, and gave comfort to hundreds of sorrowing friends during the last 34 years, and is deeply mourned by them. She had a gentle, loving nature, and was charitable to the poor.

A few days before her departure, a friend called upon her, and as she left, bid her good-by, and said: "I will call again Friday." Mrs. Wakefield replied: "That will be too late, as I shall pass away Thursday" (which was the 26th ult.).

Mrs. Wakeman was a member of a club called The Society for Political Study, whose president, Mrs. John S. Judge, was a personal friend. The remains were cremated at Fresh Pond, L. I., by her earnest request.

Those who have attained to four-score and over are unconscious but a few moments when dying, and to one who had lived the principles of love and wisdom or true, exalted Spiritualism, how glorious must be the awakening in spirit realms. The heavenly visitors descended to enfold Mrs. W. in their exalted love. I have been three months in my 81st year, and realize that I am approaching the period when I shall take the grandest excursion of my life—to the Summerland, to mansions not made with hands, on beautiful islands floating upon a still finer ether than Mother Earth. A NEW CATECHISM

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

Fourth Edition—Six Additional Chapters—260 Pages, Bound in Cloth, $1.00.—Containing Likeness of the Author.

"A New Catechism" has enjoyed a remarkable sale both in America and England. George Jacob Holyoake, in his introduction to the English edition of "A New Catechism," says:

"A New Catechism" is the boldest, the brightest, the most varied and informing of any work of the kind extant. The principal fields of human knowledge, which the churches have fenced round with supernatural terrors, the Catechism breaks into, cherishing what is fair and showing what is deformed. The notes, of which there are many, both ancient and contemporary, are as striking as the text. The book is a cyclopedia of theology and reason in a nutshell.

HOW THE BIBLE WAS INVENTED.

A New Lecture.—Price, 10 cents.

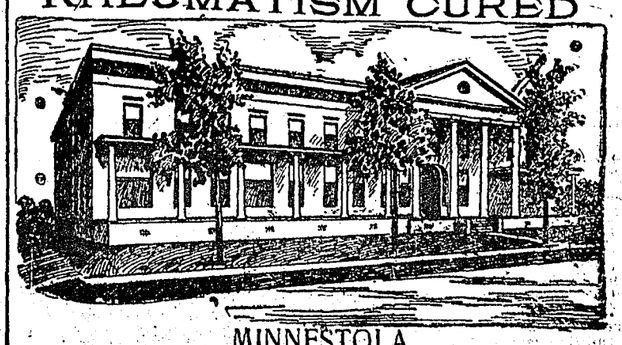
This little pamphlet should be placed in the hands of every American citizen. The attention of preachers, theological students, and all church members should be called to the wonderful story of the Invention of the Holy Bible, which this lecture tells.

See that at least one orthodox neighbor of yours reads this lecture.

MORALITY WITHOUT A GOD.

With letter to Right Reverend Bishop Anderson, of Chicago. Price, 10 cents.

JESUS CHRIST A MYTH.



A New Book.—Price 25 Cents.

This book examines the evidence for the historical existence of Jesus, and finds it quite insufficient to prove that such a man as Jesus ever lived. It is a most important contribution to Modern Thought. It is prefaced by a letter to the Christian Clergy, and concluded by an answer to an editorial in one of the Chicago morning papers, attacking Mr. Mangasarian's position. Send your orders at once, as the first edition will soon be exhausted.

HUMANITY'S EFFORT TO GAIN LIBERTY.

Rev. G. W. Kates Preaches at First Spiritual Temple on "From Bondage to Freedom."

At the First Spiritual Temple, on Franklin street, Sunday, September 21, Rev. George W. Kates, the pastor, spoke on the subject, From Bondage to Freedom." He referred to the history of humanity as one incessant effort to gain personal and mental liberty, saying in part:

National life has been an incessant bondage for the people under dogmatic powers, until serfdom and slavery were common conditions in human history, whilst privileged classes enjoyed special rights over the bodies and souls of peasant subjects. And such nations were allied with church rule as the superior power, from which the state gained its prerogatives. The alliance of church and state has ever been for human degradation and the perpetuation of human slavery. The past is replete with the destruction of human freedom. Religious wars have been the most terrible of all human strife for supremacy. Mohammedans have killed Christians for the glory of Allah, and to enforce upon the world Pagan superstitions; and the Christians have killed Pagans in order to gain an earthly kingdom for God and to force the worship of Jesus and the Virgin. The crusades and inquisition will ever stand in history as the greatest evidence of bigoted cruelty. Slavery and crime in the name of God have been terrible blots upon religious, bigoted and superstitious connection of church with state. And yet many ask that ancestral ideas and systems should be perpetuated. Nothing is apt to be more damnable than ancient history.

Shall we worship at ancient shrines, when these terrible events are the natural results thereof. These horrors should be told, because all should be told, because all should know the dangers lurking in religious bigotry. No close union of church and state must occur in this land of religious liberty. All who have suffered and died for the freedom of conscience we enjoy should be held in honored memory, and all who have forced intolerance and cruelty in the name of God should go to posterity in infamy. We hold Roman emperors in infamous esteem for persecutions of early Christians, and the Christian priests who led Christian bigots into the most terrible of slaughter and desecration have no place in our esteem, other than as cruel monsters. But all Christians who met martyrdom for their opinions have our loving reverence. They were convinced of a life beyond this, and that gave the courage and sublimity of character that now should enthuse us to stand steadfast to truth. We should honor all heroes who have sufferred for human progress. Free thought is always a leader from bondage to freedom. Priestly rule has always been toward bondage.

A free republic and free religion are necessarily co-operative, and the one cannot well exist without the other.

Spiritualism leads us out of all bondage, mental, and spiritual, and establishes religion as the only true safeguard: Spiritualism frees us from fear, sorrow, error, bigotry, persecution, ignorance, doubt, despair, an angry God or tempting devil, and from the prospects of eternal damnation.

Spiritualism teaches the caste of character, the religion of deeds, the divinity of humanity, human brotherhood, intellectual culture, demands knowledge to supplant blind faith, and proves progressive development in the continuity of life beyond the grave. Thus selfish heavens are being destroyed, and eternal hells are known to be impossible. A Methodist minister in the back woods somewhere lately thanked God for an old-fashioned hell, and many of his deacons said, "Amen!"

We are glad to say that from the bondage of hell into the freedom of heaven humanity is today being led by scientists, and theologians are following in the wake until the proclamation is quite general that eternity has salvation for all souls.

Cant is losing followers, and the soul-bounds of humanity are being loosened. Truth is winning its way. Mental and spiritual freedom gives no license; for personal responsibility is proven, and vicarious atonement shown to be a scientific falacy! All hail to human progress and the freedom of conscience to worship God according to its dictates!

WHAT IS BEAUTIFUL?

'Tis beautiful to live on earth,
To work, to watch and pray;
To feel its links of love and hope
Grow brighter every day.

'Tis beautiful to look within,
And watch the waves of thought
That come and go in ceaseless tides
By truth or fancy brought.

'Tis beautiful to love and trust
The friends that round us dwell
And thrive, with words of hope and cheer,
Each sorrow to dispel.

'Tis beautiful to die when life
With earthly tasks all done
Glides on as glides a rosy cloud
To greet the setting sun.

'Tis beautiful to wake again
And greet the friends of yore;
To live and love and do the will
Of heaven forevermore.

The Psychic Riddle.

By I. K. Funk, D.D., LL.D., Editor-in-Chief of "The Standard Dictionary"; Author of "The Widow's Mite, and Other Psychic Phenomena," "The Next Step in Evolution," etc.

A book full of psychic suggestions, supported by startling experiences, all told in a wonderfully conservative way. It harmonizes with the judgment pronounced by The Review of Reviews, New York, on the author's previous publication of this subject: "A very sensible, cautious, level-headed piece of work all through;" and also with the judgment on the same book pronounced by the Cleveland Record: "There has never been so fair and painstaking a book put forth on this subject as this one." Price, $1.00.

The World's Missionary.

The Pilgrim, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Makes an Elaborate Report, with Suggestions and Advisory Plans for Future Harmonious Work—Addressed to the National Spiritualists' Association Which Will Be Assembled in Washington, D. C., October 14, 15, 16 and 17, also to the 40,000 readers of The Progressive Thinker.

Appointed the World's Missionary-at-Large by the officials of the National Association of Spiritualists of America and Canada, and traveling around the world since in the interest of Spiritualism and germane subjects of reform, it becomes my duty as an unsalaried officer to make a report of my stewardship.

"What dost thou see, lone watcher on the tower?
Is the day breaking? Comes the wished-for hour?
Tell us the signs and stretch abroad thy hand,
If the bright morning dawns upon the land.

Owing to causes unseen, as well as those comprehended, the past year has been a very eventful one, marked by great physical convulsions, political antagonisms, mental activities and fervid religious commotions.

Men under all skies are inquisitive beings. Among ever-recurring questions are the following: What is truth? Where can the treasure be found? Did man in his wholeness—body, soul, spirit—come up through apes and orangs? If he did, will he live after death? and, if so, under what conditions, and where? Do animals exist in the spiritual world? If so, do they progress in love and wisdom? Is it a universal law that all once human beings, now immortal spirits, must through reincarnation or re-births return back into the flesh? Were all angels and archangels once mortals? Does the Bible as a whole do more harm than good? Is a certain intellectual and moral altitude in this life necessary to warrant a conscious existence beyond the grave? Do some spirits so retrograde in the after life as to disintegrate, losing their conscious individuality? Have the locations where reside our mediums, speakers and editors become so spiritually illumined and altruistic that they "do all for others?" Is Spiritualism as an ism making rapid strides in all lands?

The above are live questions, not only in activity among ourselves, but questions that agitate many of the best thinkers of liberal christendom. And these thinkers are further asking what great, momentous questions of the past fifty years and more, have Spiritualists—professedly conversing with intelligent spirits and walking with angels—satisfactorily and permanently settled?

I bring these questions to the front, because during the past year I have to meet the most of them either on the lecture platform, in drawing-rooms or through the public press in different countries.

Leaving my library home, and attending the dedication of that magnificent church edifice in Rochester, N. Y., of which the scholarly Dr. B. F. Austin is the efficient pastor, I soon found myself by railway through Canada in that unique old city, Quebec. The steamers connecting Quebec with Liverpool are literally sea-palaces—faultless, with the exception that nine-tenths of their libraries are novels. Invited, I lectured upon this steamer, once upon "Egypt's Pyramids and Hieroglyphs," and once upon "What Occurs After Death?" This subjected me to a score of questions relative to the phenomenon and utility of Spiritualism. Many listened (two of them were missionaries bound for China) to this subject for the first time.

The passage across these Atlantic waters was delightful except far a two day's storm. Two-thirds aboard were sea-sick—a very unwise habit, largely caused by suggestion and anticipation. Pure air, light diet, and will-power are the remedies.

Reaching London and expecting to leave for Paris and Marseilles to board the steamer for Egypt and India at once, I learned that the steamers were literally over-crowded with those seeking the warm, sunny winter climate of Egypt, and I was compelled to wait five weeks, during which time I lectured every Sunday and a number of week-day evenings in England, Scotland and Wales, receiving in these countries royal receptions and large and enthusiastic audiences.

Spiritualism, be it gladly said, has taken on more of a religious aspect in these British-governed countries than is manifest in America, and this may measurably account for their more solid growth in the unity of the spirit.

The Children's Progressive Lyceums in the United Kingdom, increasing yearly in number, are in a most healthy condition. The Glasgow Lyceum, Scotland, is the best, upon the whole, that I was ever privileged to attend. Others in Britain may possibly be as good. Invited to address this Glasgow Lyceum two Sunday afternoons, I took the liberty of telling the children that lyceums similar to theirs, were clairvoyantly seen in the Summerland by Andrew Jackson Davis, the great American seer, whom I had recently visited in Boston. The compilers of the English Lyceum-Guide exhibited not only a fine discrimination, but manly impartiality in the selection and general make-up of the book. The Lyceum work is most important, considering the sensitive, tender and impressionable minds of the young. All early impressions are more or less lasting.

Leaving London via Paris and Marseilles, I was in a few days aboard a P. & O. steamer, bound for India by way of Egypt. The evenings upon this steamship were devoted to music, lectures and various readings in the salon. During the passage I lectured one evening upon India and one upon Spiritualism, ancient and modern. This stirred up a controversy lasting for days. One Baptist preacher on his way to a missionary field, was offensively bitter in his denunciation. Inviting him into my cabin, we had a two hours' bloodless battle. He admitted that such heathen as lived up to the highest light of their consciences would be saved; but if they heard the gospel of Christ and rejected it, they would be eternally lost. Seizing this point, I begged him to return straight back to Kentucky, as his Christian preaching might be the means of the damnation of thousands of good, conscientious pagans.

Arriving at Bombay, India, and announced by our U.S.A. Consul through the press as a Spiritualist author and missionary, I was besieged in a few days with calls from Hindus and Parsees, the latter a very superior class of people. They were driven out of Persia hundreds of years ago by the Mohammedans, and now, saying nothing of other localities, there are some 40,000 in Bombay. They do not worship the sun nor fire. They regard fire as a symbol of the infinite fire and life of the universe. No Parsee smokes; the practice would be a profanation of the sacred symbol fire. They have fine temples and expose their dead on the "towers of silence" some four miles out of the city. With their Zend Avesta Bible before them, they utterly reject the theory of reincarnation. The editor of their chief monthly, "The Men and Women of India," Byramji Hormusji, a very intelligent Parsee gentleman, arranged to publish my booklet upon "Re-incarnation, Pros and Cons," 100 pages, by Dr. Densmore vs. Dr. Peebles. While meeting a number of Hindu Spiritualists in Bombay, I failed to perfect an organization. These patronize the Hindu Spiritual Magazine, published in Calcutta.

The travel across India by rail, 15,000 miles, though tiresome, was nevertheless exceedingly interesting because of the villages, the cities we called and the varied wayside scenery. The lands were mostly fertile, but the farming was primitive. The buildings were archaic, and school-houses were seldom seen. About the lowest people in India are the aboriginal Gonds. In stature they resemble the thick-lipped negro, yet they have straight hair and Caucasian foreheads. They believe that the sun and moon are gods, male and female. They dance a ring-dance in their worship. They talk with ancestral spirits, good and evil, and some of them have become sufficiently "civilized" to drink brandy and beer, smoke tobacco and swear in poor English.

Calcutta Called the City of Palaces.

Babu Shishur Kumar Ghose of the Hindu Spiritual Magazine and P. K. Ghose of the Amritar Bazaar Patrika Daily Journal, had arranged my rooming-quarters in the castle of His Highness, the Maharajah Jotendra Mohun, Tagore, Bahadur, C. S. I. This Maharajah, or great King, is a devoted Hindu, and yet an occultist interested in psychical research. The Maharajah's palace is just across the street from the castle. My first lecture upon Spiritualism was delivered in this King's palace hall. At his own expense he sent out 4000 printed invitations to personal friends and those whom he considered the elite and learned of the city. It was a splendid assemblage, nineteen-twentieths of whom were Hindus. All of the Hindus whom I met and with whom I conversed (excepting two or three Hindu materialists, disciples of Haeckel) believed in the conscious intercourse between the worlds visible and invisible, Bhutts Pisachas, or Pitris, spirits of their ascended ancestors. The facts of spirit phenomena are the same, or nearly the same, in all lands, climes and tribes, savage and enlightened; but the theories and religious opinions drawn from these phenomenal facts are diversified and widely different.

The Seventh-Day Adventists and Spiritualism.

Soon after its being published in the Calcutta Journals, native and English, that I was lecturing in the city upon Spiritualism, it was announced that an Advent Evangelist would deliver two lectures upon Spiritualism. I employed a reporter to take down the lectures, which proved to be the same old story—the devil; man has no immortal soul; the Lord Jesus is about to come; and the world is to end. I replied to these lectures vigorously; and the editor of the Daily Englishman said I was "unnecessarily sarcastic." Can there be anything "too sarcastic" in giving the orthodox "devil his due?"—For bigotry and dogmatism commend me to Seventh-Day Adventists. They have a little church in Calcutta. Controversy waxed hot in the newspapers, the Presbyterian missionaries taking a part, until I sailed for Ceylon.

Aided by Hindus and a few English Spiritualists, I lectured in the Theatre Royal, the Star Theatre, the Hindu Theatre, twice before the Calcutta Literary Society, in drawing-rooms and in suburban villages, and sometimes an hour was occupied in answering questions after the discourse.

Mrs. Armitage, a Noted Calcutta Medium.

After sharing the Maharajah's hospitality a few weeks, privileged with the use of his library of some four or five thousand volumes, and giving him mesmeric treatments for insomnia, I was invited to the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Armitage. This mediumistic lady has held seances for years, and done some excellent healing through her guide, "Golden Pen." Her seances would be considered unique in America. During the week she magnetizes a bottle of water, and on the day of her weekly seance she takes but one meal. She keeps a light burning night and day in her seance-room under the figure of the crucified Nazarene. When the seance members become seated, she sprinkles each person with this magnetized water. Then a prayer; then a hymn is sung; then another prayer, or invocation; then come the manifestations, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience and inspirational addresses, and closing with the doxology, all rising and facing the cabinet, where materializations have been promised by the spirit, "Golden Pen."

There is a great demand in India by materialistically inclined investigators for physical phenomena. I visited several Yogis while there. They generally live in the suburbs of the city or out in the mountainous districts. They there live for meditation, concentration and self-unfoldment. That they perform astounding phenomena, few if any in India dispute—and they do these marvels for the reason that they live for such results.

Aided by sympathizing workers, such as Mr. Armitage, Shishur Kumar Ghose and others, I was enabled to organize a Spiritualist Society in Calcutta. The Hindu Spiritual Magazine is doing an immense amount of good. Two of my books are being translated, one into the Bengalese and the other into Hindustana.

Colombo, Ceylon.

Ceylon, one of the most important of the British crown colonies, was invaded by the Portugese, then the Dutch in 1658, and then the English. The capital, Colombo, was named from Christopher Columbus.

Colombo is a charming, yet unique city, the most of the people being Singhalese, originally from India. They are all Buddhists. While in this city I was the guest of Mrs. Higgins, an American, and the reigning spirit in the Buddhist School for Girls out at Cinnamon Gardens. Her husband many years ago was a Spiritualist lecturer. Some of us remember him.

I met only two or three Spiritualists in Colombo, unless Theosophists be classed as Spiritualists. This they deny, while their founder, Madame Blavatsky, was not only a spiritist, but a powerful physical medium.

Happening to be in Ceylon when Col. Olcott passed to the higher life from Adyar, I attended his memorial service in the Buddhist Ananda College. Knowing Col. Olcott for nearly thirty years as Spiritualist, Theosophist and Buddhist, I was invited to address the audience assembled in his honor. My address was interpreted, as I delivered it, by the President of the Ananda College. There were about forty Buddhist priests present all clad in their yellow robes.

Melbourne and Sydney, Australia.

Sixteen days from Colombo on a P. & O. steamer, brought me to Melbourne, the largest city in the Australian Commonwealth. It was in 1872 that I visited this country for the first time. There had been a few lectures delivered upon Spiritualism at that time. It had, however, no standing in the press. I remained three months, lecturing Sunday evenings—and what changes, what progress since! On my recent visit I lectured two and a half months for the Victorian Association of Spiritualists on Sunday evenings, and there were twenty-seven other Spiritualist meetings in operation at the same time in different localities. This reveals the status of the cause at the present time in the city. It is not wisdom to mention the dissensions.

W. H. Terry, former editor of the Harbinger of Light, W. T. Stanford, J. Ross, and Chevalier Smith, venerable standard bearers, remain still at their posts. Never did I know a genuine Spiritualist to recant and go back to the beggarly elements of theological sectarianism.

There are several lyceums for our children in Melbourne, and all prosperous, the one meeting in Odd Fellow's Hall having the most members.

In Sydney there are a large number of Spiritualists, but only a few active societies. The inharmonies among those who profess to walk and talk with spirits and angels are deplorable. In this city, noted for its magnificent harbor and thriving business accomplishments, I delivered fourteen lectures, six of them in the Unitarian Church, of which the Rev. George Walters is pastor. This gentleman, preaching to large congregations Sundays, writing for the city press and teaching elocution classes week-day evenings, is an outspoken Spiritualist. His independence and moral bravery are most commendable.

My mission ended in Sydney, I went by steamer to Brisbane, Queensland, getting a severe cold on the passage, ultimating in a case of severe muscular rheumatism, disabling me to walk, and putting me in bed between two and three weeks; and these good people, afire with zeal, took me from my room in a chair, carried me to the carriage, and from thence into the hall and up onto the platform, where, sitting, I addressed the audience Sunday evenings. This Brisbane Society is not only harmonious and energetic, but is composed of a class of harmonial and cultured people. It was a pleasure to address them and their friends, many of which were Theosophists. In fact, the Theosophists and Spiritualists, during my stay in Brisbane, worked together, and why not, is both believe in a future conscious existence, both believe in the return of spirits, both believe in progress beyond the grave, and both believe that Heaven, be it what and where it may, is attained only through good works.

Definition of Words.

Thoroughly endorsing the late H. D. Barrett's and Charles R. Schirm's movement for the "definition of terms," I would intensify the suggestion by naming the following words, not synonyms, yet often used interchangeably by many of our writers and speakers: Soul and Spirit, Jehovah and God, Religion and Theology, Jesus and Christ, Agnosticism and Skepticism. Christianity with its cramping creeds and the Christianity of Christ, who said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one for another." * * * and "these signs shall follow them (my disciples) that believe;" Spiritism and Spiritualism. There should be no juggling of words. Pure language should be used and every word should carry with it a clear and direct meaning in the construction of the sentence.

Spiritism and Spiritualism.

Spiritism—a fact; a well-established fact—is based upon phenomena, occult phenomena abounding under some name in China, India, Korea, Burmah, Africa and America, and relates largely to physical phenomena, such as rappings, concussions, table-movings, planchette writings, witchcraft, oriental superstition with wild, dreamy speculations. Spiritism and Shintoism would be considered synonymous in Japan. Lieut. Col, McClernald, sent by our Government to observe the Russlo-Japanese war, reported the Japanese as "abstemious and industrious, believing in the return of spirit, and worshiping their ancestors. The Vice Admiral Togo, returning to Tokio, Japan, publicly thus addressed the spirits of the dead out by the great temple: "As I stand before you, spirits to-day, I can hardly express my feelings. Your personalities are fresh in my memory. Your corporeal existence has ceased, but your passing from this world was in the gallant discharge of your duty * * * while reporting to our Emperor. I am proud to say that much of our success depended upon you spirits, who sacrificed your earthly existence to achieve our victories."

While lecturing in Sydney I went out one Sunday morning with Mr. Leslie Drumbell to visit a grand, yet unique Chinese Temple and garden, where a Chinese medium was continually kept to give messages. Stepping into the Temple and asking for spirit phenomena, this Chinaman was promptly summoned, and standing before us, his hands and arms became quite spasmodic for a time. Then seizing a small light rod about a foot long and placing it horizontally on the top of his two forefingers with a perpendicular hawk-billed shaped rod, not unlike the Ouija board, the two rods became tremulous and the pointed rod bent down and wrote rapidly upon the table, covered with fine, white sand. The Chinaman in charge of the Temple interpreted the spirit message to us, which was in regard to the welcome of a stranger, the sympathy of races, with a prophecy for me of future good. It is both often and truly said that the Chinese Empire is an Empire of Spiritists.

Spiritistic facts are similar under all skies, but the deductions drawn from them differ in doctrines, which crystallizing into dogmas induce strife, antagonisms and often bitter persecutions.

Spiritism, old in Japan and India, is not only allied to the beliefs, idolatries and superstitions of the East, but to a dreary atheistic materialism in our country, for prominent spiritists teach that no animals of earth exist in spirit life, and that only that portion of human beings that have attained a certain intellectual status will exist hereafter; the rest are doomed to chaotic non-consciousness. And those that pass the rubicon of death and the grave, may disintegrate after a time, losing their conscious individuality—the equivalent of absorption and eternal forgetfulness. It would take more commentaries to harmonize the contradictions of spiritism than it would the old synoptic gospels. The answers to Dr. Caird's question in The Progressive Thinker are in proof. And yet, Spiritism in all lands has its uses.

Paintings must have a background. Crutches are necessary for the lame. Materialists require trumpet tones and repeated seance-thunder-claps and phenomenal furniture smashing to convince them of the existence of unseen intelligences.

Spiritism, with its contradictions and frauds may decline, and later, die, but Spiritualism, being rooted in God, divine in origin, is immortal, and is making rapid strides in all enlightened lands.

True Spiritualism.

Jamblichus, the Neoplatonian philosopher, named and tabulated many spirit phenomena of his time, and Paul, the great Gentile spiritistic apostle, after mentioning in the 12th chapter of the Corinthians, nine spiritual gifts, among which were the "gifts of tongues," "healings," and "the discerning of spirits," says: "And yet, show I unto you a more excellent way;" and that "more excellent way" was undoubtedly Spiritualism, based not upon transient phenomena, appealing to the sense-perceptions, but based upon spirit—pure, essential, immanent and immutable spirit.

Spiritualism is a truth, a mighty uplifting truth, posited and centered in Spirit. "God," said the martyred Nazarene, "is spirit"—that is, the infinite energy, life, will, wisdom and love of the Universe, and briefly formulated by Andrew Jackson Davis as "the Great Positive Mind."

Herein, then, is the foundation, the very rock of our Gospel: SPIRIT—Spirit, Spiritual, Spirituality, spiritual-mindedness—SPIRITUALISM!

Its phenomena are not commercial but spiritual. It is not from beneath but from above. It is not promiscuous, but orderly and aspirational. It is grounded, not in the material, but in the moral constitution of man, which constitution requires such spiritual sustenance as inspiration, prayer, faith, religion, clairvoyance, clairaudience, clairsentience, spiritual impressions, visions, trances and heavenly messages from the celestial spheres of angelic life. Advanced spirits are termed angels. Spirits are merely mortals divested of their physical bodies, and they take with them to the better land their consciousness, memory, reason, sympathy, tendency—in a word, THEMSELVES; and when in that ethereal sphere they think and act from that plane of consciousness where the justice of immutable law has placed them.

The trend of the spiritual movement is towards religious Theism—towards liberal Christianity, and the trend of christendom is towards a rational, a religious Spiritualism. Joyful will the meeting be when the gulf is bridged. Nonessentials dropped and willing hands will be clasped unitedly working in all the great fields of reform for the world's redemption.

This Is an Age of Research and Soul Expansion.

The past was well; it conspired to make the present. All that was good and true in it lives in golden radiance to-day. Never a truth died. There is no destructipe principle in the Universe. Appearances must not be construed into realities. Annihilation is both unthinkable and spiritually impossible. Wandering comets return to us again. The stars that go down in clouds at night rise in some other portion of the sidereal heavens; the sun that sinks low in the southwest during our winter-time, returns in spring to kiss to life the buds and unseal their fragrant blossoms. The prodigal son went afar, went until he "spent all that he had," but the uprising thought of a father's love called him home. There is a limit to human descent. The ego, the Incarnate God within, will listen sooner or later to the sweet voice of Divine Love—"Come Home"—"Come home, my child."

The orthodoxy of our forefathers' time is dead.

"Gray-bearded Use, who, deaf and blind,
Groped for his old accustomed stone,
Leaned on his staff, and wept, to find
His seat o'erthrown."

I repeat, orthodox theology is dead. Do not, O, royal-souled compeers, stir the old toothless cadaver too much. It is only a waste of energy. Do not even stop to bury it. Let the dead bury the dead. The sledge-hammer and the boomerang have done their work in the line of ecclesiastical destruction. Hunt, now, O, toilers in the vineyard, for the hatchet, the saw and the hammer to build and decorate the better.

The thinking world calls aloud for affirmation, for demonstration, for construction, for comfort, and for a religious consolation that will not only cheer the desponding, dry the mourner's eyes, and feed the orphan child, but the world wants a religion to live by—a heaven, now and here—a religion that will put into practice that broad principle of humanity which emphasizes the socialistic truth that every mortal born into this world has the inalienable right to air to breathe, water to drink, soil to till, a home to live in and inviting facilities to educate the children that may make merry his household—equality of opportunities is the inspired watchword of to-day.

What Do Spiritualists in All Lands Most Need?

They need deeper convictions of this mighty truth of present spirit ministries—convictions that the heavens and the hells are all ajar—that they live and walk in the midst of millions of unseen spirit intelligences, and that to-day they are thinking, sowing, planning, moulding the to-morrows of eternity. What a colossal fact—the social retributive relations of this daily life, to life eternal beyond the tomb!

Spiritualists need education and educated teachers, equaling and excelling other religious advocates; and they need, too, a widening of their charities towards other religious organizations. No one cult covers all the world's wisdom. Bigoted narrow-mindedness is just as hateful in a Spiritualist as a Calvinist. Support the good and the true under whatever guise it appears. Names count little in contrast with principles.

Spiritualists need not only genuine spiritual phenomena, but phenomena that appeal to the conscience, to the heart's purest affections and to the intuitive religious convictions of the moral nature. Such phenomena constitute the alphabet, the uplifting stairway for ascension.

Halt not! Go on from phenomena to philosophy, and from this to the higher religious ecstasy of unselfish and universal love.

If you conscientiously believe—If you know the truth of Spiritualism, support it; support it with your influence and your purse This is demanded by manliness, morality, justice and common decency. Put all soul-dragging greed under your feet. Give the moral top-brain sentiments a chance. These are the soul's parlors, the drawing-rooms of angel guests. Meditate, concentrate, cultivate the spiritual. Adjust your lives to the good, the true and the beautiful. Be enthusiastic. Strive to think right thoughts; struggle to unfold the Christ within, that you may come into closer harmony with all that is divine, and so attain measurably, at least, in this life, your soul's highest ideal.

Is a Universal Religion Possible?

Emphatically, it is. Already the morning star is rising. The fig-tree is blossoming. The gateway of human opportunities is ajar; the aspirations for a higher life are aflame with brightness. The light of metaphysics is breaking in from the East to meet the solid science of the West. The Orient and the Occident, the two sides of the shield of truth—that truth which is the highest religion and the holiest shrine, are reaching out fraternal hands. The Christ-spirit of love is in our doors, and loving angels are calling us to come up higher!

Cicero, deriving religion from the verb "religare", to hold, to fasten, as in a ligature, adds: "Persons are called religious because they study into and examine carefully whatever refers to futurity and to the worship of the gods."

The Apostle James defined practical religion as "visiting the widows and fatherless, and living to do good." And as evolution lifts the race step by step onto the higher grounds of investigation and wisdom, religion will bind them into a perpetual brotherhood, and ultimately become universal.

There is no infinite partnership, no divided jurisdiction in this, our mighty universe of order and evolution. The Dvine Presence is one. The Universe is one, and immutable law is one. How grand, how cheering this thought! ONE MIND, ONE WILL, ONE POWER, ONE Conscious Energy, ONE Directing Purpose, and ONE vast procession of numberless intelligences facing the ideal and marching onward and upward in consonance with evolution and rhythmic order towards the measureless immensities of infinity. This is the pealing voice, the slogan of this incoming universal religion. It is heart-fellowship, angel ministries, brotherhood, peace on earth and good will to man in this, and in all worlds, visible and invisible.

"What, then, dost thou see, lone watcher on the tower?
Is the day breaking? comes the wished-for hour?
Tell us the signs and stretch abroad thy hand,
If the bright morning dawns upon the land."

"It breaks, it comes, the mighty shadows fly;
A rosy radiance gleams upon the sky;
The mountain-top reflects it calm and clear;
The plain is yet in shado, but DAY is near!"

A Powerful Strange Force

That Would Do Away With the Mails, Telepathy and Drugs.

Would Be But Little More Startling Than the Marvelous Things Done by People Who Have Tried This Wonderful System.

How Prominent Men and Women Use It to Influence the Minds of Others—Heal Themselves and Others of Chronic Diseases, Nervous Disorders and Habits as If by Magic—Any One Can Do It—Distance No Barrier—One Person's Control Over Another Now Fully Explained.

How Every Man, Woman and Child in the World Can Have "The Secrets of Magnetic Force, Health and Power" Absolutely Free.

Professor F. T. McIntyre, a well-to-do scientist of this city, has created a sensation in the hypnotic world. Through delving down in the realms of nature's mysteries he has discovered a delicate but powerful system that seems destined to revolutionize the theories of the most noted authorities on Mind Force. Some people look upon him as a man possessing a strange power, for he has told them how to influence people far and near and to heal themselves and others of their ills as if by magic. He tells them how to protect their thoughts, develop a powerful mentality and build up the mechanism of the body and brain. Doctors and magnetists who have tested the workings of his new discovery admit that it surpasses anything in the history of psychic power.

In explaining the method Professor McIntyre says: "I am convinced that everybody can accomplish the things I have done if they understand the system. It would be a grand thing if every man, woman and child in this country learned the use of this wonderful system. There should be no more disease, immorality, drunkenness, despondency, separations, poverty or failures in life. I have sent free illustrated pamphlets to people in many parts of the world, which explain the principles of my new discovery, and I find they can do the same wonderful things I have done, and for which some persons think I possess a special power. I have sent these printed pamphlets out without any charge whatever, as I am anxious to have everyone try the wonders of this new discovery. The letters received from persons who tried it are the same. Many are loud in their exclamations of surprise and thanks, and say they never dreamed such things possible. I receive many fine presents and enjoy working for the uplifting of mankind and science. The kind letters received from grateful hearts more than pay for the interest I take. I will send a copy of my free book to every person who writes me without any charge whatever."

Professor McIntyre has a basketful of letters from people in many parts of the world. They are, indeed, startling. Mr. James Kubal, a prominent business man of Chicago, writes the following:

"I never dreamed such things possible. If I had only known of this sooner. This system has made a different man of me. I shall give up business and make more money through the use of this system than I can in my business. It has brought back my sight. I can see without glasses, and work without them, too. It has overcome my backwardness, and I can now handle my customers in fine shape. I did not know I was so full of the magnetism. I think your system wonderful."

Mr. Eugene Devenson, Baton Rouge, La., writes: "Having tried your system, I unhesitatingly pronounce it to be and to do all you claim for it."

Rev. E. G. King, pastor Christian Church, Upper Lake, Cal., writes: "I cannot recommend your system too highly, and I am willing to answer any inquiries in regard to it."

Dr. H. A. Lounsburg, Wheatly, Ontario, Canada, writes: "I have thoroughly investigated the methods and inventions of Professor McIntyre, and can say that his system is scientific and surpasses anything in the line of therapeutics that has come to my notice."

Fred. S. Brett, Apartado 285, Gaudalajara, Mexico, writes: "I have done wonderful things in influencing people with this system. Have had over 50 persons under my control, and compelled them to do startling things. I advise everybody to try it. This system is truly marvelous."

This free book is full of startling explanations and pictures, showing that anyone can master, in a short time, the power to control and sway the minds of others. It describes the strange phenomena of Psychic and Hypnotic Influence, Mystic Healing, Psycho and Suggestive Therapeutics, Personal Magnetism, and a combined, simple system of reading the characters of others, though thousands of miles away. It gives you the key to the development of the inner or dormant forces of concentration, force of character, will power, memory, determination, ambition, enthusiasm, aspiration, continuity of thought and the ability to throw off the evil effects of disease and despondency.

It is indeed, one of the most amazingly interesting books of the age, beaming with interest from cover to cover, and all who receive free copies of it can be thankful. It points out the road to financial and social success; it reveals astonishing facts that have been overlooked by the public for many years.

If you wish a free copy of this wonderful book write a postal or letter to Professor F. T. Mcintyre, Dept. 1748, No. 126 West Thirty-fourth street, New York, N. Y. All who write will receive it; no one will be disappointed. It is sent by mail, postage paid, absolutely free.

A MASTERLY WORK.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth

By Prof. W. M. Lockwood.

A masterly presentation of an important subject. A powerful argument along new and scientific lines, establishing on a scientific basis the fact of the continuity of personal individual consciousness selfhood after laying aside the physical body. A book of rare value. With several fine illustrations. Cloth, $1.00.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL.

Series one, two and three. By Lilian Whiting. Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price, $1.00 each.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Proprietor

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Matter

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One Year	$1 00
Six Months	50cts
Thirteen Weeks	25cts
Single Copy	5cts

REMITTANCES:

Remit by Postoffice Money order, Registered Letter or Draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so do not send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Address all letters to J. R. FRANCIS, 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE.

☞ At the expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly write us, and any errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it has been going or the change cannot be made.

TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The price of The Progressive Thinker per year to foreign countries is $2.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1907

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEAL.

The POSTAGE on papers has been increased to all the British possessions on this continent. On a single paper we are compelled to pay ONE CENTS each week, amounting to 52 cents a year, whereas previously we only paid the pound rates—a mere trifle. Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in The Progressive Thinker can be obtained at this office. Express charges or postage prepaid at the price named unless otherwise stated.

MRS. MARY T. LONGLEY.

She will not again be a candidate for secretary of the N. S. A. To say that during her long term of service she has acquitted herself with great honors, is putting the statement mildly.

She will leave the office realizing that all Spiritualists hold her in the very highest esteem as a lady, medium, and secretary. During her administration she has certainly been of great help to our cause. The best wishes of The Progressive Thinker will ever follow her in the grand work she is capable of doing under the ministrations of the Spirit Pierpont.

Wonders Will Never Cease.

The announcement is made that Prof. Geo. Poe, of South Norfolk, Va., has constructed a sort of pump by which oxygen may be forced into the lungs and a sort of artificial breathing may be set up, and arouse all the machinery of life into normal action, provided decay and the breaking down of tissues have not commenced.

It is said that persons drowned, strangled, poisoned, or frozen, have been resuscitated in a few minutes by this novel life awakener.

We find in a late issue of the Chicago Examiner a lengthy account of what is claimed for this recent wonder, and extract from its columns the following account of its action, which is certainly a marvel of science, even should it prove but half true. We quote:

To demonstrate Prof. Poe's invention a committee of doctors recently killed a rabbit. First he gave the rabbit an injection of two grains of morphine, then he gave him chloroform enough to kill a man. When the rabbit was cold and stiff he handed the animal to the doctors, who agreed that he was as dead as if an express train had run over him. But for good measure, Prof. Poe threw the body into a tank of acetylene gas, which would have killed a live rabbit in about three minutes.

"After an hour's stay in the deadly fumes the rabbit was removed, as thoroughly dead as any creature could be. Professor Poe placed his invention in connection with the nostrils of the rabbit, and four minutes later it was hopping about the room.

"The doctors eagerly examined it for traces of the poisons it had absorbed. The sickly, menacing odor of acetylene gas was still in the fur, and the little creature shivered from cold.

"But, aside from these traces and a rapid beating of the heart, the little animal seemed perfectly normal. It was truly a medical miracle. Professor Poe has had many chances from time to time to experiment on human beings, and has invariably succeeded."

Oxygen is abundant and everywhere in Nature, and the chemists produce it in quantity at will. It is the sustainer of life, and is supplied to the lungs at every breath. One-fifth of the atmosphere is oxygen. Youmans, in his Chemistry, says:

"Could the oxygen imprisoned in the ocean be set free, it would be sufficient to form an atmosphere around the globe nearly a thousand miles deep."

If all is true that is claimed for Poe's invention, persons may be asphyxiated, a surgical operation may be performed, and then resuscitated.

A well governed mind learns in time to find pleasure in nothing but the truth and the just.—Anon.

Immunity for Crime.

In the entire history of American jurisprudence it is questionable if a greater disregard of law, moral and statute, has shown itself than was exhibited in the late criminal trials, or by those now in progress in Idaho.

During the Haywood trial the principal witness, who expected to be immune from punishment for his many crimes because of his testimony, confessed to TWENTY-ONE MURDERS. He attempted to complicate the defendant in those horrible crimes by swearing he was privy and advisory to them. Orchard was probably promised exemption from punishment if he would supply evidence to convict and hang Haywood. The clergy, it seems, came to the aid of Orchard, the multi-assassin, and perjurer, by telling the great criminal that the patriarchs, and King David, "a man after God's own heart," all escaped justice because of divine mercy. Then he was told to believe in Jesus, to wash his hands in the dear Savior's blood, and his sins would all be forgiven; that virtually his murders would only add luster to his crown; Jesus "came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance."

Now comes another case: Senator Borah, one of the prosecuting attorneys in the Haywood case, is under indictment and on trial at Boise City for frauds in connection with timber claims. Albert Klanop, a government witness, on cross-examination admitted he had committed perjury, and said he had been promised absolute immunity, conditioned he testified against any person, regardless of any knowledge he might have of the person's guilt. Klanop, at last advices, had not shown that washing in Jesus' blood was to excuse his perjuries; but a priestly intermediate between God and man is in that vicinity, and we cannot doubt he will be active in supplying Protestant indulgences, by simple belief in the Lord Jesus. Catholics, before the Reformation, sold indulgences in advance of the crime, for a pecuniary consideration. Protestants go the mother church one better, and grant exemption from eternal burning by faith in the atoning blood of Jesus.

We have a marked case in accepted history, worth repeating: Licinus, a nephew of Constantine; Crispus, his son; Constantia, his wife; Faustus, his mother-in-law, and three others were all murdered by the royal assassin Constantine. In the triumph of power he applied to the pagan priesthood for exculpation from guilt. The enormity of his many offenses precluded forgiveness, and it is said they repulsed him. It was then he turned to the Christian bishop, accepted faith in Jesus, and was welcomed as the head of the church. We dare not vouch for the truth of this story, and very little else that is told in regard to Constantine, and the council over which it is alleged he presided.

Christians delight to apply the title "The Great" to Constantine. The Encyclopedia Britannica, Vol. 6, p. 301, says:

"Tested by character, Constantine stands the lowest of all those to whom the epithet [great] has in ancient or modern times been applied."

Forgiveness for Constantine, and made the head of the Christian church, with his old pagan title of Pontifex Maximus retained, and the murders and crimes of Orchard, and the acknowledged perjuries of Klanop, with the title Christian, will not permit them to escape retribution.

Human justice may pass them by, but Spiritualists are firm in the conviction, strengthened by revelations from the spirit world, that no wrong can escape infinite justice; that there is but one way to evade punishment, and that is by avoiding wrongdoing.

Corner Stones of the Church.

Why will not our Christian friends read the inspired volume the preachers so name, and learn for themselves its teaching? We have quoted frequently of late the declaration of Jesus, in which he is reported to have said (Luke 14:26) that no man can be his disciple unless he HATES his father and mother and all near of kin, including his own life.

Only seven verses further on, to-wit, Luke 14:33, that same Jesus is reported to have said:

"Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."

There is no evading the issues presented in these cited passages. They harmonize with every other passage in which the subjects are mentioned. The rich man who had kept all the commandments from his youth up, was told by Jesus: "One thing thou lackest: Sell all thou hast and give it to the poor." Dives, the rich man, who was sent to hell, is charged with no offense save being rich; while Lazarus, the very personification of poverty, is given a place in Abraham's bosom because of that poverty. These passages, like a thousand others equally objectionable, were written by Catholic prelates. Their object was to feather the nests of the priests, and they were very successful in accomplishing their purpose. The book was not written for Protestants; but, through ignorance of its contents, it was adopted into their service, and all the subsequent years have been vainly employed to try and make it harmonize with itself. But truth and error will not blend.

The Wonders of Science.

It is not prudent in these last days to declare anything impossible, or deny any claim of scientists or inventors, however wild and seemingly impossible the statement. A glance backward at modern discoveries, and of new ones daily coming to the front, tell what human genius, given time and opportunity, is capable of wresting from Nature her most profound secrets. Every new discovery is but a stepping-stone to another. A few days ago the car of progress was propelled by wind. Yesterday it was driven by steam, and to-day by lightning or gas. What will be the agency to-morrow we cannot conjecture. The human eye revealed countless stars in the firmament, and the book claimed to have been inspired by God said they were made to give light by night. The telescope revealed the fact that each star is a sun, the center of a great solar system, with a multitude of planets revolving around it. About six millions of these suns were visible to the naked, and fifty million were seen through the telescope.

Then came photography. The celestial world was photographed, and the suns swelled in number to a hundred millions, and the philosophers conclude there are other suns so remote that their light, coming at the rate of 168,000 miles a second, may not yet have reached us.

These reflections followed reading the announcement that a French scientist claims he has photographed thoughts, and exhibits their pictures as displayed on the sensitized sheet. He shows all manner of fantastic forms — those displayed by anger, hate, love, and even such as are made by the devotee at prayer.

Announcement of such revelations seem an impossibility. So did wireless telegraphy seem an incredible proposition, as did telegraphy itself when the first communication was flashed from Baltimore to Washington.

All these marvelous discoveries in our own day have tamed expression, and now we dare not assert that anything is impossible.

Should it be asserted that the school men have discovered a process for perpetuating youth, making it immortal by some chemical action, who would assert to the contrary in view of the daily revelations of science?

Profanity, with Part of a Priestly Specimen.

The chief of police in a neighboring town has made public his determination to arrest and bring before the proper authority every person guilty of an infraction of the city ordinance relating to profanity. This is as it should be. The habit is a foolish one; it is offensive to ears polite; it is unnecessary, and should be suppressed. The habit was borrowed from the preachers, and would never have gained currency but for them. It is only Christian countries that have profane words in their vocabulary. The "heathen," wherever located, coming in contact with Christian civilization, learn profane words in advance of all others.

Who would suppose the sacrilegious wretch, when angered at a fellow, and exclaiming "G— d— you," had Bible backing? But read John 15:7:

"Ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."

A practical specimen of profanity may be seen in the curses of his holiness the Pope when excomunicating some offender, who, in the name, and "by the authority of Almighty God, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and of the Holy Canon; and of the Undefiled Virgin Mary, Mother and Nurse of our Savior; and of the Celestial Virtues, Angels, Archangels, thrones, dominions, powers, cherubims and seraphims; and all the holy patriarchs and prophets; and all the apostles and evangelists; and of the holy innocents; and of the holy martyrs, and the holy confessors; and of the holy virgins; and of all the saints, together with all the holy and elect of God;" who join in cursing, anathematizing and damning every member and every act, however private, of the offender, etc.

AN IMPRESSIVE LETTER.

It Will Interest the Spiritualists of Michigan, as the State Association Has Repudiated an Important Agreement, and the Great Mass of Spiritualists There Seem Unwilling to Contribute Even 25 Cents a Year to Aid in Sustaining the Truth—Alas! What Next?

To the Spiritualists of the State of Michigan:—I am informed by the Vice-president of the N. S. A., Dr. Geo. B. Warne, that he has been notified by the secretary of the Michigan State Spiritualist Association, that they repudiate their agreement with the N. S. A. to stand one-half the expenses, and receive one-half the proceeds of the Goff will, in case they win it, and sustain the will. This will was sustained by the Probate Court, set aside by the Circuit Court, and their decision reversed in our favor in the Supreme Court, and sent back for a new trial, which is set for November 4, 1907.

Now, friends and Spiritualists of Michigan, it is not a matter of dollars and cents for the State and National Association that we are interested in, but

IT IS A MATTER OF YOUR RIGHTS AS SPIRITUALISTS.

If you are SPIRITUALISTS, you certainly should stand up for your rights in this matter.

There is ample evidence, which was ruled out, or otherwise not allowed to appear in the last Court, to make a strong case in our favor, and I wish to ask YOU, as Spiritualists of Michigan, DO YOU WISH TO SEE THIS WILL AND YOUR RIGHTS SUSTAINED, or do you prefer to ignore the case, and forever place a blot on the name Spiritualism, and give away your rights that the N. S. A. has been STRIVING TO SUSTAIN throughout the land, and for which purpose the State and National Associations were organized, and without whose assistance there would have been laws long before this prohibiting the exercise of mediumship, and especially the power of healing.

You may not believe this, but if you do not, it is simply because you do not know, for these are the facts.

We want the assistance of the Spiritualists of the State, regardless of the Association—those of you who are able—to help support this case. I have already given over $100, mostly in cash, in the former suit, to carry it up to the Supreme Court. Brothers O'Dell and Underwood, the other two of the appointed administrators, have done the same as myself in this respect, for we believed that when the Spiritualists of the State really saw how matters stood, they would only be too glad to assist in the matter. I am worth, probably, $2,000, and do not feel that I can carry this case without some assistance, yet I will put up $10 if 99 others will do the same, to furnish the means to carry this case through the courts, and will give five days' time to looking up the required evidence, if need be, which would be equal to another $15.

I think it is a SHAME AND DISGRACE for the Spiritualists of Michigan TO REPUDIATE THEIR AGREEMENT; but the officers of the State have done their best; they cannot carry on the case without your assistance, and you—many of you—are not willing to give even 25 cents per year per capita tax to assist them in their work. Many of you are not willing to pay even the 10 cents heretofore charged. Now, if you are Spiritualists, and value your right to hold property, and do with it as you wish, as being of any vital importance to you, then stand up and join me in this matter, and assist the N. S. A. to sustain this will, and make a test case of it that will be of prime importance in future cases. I am aware that there are several hundred Spiritualists in the State that are better able to pay fifty dollars than I am to pay ten, but that is not the question —my rights are just as much to me as though I were a millionaire.

Join us and we will win the case and be able to hold up our heads as Spiritualists; if you will not, then step down and out, and no longer proclaim yourself a Spiritualist, and no longer seek to communicate with the loved ones gone before, for the law will soon put an end to spirit communion by its action against mediums. Send your money to me and receive my receipt, and every cent will be turned over to the Goff Will Fund, and your name and the amount donated will be sent to The Progressive Thinker for publication, so you may know that it is going where it belongs.

It is reported on good authority that at the present time the Goff estate has paid the expenses, such as were incurred to date, and allowed to be taken from the estate, and still has not fallen below its original appraised value of $40,000.

Very truly yours,
One of the chosen Administrators,
H. L. CHAPMAN.

The Mote in Thine Own Eye.

Dr. Inman, a late English author, says in one of his publications:

"The Turks and Hindoos, in every position of life, are as morally good as common Christians. Missionaries compare the most vicious Mohammedan and Brahman with the most exemplary Christians; but I take in the whole mass, and assert there is as large a percentage of good folks in India and Turkey as there are in Spain, in France, in England or America."

This being a fact, with crime on the rampage in all Christian countries, if the missionaries have any reformatory influence they should exert it at home, and labor to rescue the fallen of our own kith and kin from ruin, instead of wasting their efforts among strangers.

Men are often capable of greater things than they perform. They are sent into the world with bills of credit, and seldom draw to their full extent. —Horace Walpole.

THE RIDDLE OF ETHER.

Interesting Particulars in Regard to the Same.

The riddle of the ether is the biggest puzzle before the wiseacres of the moment. The view now accepted provisionally by all scientists is that matter is made up of electrons or infinitesimal masses of ether, moving about freely and endowed with a definite mass and bulk. If our eyes possessed many million times the power which is theirs we should see in a lump of platinum a space closely packed with atoms the size of footballs in unceasing movement. Could we magnify these footballs to the size of a church, instead of solid substance we should find emptiness. In each of the atoms, now raised to the size of a church, some thousands or tens of thousands of electrons, each no bigger than a period, would be whirling around with inconceivably rapid movement. These electrons would hold empty space like a garrison and prevent all intruders. Sir Oliver Lodge has distinguished support when he arrives at the conclusion that there is a sense in which what we call the ether may turn out to be fifty thousand million times the ordinary material density of platinum. So that the ether would be the heaviest, the most solid substance conceivable; and what our senses represent as mass and weight really would be the comparative absence of mass. The theory which Prof. Osborne Reynolds laid before the scientific world in 1904 was similar. Matter he held to be the deficiency of mass. The universe was made up of cosmic grains, which are the electrons, or ether under another name. Where the space between the grains was large the surrounding masses of grains pressed upon this space and formed what our senses feel to be matter. This theory had a rare merit of giving an intelligible account of gravitation, a force which as yet has eluded scientific explanation. Because of the immense paradoxes involved, this theory did not find immediate acceptance, but toward it the world now is moving.

JOHN A. HOWLAND.

SPIRITUALISM.

It is the Groundwork of All Religions.

There is no longer a debatable ground left regarding the immortality of man's soul since science, by careful deductive reasoning, has fathomed the intricate subject, and even by crucial experiments weighed the soul as an embodiment of ethereal substance. Thus it has come to pass that philosopher and scientist support the religionist to-day in his faith and the claims which Modern Spiritualism has put forth in the past half century have been substantiated by science and reason.

This is the age of wonderful discoveries, and scientific research is finding new principles of growth in the vegetable kingdom of fruits and flowers, while the telescope flashes upon the eye revelations of undiscovered worlds heretofore unknown, and the mysteries of the mind and spirit are continually revealing new wonders in the universe of Nature.

But science does not prove everything, for man has intuitive perceptions which transcend the limitations of the mind and outweigh everything else, as the conviction of consciousness in the soul can never be extinguished, for it belongs to man and is a part of the infinite. But thoughtful Spiritualists welcome these present-day facts and experiments in psychic research as wholesome corrective of religious bigotry and gross materialism. Meager as have been the messages from the spirit world, yet to know there has flashed over the mystic wire a word or signal from the land of souls, however trivial, sends a thrill of gladness through the heart of the world, and adds to the wealth of the soul's happiness, and leads up to God. Great as was the discovery of Newton of a natural law of Nature, the living man's immortality as a scientific fact of another life practical and contiguous to this is all-important and ennobling, and makes for righteousness and the higher virtues of civilization and progress.

Death is being robbed of its terrors by this sensible view of man's destiny, and the wasting away of the physical body is no longer considered repellant, since we know the chemist of the soul is rebuilding a spiritual body far more perfect and by the order of the inherent powers of the mind and spirit inborn and deathless.

Death is no longer viewed as destructive, but constructive, as well, since we know that death is but a beautiful change and the soul has wings as well as tired feet.

The belief, aye, the knowledge, that the unseen world is not far removed from this world, and the conditions of the life to come are similar to this life, makes human existence something more than a passing dream of the physical senses, but increases man's desires for knowledge and the cultivation of the higher faculties, to broaden the vision of spiritual consciousness.

It is not enough to know our immortality a certainty, but instead of a vulgar, inordinate curiosity to penetrate the future state, we should concern ourselves with human life and its needs and the duties we owe each other, and build up our immortality, not at a single bound, but step by step in the ladder of progress in the true and simple life.

The Christian believer to-day, not satisfied with the old faith and dogma, is happily coming to the philosophy and scientist and finding their support and renewed life in the new theology built on reason and common sense. Not all who receive the truth of spirit communion can be led up the spiral stairway of progress, or can put the great truth to practical use and obey the mandates of their higher conscience and follow the golden rule always. But Spiritual truth, like grains of gold, falls like drops of rain all about the world and in every condition of life—some on stony soil and some on rich soil, to bring forth its harvest according to conditions and surroundings. That class of minds that are led by their emotions only, and act from impulse, will fail to appreciate the full significance that the message brings, and like Peter of old, deny the Master when the great need of faithful adherents comes. Modern Spiritualism has come to the world, not as a sect, nor rival religion, but the religion of all religions. It is more than a religion, more than science, more than philosophy. It is the light that lighteth the world. Broken and divergent as its light often is, yet it contains the prismatic shades of all minds of all nations and peoples, and is in harmony with Nature, with deific life everywhere, and its mission is to compass the world and unite all hearts in the spirit of divine love.

The N. S. A. Convention.

Stirring Words From President Barrett.

ATTENTION, SPIRITUALISTS!

Do you know that the Fifteenth Annual Convention of your Movement is soon to assemble in the City of Washington, D. C.? It will open October 14 and close five days later, holding fifteen meetings in that period, Masonic Temple, corner of F and 9th streets, N.-W., will be the place in which your delegates are to assemble. Do you know that it is your duty to see that every society in the United States and Canada is represented in that convention? Do you realize that YOU are the only people in America who take little or no interest in the subject of Spiritualism? Why is this? Are you aware that the columns of the secular press are teeming with references to your religion and to the scientific phases of your thought? Are you aware of the fact that mediumship and phenomena are being unsparingly condemned by those who know nothing about either one of them?

The writings of Hereward Carrington, David P. Abbott, C. W. Bennett, Will Irwin and James Creelman are ample evidence that there is more than a passing interest in the subject of psychism on the part of the masses. Books are being written, analyzing and classifying your phenomena for you. THE TRICKERY OF CHARLATANS IS HELD TO BE OF THE SAME CHARACTER AS THE WORK OF THE GENUINE MEDIUM! The discrimination that should be made between these two classes must be made by YOU!! No one else is qualified to do it. Read the recent articles in Collier's Weekly, in the Washington Post, in the New York Herald, in the Springfield Republican, in the New Orleans Picayune, in the Minneapolis Tribune, in all of the Hearst Papers, and you will see that there is great need of action on your part. Every one of you owes it to the angel world and to your conscience, either to attend the convention in person, or to see to it that you are represented there by one or more delegates. When you were members of the Christian churches, you esteemed it a privilege, as well as a pleasant duty, to make sacrifices for your religion. Is Spiritualism of so little value to you that you selfishly withhold from it what you willingly gave to your church?

The coming convention is the most important gathering of the kind ever held in the United States. It means more to Spiritualism than any five of its predecessors taken together. The world is looking to YOU to see what you are going to say upon the important issues under discussion in the secular press bearing directly upon your religion.

Has not the doctrine of "Laissez Faire" prevailed long enough? Do you not really feel that it is really time for YOU to do something? Will you not act? A crisis is at hand! The writer is no alarmist, neither is he chanting the swan song of despair. He sees Spiritualism in danger from enemies within its own ranks, and from its mistaken opponents on the outside, and therefore feels it is the duty of the Spiritualists to do something for themselves. This is their golden opportunity. They can speak to the world in plain terms through their National Convention. Its voice is accepted as the voice of authority by all classes of people. It may be that some Spiritualists do not so consider it, but the fact remains that the civil authorities, ecclesiastical bodies, litterateurs and men of science, do so accept it, hence its proclamations have weight with the children of men who think for themselves.

If anyone can read a recent article entitled "Behind the Scenes with Spiritualism," and then remain away from the convention, or refuse to contribute to the support of the cause, there is but little hope for his soul here, or hereafter. Of course, it is true that many are so situated that they cannot come to Washington to attend this all-important gathering. It is also true that a few cannot even afford to send $1.00 to aid the good cause, but it IS true, and more than true, that every one CAN send a kind thought and a helpful suggestion, either by written word, or by the "psychic telegraph," that will become a power for good when it reaches the convention hall. It is a fact of more than ordinary moment that every Spiritualist in America, with very few exceptions, can afford to give something to the support of our movement. All who can attend the convention owe it to themselves, to their angel friends, and to the Infinite Intelligence of the Universe, to send some loving thought accompanied by a contribution in cash, if possible, to the secretary of the N. S. A., in order that this convention may be made the success it deserves to be.

The transition of such noted workers as Rev. Moses Hull, Mrs. Jennie H. Brown, Theodore J. Mayer and Hon. A. Gaston, is evidence that there is need of reconsecration to the cause of truth on the part of their friends who are yet on earth. The work these arisen ones left unfinished must be carried on to completion. Spiritualists of America, YOU are the ones to do that work. Come to the Convention and help do it. If you cannot come, send your dollars—they will speak for you. Consecrate yourself anew to the principles of Spiritualism. Remember the devotion of our arisen leaders and do something for their sakes, for the cause they loved. Demosthenes, the Athenian orator, when asked the secret of eloquence, answered: "Action, Action, ACTION!" "Action, Action, ACTION!" will prove the secret of success to YOU, my Spiritualist friends, if you will but heed the great orator's suggestion. Let us hear from you! Come to Washington in person! Send some written word if you cannot come, and let it be accompanied by the coin of the realm, so that our beloved cause may reach the goal of success in safety.

HARRISON D. BARRETT.

THE N. S. A. CONVENTION.

Next week the N. S. A. Convention will be held at Washington, D. C. The Spiritualists of Chicago would be delighted to learn that Dr. G. B. Warne has been elected president. His wide experience, his excellent judgment, his fine ability and wonderful success in everything he undertakes to accomplish, would make him an ideal president. However, any other person, if elected to the position, will receive the cordial support of The Progressive Thinker.

If Harrison D. Barrett fails of reelection as president for the sixteenth time, his great service to the cause of truth should entitle him to recognition in some other position in connection with the N. S. A. where the pecuniary reward will be a fair equivalent for his valuable services. To say that he has been a tower of strength to pure Spiritualism is putting it mildly.

LOOK OUT FOR THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER NEXT WEEK. IF WE MISTAKE NOT, IT WILL SHAKE SPIRITUALISM FROM CENTER TO CIRCUMFERENCE WITH THE INFORMATION IMPARTED. Every SPIRITUALIST IN THIS BROAD LAND SHOULD READ THAT ISSUE. THE TIME HAS ARRIVED FOR ACTION IN VARIOUS WAYS!

Black Magic and White Magic.

Black magic, as I understand, is any power that prevents or retards our moral or spiritual unfoldment, such as being hypnotized by a spirit, or mortal, and willed to see, hear, or believe, anything that our own developed moral and spiritual senses cannot comprehend, or understand, therefore darkens our minds, by hypnotizing our finite senses.

White magic is the cultivation and unfoldment of our own moral and spiritual senses, which reveals the truth to our spiritual understanding, independent of all the priests or holy bibles ever written by man.

If there is a God, then Nature's divine law is his will, and it is all-mighty, and the sooner we learn to obey it, the less we will be punished, and the more we will unfold the light of our spiritual consciousness. Call that light white magic, or what you will, it will pilot your bark over life's rough sea, and land you in the harbor of peace, and reveal to your spiritual understanding the immortality of your soul, that will live in a spiritual body after you leave the physical form you are now living in.

It is only by the unfoldment of the spiritual senses that you can understand spiritual things, for the finite senses cannot comprehend infinite or spiritual things. A. C. DOANE.

Infidel and Christian: A Contrast.

Shelley, the poetical agnostic predecessor of Col. Ingersoll, in his Queen Mab, says:

"Were it virtue's only meed to dwell in a celestial palace, all resigned to pleasurable impulses; immured within the prison of itself, the will of changeless Nature would be unfulfilled. Learn to make others happy."

The Christian: "Believe Jesus is the Eternal Son of God, co-equal in power and wisdom with the Father; that though born less than 2,000 years ago, and died on a cross, yet he was without beginning of days, or end of life; and he who doubts these statements shall be damned."

Spiritualism and Modern Thought.

An Address Delivered by the President, Mark A. Barwise, at the Opening of Temple Heights Spiritualist Camp-meeting, Maine.

Mrs. Vive-president, co-workers and friends:—Last year as we met for the formal opening of our camp meeting I took "Spiritualism and Its Critics,, as the subject of my presidential address. The greater part of my remarks was directed toward showing the inadequacy of the various theories which the opponents of Spiritualism put forth as explanations of mediumistic phenomena. Spiritualism was then approached from its negative side. We concluded that it was philosophically sound because it survived all the tests under which its rival theories failed. To-day I wish to approach the subject of Spiritualism, perhaps still from its negative side, but along quite another avenue, and have chosen for my subject "SPIRITUALISM AND MODERN THOUGHT."

In the short time which we have before us, little more than the merest outline of the picture can be attempted.

I shall leave it to you to fill in all the fine shadings and cloud tints to give color in one place and in another to tone down spots that in our haste have been left altogether too glaring.

Let it be understood in the beginning that in speaking of "modern thought" the philosopher of our time makes no reference to the so-called "New Thought," or "Mental Science," or "Spiritual Science," or "Christian Science," or "Metaphysical" healing cults or propagandas; but the term "modern thought" is used for the MATURE thought of the human race—for the world-conception which the last six centuries of scientific research, experiment, exploration and invention have patiently built up.

In the days of Dante and Chaucer the human race, mentally, was just casting off its swaddling clothes. To all but an isolated few this world was then a very small affair, only a few thousand miles across in any direction. The Ptolemaic astronomy was not generally diffused among the masses. The universe was regarded as a three-storied structure—the gilded city above, inhabited by God and his angels, and inclosed within jasper walls; next below the earth, which was flat, like a trencher; and beneath this the underworld where fires raged and fiends tormented the multitude who did not satisfy priestly requirements. The air was filled with spells and enchantments, goblins and elves ran riot, and crucifixes and saintly mascots were as thick as leaves in autumn. The Pagan pantheon had been supplanted by the Christian saints, and superstition was at its height.

MEN LIVED CRINGING AND COWERING AMID A VORTEX OF CONTENDING FORCES. GOD AND HIS ANGELS ON THE ONE HAND, AND THE DEVIL AND HIS IMPS ON THE OTHER, EACH WAGING ETERNAL WARFARE FOR THE MASTERY OF THE HUMAN SOUL.

No such thing as natural law or order in the sequence of events was dreamed of at this time. Everything that happened was due to the agency of a demon or a friendly power. Potent charms, hallowed sayings, trinkets that had been blessed, and relics of saints were resorted to to ward off all sorts of ills and approaching calamities. In fact, try as we will, we cannot mentally put ourselves in the position of the common people of the fourteenth century.

Slowly and painfully through the centuries has superstition given way to natural law. Here a discovery, there an exploration, now an experiment, then an invention, each proving the open sesame which unlocked storehouses of knowledge yet undreamed. With every new truth established the world's knowledge increased on a geometrical ratio. Merely to mention the sacred names of science brings to mind the remarkable achievements of these men, and emphasizes the paucity of knowledge before their age. Copernicus, Kepler, Columbus, Galileo, Newton, Priestley, Joule, Darwin, Wallace, Huxley, Tyndall, Fiske, and many others, each have opened up new realms of truth and added so much to what we know of the nature of things that it is impossible to conceive what the course of knowledge would have been if either one had never lived.

Because of the labors of these men, and men of science in general, our universe to-day is incommensurably greater and grander than anything the Middle Ages could grasp. Everything that occurs now, whether it be the formation of a raindrop or the launching of a planet, takes place in obedience to natural law. Boundless, illimitable space stretches out on all sides. Myriads of suns surrounded by myriads of planets are scattered through unexplored depths. Myriads of nebulae in all stages of condensation in the fullness of time will make other suns. The awful drama of creation is actually going on about us.

The great universe is not inert, quiescent, dead, but is throbbing and pulsating with energy, animation, life. Instead of the fallen nature of Calvin, merely an inert machine, it is one stupendous, living organism, teeming with activity and giving birth to new forms of life.

FROM THE STAR-DUST TO SIRIUS, FROM THE AMOEBA TO THE ANTELOPE, FROM THE PROTOPLASMIC GERM TO JESUS, SHAKSPEARE AND HERBERT SPENCER, THERE IS NO BREAK IN THE PROCESS, NO CREATIVE CAPRICE, NO SUSPENSION OF IMMUTABLE, INEXORABLE LAW.

God on this new view is not an enlarged Hebraic personality, eternally clothed with dictatorial powers, but the great Soul of Nature permeating every minutest part—animate and inanimate—as much the source of the oratorio or the mother love as of Niagara or the Alps.

> "All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
> Whose body Nature is, and God the soul."

Christ has been reduced from the Godhead to a man with an advanced spiritual unfoldment, such as Buddha, Confucius, or Zoroaster. Heaven and Hell, as definite localities in the universe, do not exist in modern thought. The evil in our natures is seen to be an inheritance from our brute ancestry, which, as ages come and go, is being slowly eradicated. From beginning to end, from primordial firemist to the modern university town, there is nothing capricious, nothing supernatural, nothing extra-natural, enters into the universe of the modern scholar. Everything unfolds from the preceding, slowly, gradually, naturally, just as the rosebud becomes the full-grown flower, in accordance with unvarying, unchangeable, unhastening law.

The only test of truth in these days which we may apply to a single idea, or a system of ideas, is whether or no it squares with what we know of the sum total of things. This is as true of the generalizations of philosophy as in the affairs of everyday life. A rumor on the street, testimony in court, or the newest theory of comets, is accepted or rejected because of its congruity or incongruity with accredited facts.

On this test of truth the Spiritualist has no apology to make for any of his views. The teachings of Spiritualism are in complete harmony with the world-conception of the modern thinker. Ten years before the advent of the "Origin of Species" Spiritualism was proclaiming universal progression here and hereafter. It relegated Satan and his abode to the limbo of forgotten superstitions. It robbed death of its hidden terrors and demonstrated the continuity of life. It transformed the orthodox god, who took pleasure in tormenting nine-tenths of his children, to the beneficent energy which is immanent in all things. It taught that none was so high but what greater heights may yet be attained; and none so low but what in the fullness of time, through their own soul-strivings, they would attain a well-rounded, mellow, spiritual unfoldment. It destroyed vicarious atonement and forgiveness of sins, and pointed out that every sin leaves its scar, which must be slowly and patiently outgrown; that our own better nature is our only savior; that strength of character comes only through self-reliance, and not through calling on Christ to bear our burdens.

IN A WORD, THE TEACHINGS OF SPIRITUALISM IN RELATION TO GOD AND THE WORLD, AND THE LIFE HERE AND THE LIFE TO COME, IS IN PERFECT CONSONANCE WITH THE ESTABLISHED TRUTHS OF MODERN THOUGHT.

If the test of truth of any idea is its congruity with accredited facts, the modern world-conceptions, being a grand resume of the sum total of accredited facts, is the best possible measure of truth. And as Spiritualism in every point of its contact with other divisions of knowledge is in perfect harmony with our modern world-conception, it follows that we have a proof presumptive for its truth of the highest degree of validity.

So much for the relation of Spiritualism to modern thought taken as a whole. We will now consider it in relation to one or two of the larger divisions of modern thought.

EVOLUTION.

First with respect to the law of evolution.

It is considered among students of philosophy to be a strong point in support of any doctrine or theory if such doctrine or theory is able to live through any great revolution in general philosophy. Spiritualism has not only lived through the mightiest revolution in the history of modern thought, but has gained added strength and support from the new system. During the decade from 1858 to 1868, when evolution was becoming established, theological doctrines were knocked helter-skelter, and religious idols were scattered on all sides. Andrew D. White has well said that the "Origin of Species" came into the theological world like a plow into an ant-hill, and the little theologians hurried and skurried about to save what they could from the general doom. Darwin's epoch-making work knocked the last prop from under the so-called "natural theology" school of thought, and God as an anthropomorphic being ceased to exist in modern philosophy. The Copernican astronomy, the laws of Kepler, and the Newtonian gravitation had previously relieved God from the immediate direction of the "dead matter" section of the universe. The last great stronghold of personal divine supervision, according to Paley, Bell, Chalmers and Whewell, was in the nice contrivances and beautiful adaptations of the innumerable species of plants and animals to the complex conditions in which they live. But when the adaptability of a species to its environment, all the nice adjustments to surrounding conditions, were seen to be the result of the survival of only those individuals that through slow modification were adapted to their changing environment, and not to intelligent contrivance, the de-anthropomorphism of the Deity was wellnigh complete.

For more than ten years previous to 1860 entranced mediums were teaching this same view—that God was not anthromorphic, not in the form of man, not centralized in one personality in some far-off heaven, but was the great life-force, the great Over-soul permeating the whole universe, giving itself expression in all the beauties of Nature and in all the activities of matter. Spiritualism, unlike its sister religions, had nothing to unlearn when the doctrine of evolution became established.

Not only does evolution as a whole Harmonize with the teachings of Spiritualism, but certain milestones in the progress of the life development of this planet are especially striking.

Spiritualism teaches that man has an ethereal body, something like his physical body, only so rarefied and attenuated that it is not discernible by our physical senses when we are in a normal condition; that when death takes place the physical body only ceases to be animated; and that the ethereal body escapes and continues to live in the spiritual realm, where the mind retains all its faculties and affections, and where mental and spiritual unfoldment may continue ages to come.

Many materialists have hastily asserted that the idea of a soul or spirit apart from a physical body in the light of evolution is preposterous; but a little careful study of some phases of evolution will show that the idea is not quite so outre or preposterous as might at first appear.

If eons and eons ago a prophet could have viewed the matter which has since been evolved into our sun and his attendant planets, when all was a nebulous gas, much more attenuated and rarefied than ordinary chemical gases, how preposterous it would have seemed to have prophesied that out of that filmy vapor could have been evolved anything so stable and solid as Mt. Waldo!

Again, when the earth became a sphere and sufficiently cool to retain water on its surface, the prodigious leap from the apparently non-living to the living had to be made. Somewhere the cosmic energy became focused and polarized in such a way that out of inorganic matter sprung the living protoplasmic germ, the forerunner of all our fauna and flora. How preposterous, indeed, would it have seemed to an observer to have been told that out of the black, oozy mud of an Eocene ocean was springing the potential orchid and rose, the antelope and the lark!

Likewise when the mammalian order had dominated the life of the world and mastodons roamed as kings, how strange it was that one particular species of ape-like beings should have had the peculiar nervous organism which was capable of unfolding an intellect. What a delicate and long-sustained balance of conditions was necessary to have crossed the great gulf between a non-thinking and a thinking being! How preposterous it would have been for even an archangel to have prophesied that from THE CROUCHING, CRINGING, HALF-APE, HALF-HUMAN BEING, WHO WAS JUST ABLE TO THINK OF GRASPING A CLUB AS A WEAPON OF DEFENSE, THERE SHOULD BE DESCENDED A LINCOLN, A DARWIN, A SPENCER, A SHAKSPEARE, A BUDDHA, OR A JESUS.

Enough has been said, I think, even in these scanty paragraphs, so that it will be seen that there is no reason on antecedent grounds for thinking that there would be anything outre or preposterous in the evolution of a spiritual body which might exist independently upon the death of our physical body. The gulf is much narrower than many which evolution has bridged. The first organism that could move itself through its own exertions was the forerunner of Stevenson and Fulton. It had started on the first steps of its career which later was to render it independent of grosser matter. In all stages evolution has been from the unorganized to the organized, from the dependent to the independent.

When our Silurian ancestors were wriggling about in the water, would one of them, if it had been possible for him to ponder on the subject, ever dared to dream that a form of life could be developed that could live in such a rarefied medium as air? Would it ever have seemed possible that out of those forms of life of the cuttlefish variety a form could be developed like that of the swallow that dips and dives through the air currents in utter abandon?

The perfect independence and freedom of action with respect to its former environment is what makes the idea of a spirit to some minds seem unnatural. Yet Nature has produced greater leaps from the gross to the ethereal over and over again.

FROM THE LOATHSOME CATERPILLAR, WHOLLY GROSS AND LIMITED IN MOVEMENT, WHOSE WHOLE LIFE IS TAKEN UP WITH GOURMANDIZING, SPRINGS THE BEAUTIFUL AND ETHEREAL BUTTERFLY THAT FLITS AMONG THE FLOWERS SO AIRILY, AND WHOSE MATERIAL WANTS ARE SUPPLIED BY NECTARED SWEETS.

Someone may say, all this may be true, but how does this prove the existence of a spirit?

I would answer that we are not occupied this afternoon with proving the reality of spirit existence, for such proof rests on wholly independent, complete and adequate evidence, but with pointing out that an evolutionist on a priori grounds has no reason for ignoring the philosophy of Spiritualism.

If in these few paragraphs it has been possible, in however small a degree, to clear your minds of the supposed incongruity between Spiritualism and evolution, I shall have been pleased.

We will now take up the relations of the teachings of Spiritualism to our modern ideas of

MATTER AND MOTION.

Nature, although completely unified as one existence, may be divided, for our purpose, into two great sections: the organic and inorganic—the so-called living and dead matter. The study of organic life on this planet in all its various forms, vegetable and animal, has culminated in the doctrine of evolution, and as we have just seen, this doctrine is in complete harmony with the philosophy of Spiritualism. Now let us see if what we know of the nature of inorganic matter and its laws of motion contains anything antagonistic to, or in harmony with, this philosophy.

Following the conception of Greek speculative thought, educated men universally held, until within about three centuries, that matter was "dead," and only exhibited motion as acted upon by some extra-natural power. When Newton proclaimed that each particle of matter exerted gravitative force on every other particle, directly as their masses and inversely as the square of their distances, the clergy with one accord declared that he had removed God from the universe, and substituted "blind force" for intelligent control.

One after another of the discoveries in astronomy, in chemistry, and in physics, have reduced the entire universe of inorganic matter to the reign of law. And it is not necessary to point out that this is in accordance with the Spiritualist's idea of the universe and its mode of existence.

The modern physicist affirms that all matter is atomic, and that the various degrees of solidity are due to the distance the atoms are from each other and the rapidity of their motion. That is, a piece of steel or granite is not one homogeneous mass, but is made up of millions of atoms which are vibrating very rapidly. If we can increase these vibrations in any way, the nature of the matter is at once changed. For instance, if we subject a certain piece of metal to intense heat it becomes molten; if we still further apply heat, the liquid will become gas. All that we have done in applying heat is to increase the pitch of atomic vibration, and what seemed solid and material has become so rarefied and attenuated that it is imperceptible to our sense of vision. That is to say, by increasing the atomic vibration of any piece of matter we can cause it to pass from the perceptible to the imperceptible. And it thus dawns upon us that perhaps the grossness of materiality is not such a hard and fast matter as we have hitherto supposed.

Conversely, if the pitch of vibration in an imperceptible substance can in any way be lessened, matter will pass from the imperceptible to the perceptible, or from the seeming nothing to something substantial.

Now, it is not necessary for me to point out to a body of Spiritualists that this is apparently what takes place in the phenomena of materialization—out of the imperceptible appears the perceptible, and disappears again into the imperceptible. All that is needed to be assumed is a slowing down of the pitch of atomic vibration, and not that something suddenly has sprung into existence from nothing. The universal testimony of controlling intelligences is that nothing has been created in producing the phenomena of materialization, but that there is merely a utilization of matter already existing. Thus we see a striking conformity between a particular phenomenon of mediumship and a fundamental doctrine of modern thought.

Another axiom of modern science is known as the persistence of force, or the conservation of energy. This doctrine proclaims that not even the smallest amount of energy is ever annihilated; that energy arrested in one form must reappear in some other. A hammer is raised and brought down on an anvil and molar motion is arrested, but it reappears in the form of heat on the face of the hammer and the surface of the anvil. Thus molar motion may be transformed into molecular or atomic motion. Instances could be multiplied.

Contrariwise, atomic motion may be transformed into molar motion. Witness the locomotive and the trolley car.

If we are to think of energy at all in the spiritual realm, we must needs think of it as vibratory, that is, as causing atomic motion. And as we have seen, an arrested atomic motion may reappear as the movement of a ponderable mass, we have the explanation, at least on its physical side, of what takes place in the seance when ponderable bodies are independently moved. Another striking example of the complete congruity of Spiritualistic phenomena with known laws of matter and motion in general.

Spirits, whether controlling an ignorant girl in a backwoods kitchen, or a society queen in a Fifth Avenue drawing-room; whether controlling an untutored boy or the learned William Stainton Moses, invariably claim that they live in a finer degree of vibration; that the spirit world is just as real as ours, but that everything is more attenuated; that they are free from the trammels which grosser matter imposes upon us, and that when they control a medium's brain, to a certain extent he becomes clairvoyant, that is, perceives things which are beyond the powers of the normal physical senses. Let us see what modern science has to say on the range of vibration and its effects on consciousness.

Pasing over the three lower senses, as having to do with that which is nearly or quite contiguous with our physical bodies, we may accept the dictum of science that all we know of the universe is borne in upon our minds on vibratory waves of a definite pitch. Waves producing the sensation of sight and sound are now measured almost as accurately as yards of calico. A vibration less than sixteen times per second does not appear as a tone even to the most acute ear, while from sixteen up to twenty-four produces the very lowest bass notes. Each octave on the piano represents many hundreds of vibrations per second above the octave next below, and the highest tone which the best trained ear can catch is vibrating at about 30,000 times per second.

There is a wide gulf between sight and sound, and the medieval saying that "there may be things in heaven and earth of which we have never dreamed" may be only too true. However, as the pitch of vibration reaches 458 trillions, out of the imperceptible emerges the color red. Infra-red vibrations appear as actinic or heat rays. Each succeeding color in the order of the spectrum appears as the pitch of vibration increases, violet, being the last, vibrates at 727 trillions per second. Beyond this the normal and unaided senses cannot go. What we know of the universe immediately surrounding our lives compared to what we do not know may be infinitesimally small. Whatever may be going on, if not within a definite range of vibration, is wholly unknown to the mind of man.

But happily we are not wholly dependent on the normal senses; and in the last few years science has discovered aids to them which allow us to penetrate a little farther into the realms of the unknown. The Crookes tube in the X-ray apparatus is merely an appliance for separating vibrations beyond the violet end of the spectrum from the coarser ones, and directing them through any given piece of matter. Although spoken of as "rays" of light, the X-rays are not visible to the eye; but only the shadows which they cast in passing through varying densities of matter are seen. That is to say, a very rapid pitch of vibration may pass through matter vibrating at a lower pitch and reveal an imbedded substance vibrating at a still lower pitch.

Differently from other denominations, this transcendent fact was neither new nor startling to Spiritualists. Our psychics for half a century have been enabled, when in clairvoyant condition, to penetrate so-called solid matter.

Just as the X-ray, which has increased the world's knowledge of matter, is found beyond the violet, so photographic rays are ultra-violet. These, too, have increased our knowledge of matter. It is a commonplace in astronomy that nebulae and stars too distant for the most powerful telescope to reach are revealed on the delicate photographic plate. And since the researches of Sir William Crookes, Alfred Russel Wallace and Lombroso, spirit photographs are poo-hooed only by the uninformed. Sir William is the greatest living chemist in the world to-day, the inventor of the tube above referred to, and is credited with a long list of chemical discoveries. In one of his books he gives an account of getting several distinct photographs of a spirit, using five separate cameras with simultaneous exposures. Hundreds of lesser names have had like experiences.

As to clairaudience and impressions which psychics receive from the spiritual realm, wireless telegraphy and recent psychology ought to render such ideas less startling to the intelligent student. The controls say that the mind of a medium must be in exactly the right condition to receive an impression from them. Recent experiments in wireless telegraphy show that if the coherer vibrates even one in a million out of tune with the transmitter, the wave rays are not able to be received and there is no message. Similarwise when Prof. and Mrs. Sidgwick,

AFFLICTIONS OF THE EYE

Successfully Treated By "ACTINA"

Eyeglasses May Be Abandoned.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for the relief of most forms of disease, as a new method—the Actina treatment—has been discovered which eliminates the necessity of former torturous methods. There is no risk or necessity of experimenting, as many people report having been cured of failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye after being pronounced incurable, through this grand discovery.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes. "I am 74 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Mrs. T. F. Moyle, Waterford, Wis., writes:—"About two years ago I was taken with Iritis in both eyes and nearly went blind and it was thought an operation would be necessary. I sent for an Actina last April and it has taken all the inflamation out and my eyes are now well.

Hundreds of other testimonials will be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept 342L, 811 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

The Wonders of Life.

By ERNEST HAECKEL, Author of "The Riddle of the Universe." This book is confined to the realm of organic science, and treats of "The Knowledge, Nature, Functions and History of Life." Price, [illegible] 50.

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A Very Suggestive Work Which Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What Is unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1.00.

SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.

A Book That Every American Freethinker Will Delight to Own.

By John E. Remsburg.

The work consists of two parts, "The Fathers of Our Republic," and "The Saviors of Our Republic." In regard to Paine's religious views, Mr. Remsburg establishes the negative of the following (1) Was Paine an Atheist? (2) Was he a Christian? (3) Did he recant? Page after page of the most radical freethought sentiments are culled from the correspondence and other writings of Franklin and Jefferson, which show that these men were as pronounced in the rejection of Christianity as Paine and Ingersoll. That Washington was not a Christian nor a believer in Christianity. In support of Lincoln's infidelity he has collected the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses.

The book is handsomely bound in cloth, giving fine portraits of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant; also portrait of the author.

This book contains 365 pages, printed on heavy paper, well bound in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

MODERN ARCHITECTURE

PRACTICAL BUNGALOWS AND COTTAGES FOR TOWN AND COUNTRY

This book contains perspective wash drawings and floor plans of one hundred and twenty-five choice homes, ranging in price from $500 to $2,000, and is invaluable to the home builder, furnishing many new and up-to-date ideas and suggestions in modern architecture. Every plan advertised is made by a licensed architect and been built from to the entire satisfaction of the builder and within the estimated cost invariably. Blue prints are furnished at moderate cost, ranging from $5.00 to $10.00 according to the cost of erection, consisting of floor, roof and foundation plans, front, side and rear elevations, with complete typewritten specifications. WEST SIDE SPIRITUALISTS WHO ARE WILLING TO TAKE PART IN ORGANIZING A SOCIETY IN THE DISTRICT OF HUMBOLDT PARK, WILL PLEASE SEND THEIR NAMES AND ADDRESSES TO E. J. CARE OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, 40 Loomis Street.

E. W. Sprague and wife are now at their home in the city of Detroit, Mich., where they expect to remain in the missionary, and other fields of work for the grand cause of Spiritualism. Mr. Sprague's services may be secured for Sunday or week-day meetings, weddings and funerals, anywhere in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, or Canada, in places not too far away from Detroit. Mrs. Sprague will also respond to calls for meetings and seances. They are both well known platform test mediums. Individuals or societies desiring their services can address them at 1082 Trumbull Ave., Detroit, Mich.

The ladies of the Illinois Sunflower Club will hold a Bazaar on Sunday, November 30, in Jefferson Hall, Fraternity Hall building, No. 70 East Adams street. A fine supper will be served at 6 o'clock. All Spiritualists interested in the cause are requested to lend their aid.

Mrs. Alice C. Barry, speaker and message bearer for the Clinton society of Spiritualists, will respond to calls for funerals within reasonable distance of Clinton. It is on these occasions that Mrs Barry does her very best work.

Mrs. Dr. M. E. Lane of Buffalo, N. Y., has moved to 723 Prospect Ave.

W. F. Schumacher writes: "The services of the Spiritualist Church of the Students of Nature, at Van Buren Opera House, Sunday, September 29, was well attended. Brother T. C. Warner gave an inspired address, which was soul-stirring and uplifting. Mrs. M. Schumacher, the pastor, gave the flower messages, resulting with such success and satisfaction being expressed by the audience."

Titus Merritt writes from New York: "Mrs. M. Gaule-Ridinger, at the Sunday meeting of the 29th ult., paid a beautiful tribute to the late Hon. A. Gaston of Meadville, Pa. He was formerly president of the Lily Dale Camp Meeting, and ex-Congressman. Our society feels a deep regret of the fatal accident. Mrs. Reidinger gives a flattering report of the Lily Dale Camp this season. God speed the right."

A course of nine lectures on "Cosmic Consciousness," will be delivered by Sakharam Ganesh Pundit, A. B., of Bombay, India, on Saturday afternoons at 3 o'clock, during the months of October and November, 1907, at 6558 Stewart avenue, Chicago, Ill. Course tickets, $5.00. Single admission, 75 cents. First lecture on Saturday, October 5, 1907, at 3 p. m.

The San Bernardino Society of Spiritualists, California, celebrated its fortiety-ninth birthday, on October 6, with an all-day meeting at the Temple, corner Sixth and C streets. The Psychic Society of Riverside, attended in a body and assisted in making this a happy occasion. A good program was prepared and a general invitation extended. The Sunflower League Ladies served tea and coffee.

C. P. Follett writes from St. Paul, Minn.: "The St. Paul Alliance will open its regular winter meetings on the first Sunday in October at Odd Fellows Hall, Wabasha and 5th sts., St. Paul, Minn. The meetings are held regularly every Sunday until the last Sunday in May, 1908. Lyceum and conference meeting 11 a. m.

The St. Paul Alliance opened its Hall in the Odd Fellows Block for regular services on Sunday evening, October 6, at 8 o'clock. Miss Alice Wickstrum lectured on the subject, "What does Spiritualism Bring to Human Life?" Mrs. E. A. Sauer gave spirit messages and spirit descriptions. The St. Paul Sunflower Lyceum also started its regular meetings Sunday morning, October 6, at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Rufus A. McCurday, of Portland, Me., was in the city last week. He is a well know lecturer in the East in behalf of our Cause and being young he is destined to make an excellent impression for good on the world. He is an exceptionally bright young man. He lectures for the First Society of Spiritualists in Philadelphia, Pa., during the month of October.

Correspondent writes from Springfield, Mass.: "It is with pleasure that I report the very auspicious opening of the lecture season of 1907 and1908, of the First Spiritualist Ladies Aid Society of Springfield, Mass. We were fortunate in securing the services of the eminent trance speaker, Oscar A. Edgerly, while our expectations were high, they were indeed more than realized, as we listened to the glorious inspiration of the illuminated souls who constitute his spirit band. It is the consensus of opinion of our people that those who are so fortunate as to listen to any of Mr. Edgerly's lectures are indeed truly blessed. Mr. Edgerly goes from here to his new field of labor, Columbus, Ohio. It is our hope that his glorious presence may again at some future time grace our rostrum."

BEAR IN MIND that the editor of The Progressive Thinker is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not, agree with their respective views.

Prof. W. M. Lockwood's permanent address is No. 723 Prospect avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

Rev. G. C. Love of Portland, Oregon is now in Chicago, and would like an engagement either in the city or between Chicago and Washington, D. C., as he is on his way to the N. S. A. Convention. Mr. Love is one of our ablest lecturers. Address him at No. 4707 Calumet ave., Chicago, Ill.

E. Fautsch writes: "The Progressive Spiritual Society holds its regular meeting on Sunday evenings at the old and well known corner of North avenue, and Burling street. Good spiritual mediums are always present to assist our pastor, Mrs. B. Hilbert. They always find a welcome hand at the rostrum. Everybody who is willing to feed his soul is welcomed at the door of the supplyhouse."

A correspondent writes from Braintree, Vt.: "Mrs. Laura Cummings from Hardwick served the society here the 15th and 28th, with fine success. Her lectures were very instructive, and her psychometric readings were wonderfully interesting and correct. We hope to have her with us again soon. Our society is small but the church people join with us in attending the meetings, and help defray the expenses, showing that liberalism in thought is permeating the whole universe."

Rev. Katie Hussman-Harveston writes cheerfully of her reception at San Diego. She is pastor of the First Spiritualist Church of Santa Cruz, Cal.

Emma A. Ellis writes: "Thursday, September 26, was the crowning day of Spiritualism in Chicago. Many welcomes have been celebrated to honor Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, president of The Band of Harmony, but all present on that day conceded it was the greatest. The meeting of the Band of Harmony held on the above date was the first regular meeting after the summer season, and was largely attended. The afternoon was given over to felicitous speeches by Mrs. Chandler, Hair, Stone and others. Each and everyone was glad to greet the President after her return from "The Hague." Before and during the supper the social spirit was manifest everywhere. When the evening session opened everyone was in a mood to enjoy the program, which consisted of singing, violin solo and duet. Mr. Lombard deserves special mention for his singing of "Oh, Are Ye Sleeping, Maggie?" Both afternoon and evening all were charmed by the interesting experiences of the President during her trip to the Peace Congress. Mrs Ashton gave expression to many beautiful spiritual thoughts. All were loth to adjourn, but after their spiritual feast carried home many beautiful flowers. The next meeting of the Band of Harmony will be held October 10, room 309, Masonic Temple.

S. B. West writes from Elgin, Ill.: "The Progressive Research Society held a very enthusiastic meeting, Wednesday, September 25, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. West. Dr. and Mrs. Caird were with us. The doctor gave a very interesting talk on the plans of the F. O. O. S., and also on the Fraternal Camp Association which was well received by our members. Mrs. Caird gave some messages that were very convincing to several invited guests, and started them on the right road. Our home medium, Mrs. D. L. West, finished the evening by giving a few good tests. We hope to increase our membership this Fall and Winter, and we pray for the success of our cause."

A. G. Cleveland writes: "The Society of the Psychic Forces, at 361 E. 43rd st., Wilcox Hall, was well attended on Sunday evening, September 29. Dr. C. A. Burgess, president of the Spiritualists' League, was the speaker for the evening, and we were pleased to see Dr. and Mrs. George B. Warne present. Dr. Warne gave us some inspiring thoughts for the upliftment of our cause, and Dr. Burgess was very interesting to all those present. We hope to have him with us again soon in the near future. Mrs. Isa Cleveland gave some spirit messages which were all readily recognized. Strangers can always feel welcome. Come."

J. C. F. Grumbine has been invited to speak next season at the Mt. Pleasant Park Camp Meeting, of Clinton, Iowa. He is anxious to hear from other camps in the west. He is open en tour for lecture engagements during the months of July and August, and will serve any society during September. Mr. Grumbine has always proved a drawing card at camp meetings and at Lake Brady, Lily Dale, Chesterfield and Mt. Pleasant Park he is very favorably known. Mr. Grumbine is a Spiritualist of the old and the new school and his message of inspiration will no doubt be received with enthusiasm by all concerned. Address him at once at 24 Strathmore Rd., Brookline, Mass. He is speaker for the First Society of Boston, Mass., where he has served for the last eight years.

Carrie M. Hinsdale of Ft. Worth, Texas, and Mrs. Edith Cummings have been appointed delegates to attend the National Convention of Spiritualists at Washington.

Mrs. M. E. Hanvey writes: "The afternoon meeting of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue, was well attended September 29. Short talks by Nellie Kusserow and Mrs. Nora Hill, with messages by both. Evening service, lecture by Nora Hill, entranced by one of her Ancient guides, subject "Progression in Mortal and Spirit," which was well received. Messages were given by Brother Schmidt and a visiting medium, Mr. Frank Emitsberger of the Church of the Soul, Louisville, Ky. The Kentuckian is a young man with great promise. Our speaker for Sunday night, October 13, will be Dr. J. H. Randall."

TAKE NOTICE.— Correspondents are requested when writing for this paper to use either a typewriter or a pen, with black ink. Write on only one side of the paper, and in a plain, legible hand, and thus avoid the necessity of preparing your copy for the printer. Please bear this in mind.

WANTED: One steam heated room with breakfast for gentleman. Address E. P. J., No. 40 Loomis st.

Ferd C. Suhrer writes: "The opening service of the First Society Fraternal Order of Spiritualists for the season of 1907-08 was held Sunday, October 6. Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond was with us in the evening and will favor us with an address again on next Sunday evening, October 13. Other special features for that time will be soprano solos by Miss Gertrude McKinley, and Miss Bessie Johnson, both artists of note. A full account of our first service will be given next week. There are quite a number to be initiated next Sunday and we ask that all be present at 2 p. m. sharp. Hygeia Hall, 406 Ogden ave., corner Robey st., top floor.

Central Spiritual Church holds service every Sunday evening at Trimble Hall, 1977 West Madison street, near 40th Ave., commencing at 7 o'clock, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Howes.

Frank T. Ripley is now serving the Spiritual Temple Society at Cleveland, Ohio, for October and November. He can be engaged for lectures and messages within one hundred miles of Cleveland, on week evenings. Address all letters to Cleveland, O., General Delivery.

Dr. M. E. Lane, 218 Virginia st., Buffalo, N. Y., has moved to 723 Prospect ave.

S. A. Huntington writes of the Progressive Spiritualist Society of Mal-Mass.: "Mrs. A. M. Whall of Everett, Mass., was the speaker and message bearer on Sunday evening, September 29. She chose for her theme, "What Has Spiritualism Done for Us?" giving a very instructive address, after which she devoted 45 minutes to giving many fine messages. Mrs. B. W. Belcher of Marlboro, will be the speaker October 6, and Mrs. Annie R. Chapman of Brighton, the 13th. On September 30 we held our usual Sunday meeting and election of officers for the ensuing year, as follows: President, Mrs. F. S. Sheriff; first-vice-president, Mrs. M. J. Eaton; second vice-president, Mrs. F. M. Shipp; recording secretary, Mrs R. P. Morton; assistant recording secretary, Mrs. Bertha L. Parker; treasurer, Mr. F. S. Sheriff; assistant treasurer, Mrs. A. M. Carter; corresponding secretary, S. A. Huntington; assistant corresponding secretary, E. J. Patch.

Mrs. E. H. Thompson writes: "The Fraternal Daughters held their semi-monthly meeting at 406 Ogden ave., Wedneday, October 1st. The following mediums took part: Mrs. Dr. Caird, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Helyett, Mrs. Lichtig. At 6 p. m. supper was served, after which was held a short meeting. Our next meeting will be held on Wednesday, October 9, at Hygeia Hall, 406 Ogden ave. Come and bring your friend."

E. A. Dierkes writes: "The Church of Spiritual Revelation resumed its meeting Sunday, October 6, at Butler's Hall, 57th Court and State street. Lecture and spirit messages at every meeting by various mediums. I will try and conduct this meeting upon the highest standard, with good test mediums and lecturers. I will open the meeting every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock sharp. Conducted by Edward A. Dierkes."

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Illustrating What Spiritualism Has Done to Redeem the World.

"What has the world benefited by the promulgation of the Spiritual Philosophy?" is a question which not far in the past was often heard. At this time we occasionally hear it from religious bigots, but compared with former years, rarely. If such inquirers are sincerely desirous for information, they can easily obtain it by reading spiritual and liberal publications; yes, even by careful comparison of sermons heard weekly in orthodox churches and those given to the public before and for a considerable time subsequent to the so-called "Rochester Knockings." Anyone interested could not but perceive the gradual change in the character of sermons delivered by the majority of ministers of evangelical churches.

Little by little, HELL AND THE DEVIL were eliminated and were heard no more. They learn that hell is a product of their own making, and is within themselves.

The minds of their hearers who allowed themselves to investigate, became broadened and anxious for "more light." Many ministers of the gospel began to have glimpses of the future, saw the "handwriting on the wall," and heeded the warning. Those who still adhered to the old orthodox teachings found their congregations gradually diminishing in size until their sermons were given to nearly empty houses. Very rarely were heard preachers expounding the "eternal damnation" doctrine.

Not long ago I saw a statement in a paper that a certain divine in a conference of ministers urged that they must return to the former teachings from the pulpit; that if they wished to stop the decadence of the church they must preach "hellfire" for all it was worth, and again arouse the fears of their hearers who were fast losing their fear of death through Spiritualistic teachings and the glad tidings from friends who had crossed the divide.

A number of years ago a prominent lady of SanDiego, who was an active Spiritualist, was approached by a "Reverend" with the question, "What good has Spiritualism done?" She replied: "It has knocked the bottom out of your orthodox hell." She then turned and left him to digest her reply as best he could.

Spiritualism has loosened the creedal shackles that so long have held the world in bondage; even the powerful Roman Catholic church is feeling its influence, and at this time many Catholics claim the right to think for themselves.

To-day the whole civilized world shows the influence of Spiritualism in the broadmindedness of the reading public. Thousands now speak their minds freely who but a comparatively short time ago would have been ostracised from the society of religious people. Now preachers dare teach from the pulpit liberal thought, and those who do so invariably draw the largest congregations.

A few years ago I received a call from a minister of an orthodox church. Being called away for a short time, I excused myself, requesting him to amuse himself for a few moments until I returned. Upon my return I found him in my library looking at Spiritualism books. When I entered he smiled, saying: "I mean it; I would like to give a month to the perusal of these books."

That clergyman preaches liberal Christianity, although his denomination has always been classed as the most bigoted. He draws the largest congregation in the city where he is located. He called upon me about a month ago, and I was surprised at the liberal thought he expressed. The church of another city not long since "called him," offering a larger salary, but his church would not part with him.

When the question is asked you, "What good has Spiritualism done?" you can reply: It has taught the world that "man cannot save man;" that all must bear their own burdens; that you must suffer a penalty for every misdeed; that you will be rewarded for all acts for the benefit of others. It teaches to lend a helping hand to those in need; to lift our brothers and sisters from the mire of degradation and assist them to become useful members of society; that "as ye sow, so shall ye reap;" that you make your own heaven or hell. Tell the questioners to read and reflect, cast off the shackles of bigotry and think for themselves. Thousands are now seeking more light; go ye and do likewise.

Letter from Rev. G. C. Love.

To the Editor:—A call came to me to visit this pleasant, thriving city and hold a series of parlor meetings, and I responded to the call, and arrived here on last Sunday morning.

Since my arrival at Coshocton I have held meetings in a hall on Sunday afternoon and on Wednesday night, and on Sunday night a parlor meeting.

I will hold a meeting in the hall on Saturday night, next, and perhaps again on Sunday and Sunday night.

Yesterday I received a letter asking me to give Baker City, Ore., one Sunday on my homeward trip from the N. S. A. Convention, which I will do. This makes my ninth call to Baker City to lecture for the Spiritualists of that place.

I am expecting to go to Washington on Monday night to attend the Convention, and then go direct to Oregon. On leaving Baker City I am expecting to go to Cove, in Union County, and Walla Walla, in the State of Washington, if plans made on my way east are carried out. I may hold a few meetings in Union, Ore., after my visit to Cove. Here in Coshocton I am visiting with Capt. James H. McMillan and his daughter, Mrs. Dr. Stacy, whom I have known for many years in Oregon, prior to their coming to Coshocton to live.

Dr. Stacy is one of the leading physicians of Coshocton, with a large practice. The Doctor and his good wife, and Capt. McMillan, are making my stay here with them a very pleasant one indeed. One of the daily papers of Coshocton was represented by a reporter in last night's meeting, and in making notes of my lecture highly complimented me as a lecturer.

My next address will be Washington, D. C., 600 Pen Ave., S.-E.

A BREEZY LETTER.

It Comes From Los Angeles, Cal., and Presents Refreshing Thought.

To the Editor:—Some time ago Prof. Hyslop came to our city, and as a Spiritualist, he gave his views on the subject. He left an impression on a class of people who could in no other way be reached. He came as the papers announced at "the request of the orthodox ministers," and what they had expected of him we are not able to decipher, but what they got we are certain. So to the ministers of Los Angeles belongs the credit of the visit of the above named logical gentleman, and we are glad he came.

Just previous to the visit, one of the ministers who claims the credit for the appearance of Prof. Hyslop, spent one hour of his good and valuable time in ranting, howling and condemning Spiritualists, and it is said of his congregation that a large majority—the same who allow others to do their thinking for them wept for joy on the dear divine's shoulder and soiled the skirt of his coat, they were so proud of him and his manly effort, but when Prof. Hyslop came, and the same man signed the call, these same weeping willows were so eager to hear of the phenomena of spirit return and to tell the Professor of their experiences "once upon a time," that they came early and stayed late, and so filled the church of Rev. B. Fay Mills and the hall where the lectures were delivered, that the rostrum was occupied; all aisles were packed, and with the mercury up to about 100, listened to the words of cheer and comfort, and went home filled with new inspiration. So I say, "All Hail to the Professor!" His coming was good, and although he interested a number of people in the search for truth who would not be able to know it when they see it, that was not his fault. It could not be helped.

Then, too, he spoke for the Church Convention and assisted the divines to ease down a little.

We need other men as brainy and logical as Professor Hyslop, and may he continue in his good work.

In my investigations of Spiritualism I have found that quite a large number of "gentlemen" of the cloth who rant and howl about spirit return and denounce it to the gratification of the hysterical as a fraud and fake, are quietly going to the homes and parlors of mediums for a reading, and when they get something from a departed friend sit and cry like spanked babies. It makes me think of a good shepherd dog which I once knew. This dog was a good dog, and played with children, tended the sheep while his master was looking on, and in every respect was an innocent, well behaved dog; but the owner's neighbors learned that the sly old dog was making nocturnal visits to their corrals, and helping himself to the fattest of lambs. The moral is, he liked his own flock well enough to guard them by day as his business, but when he wanted something to satisfy his inner self, he chose to go under cover to something better.

Will these same men continue to visit mediums and go before the little flock which supports them, and tell them it is a fake and delusion? or will they sometime have the moral courage to stand up and tell the truth as they see it? Will theology and creed forever bind down and make stool pigeons of them?

The Pope of Rome admits spirit return, I understand, but he shifts the responsibility to the shoulders of evil spirits. Some of the ministers would be glad to admit even so much, if they dared to do so, but they have been trained to one thing—creed and creed has been their profession, and they are not able to get out into the world and battle with those who have been trained in self-reliance. They have depended on their God until the muscles have become flabby, and now they are not capable of coping with the seen forces of man.

I have no quarrel with any man who teaches what he believes, but for those who believe one thing and teach another, even to the extent of condemning that which they believe in fact, I have no sympathy. When we believe one thing and teach the contrary we become base deceivers, frauds and fakes of the worst kind.

The ministers who consult mediums for gain, and believe in the communications, are on a par with the class of fake mediums, and are a stench in the nostrils of humanity.

Again, there are a number of ministers who condemn spirit return, etc., who are honest in their convictions, and only one in ten thousand has made any investigation whatever to ascertain the truth of it. One minister told me it was a delusion, and after some delay about that which he had seen, he finally admitted that all he had seen was in a public hall where some person was holding an entertainment, and said it was legerdemain. The same gentleman during the conversation admitted that he had no faith in the Old Testament, but gave no reasons. It was a subject over which he was sensitive.

It is true that there a large number of persons who are following the trail of Spiritualism, calling themselves mediums, and who are only CARRIONS, BROUGHT UP IN THE CHURCH, seeking to make easy living off the "easy" victims. They come from the teaching that God is the only one to deal with in the end, and for that reason they can deal with fellowmen as they see fit.

There are but few of those fakes and vultures in the ranks of Spiritualism, but the Orthodox teachers are ever reminding us of all of that ilk, and, too, they are unable to distinguish between a searcher for the truth and a miserable fraud. They cannot say too harsh words about fake mediums to suit me, but they should be careful and not include everybody as fakes.

Let us turn the tables for a moment and cast our eyes to the records of the divines. There is scarcely a day in which we do not read of some eminent minister going wrong; they are accused, and in many courts convicted of all crimes known in the bible and in the penal codes of man. Professionally they are accused of robbing more homes of its virtue than any other profession known.

But a short time ago one minister by his eloquence converted an auditor, and when she felt that she was saved, she as the boy says, "peached" on the divine for leading her astray. If it had not been for the minister, perhaps it would not have been necessary for the woman to seek church salvation.

In this city, during the past year, there have been a number of preachers gone astray. Some have deserted their wives and families; others have been in the police court, and it would not do to tell all. What of it? I ask. Nothing! only I suggest that the gentlemen who condemn Spiritualists because some fraud creeps in, not to condemn all, any more than it would be just for us to condemn all ministers, for the wrongs of some of their members and followers.

There was a time when the church people shouldered all the blame and responsibility of "free love" and "affinity" onto our teachings. That was wrong, as Spiritualism never taught such a thing, but perhaps a few did practice it. I do not know, however; If it was practiced by any of our members, it was a habit which was soon wiped out. Just now the followers of the orthodoxy are taking it up as a popular fad, and no less than a dozen instances have been brought to the minds of the people by the daily papers within the past week. If any Spiritualists ever did practice free love, he or she has only one consolation, and that is, that after many years of quietness in a grave dug by Spiritualism, it has broken out like spotted fever in the army of the church followers, and it will be necessary for us to aid them in suppressing it, as we are helping them to suppress many other evils.

Spiritualism never has taught, and does not now teach, anything other than right living and self-reliance, and if we follow those precepts we will live right.

We have no devil to blame, and no mediator in heaven to carry our burdens. We must shoulder our own responsibility, and bear our own misdoings. We are taught that not only one person may see our doings, but that we have friends on the other side who are watching us every minute, and as we unfold and take in the truth, we are better for it. If we follow out our own dictates and the teachings of our spirit friends, we shall have no need of prisons; there will be no need of chaplains in penitentiaries to administer unto us or the unfortunates. There will be no need of salvation and the unnecessary shedding of blood to atone for our wrongs.

In this city we have one newspaper which has some bitter things to say about mediums, but every Sunday and during the week it has large advertisements of the wonders of certain mediums, so-called, and all those who have proved to be frauds, have helped to pay the dividends on the stock of this same paper by alluring advertisements.

There are mediums in this city who give public readings, and who are good and honest, and there are many mediums here who give no private or public readings for money, but who are investigators and give their time for truth's sake. Mrs. Rose L. B. DonnElly, Mrs. Green, Mrs. Weston, Mrs. Briggs, Dr. Green, Mrs Sanford Johnson, Mr. and Mrs Howe, Mrs. Vlasek, Nettie Howell, Mrs. Kratz, and others doing good and effectual work, and I for one am glad to see the good work go on.

HOME.

As Illustrated by Bertha M. Richter.

No matter if it's in a flat,
Quite small and crowded, too,
There's no place in this world so sweet
As Home, Sweet Home, to you.

In castle grand, with riches rare;
In cottage by the sea;
In hovel poor, no matter where,
It's Home, Sweet Home, to me.

It's Home, Sweet Home, to you or me,
In our Heavenly Home above,
Where pain or sorrow enters not,
To sadden trust and love.

That Home we'll go to by and by,
As soon as God may call,
And there we'll find sweet peace and rest,
The Home, Sweet Home, for all.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About 7 words constitute a line.]

Passed to spirit life in San Jose, Cal., September 21, 1907, Philip S. Weeks, only son of Mrs. Lucy Weeks. Spiritualist services were held, Mrs. Nettie P. Fox officiating. The remains were cremated. H. L. B.

The funeral of little Ernest Marchant McFadden, aged 11 months, who passed from the earth life Monday, September 23, was conducted at the home of his grandparents, Judge and Mrs. Ella Marchant, on Seventh St., San Bernardino, Cal., Tuesday, September 24, at 3 p. m. The services were in charge of Mrs. Lily M. Thiebaud, who took for her text, "In My Father's House Are Many Mansions," and "Suffer little children to come unto Me, for of Such is the Kingdom of Heaven." This little one was the son of T. M. and Alice E. McFadden, whose many friends extend to them deep sympathy in their natural sorrow over this separation.

Passed to spirit life, September 22, in Chicago, Mr. Robert E. Smith, aged 34 years, son of Mr. Wm Smith of Clinton, Iowa. The body was brought to the home of his birth, No. 233 First Avenue, Clinton, where transition services were held in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends, many of whom followed the remains to the beautiful Springdale Cemetery, where the casket with its drapery of fragrant flowers was given back to the enfolding arms of mother nature. Alice C. Barry, pastor of The Clinton Spiritualists' Society officiated. A. C. B.

Henry C. Eberthauser, a prominent Spiritualist of Sandusky, Ohio, left the earthly form on Tuesday, September, 24. He was for many years a regular attendant at Lake Brady camp, and was known to thousands who frequented that charming spot. The funeral was held September 27, Rev. Thiersch, a personal friend, conducting the service. Beautiful floral emblems showed the esteem in which he was regarded by the community. He leaves a widow, a medium, who has brought the truth of spirit communion to a host of friends.

STARTLING FACTS, OR Deeds of Darkness Disclosed

This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME.

A Remarkable Book.

This is a remarkable work by FATHER CHINIQUY. It exposes even to the minutest details the corruption that exists in the Church of Rome. It is a work of 832 pages, and should be read as a matter of history by every Spiritualist.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Religious Student.—Q. What was the origin and date of the Christian Israelites?

A.—This sect was founded in the latter part of the seventeenth century. Its high priestess was Johanna Southcote, an English peasant, born in 1749, and in youth engaged in domestic service. She was not as illiterate as Ann Lee, founder of Shakerism, for she could read and write, and in 1801 published a book containing a narrative of her life and other writings, principally doggerel verse, which she claimed was "inspired by the same spirit that inspired the Bible." She was forty-three years old when her first visions came, and she began to prophesy. Gradually she became possessed with the idea that she was "Jesus Christ in woman's form," but this she abandoned when "Jesus appeared to her and told her she was his chosen bride," and became the father to the child, virgin born, to which she was to give birth.

It is a singular fact, although no more singular and unaccountable than what the present time presents, that the crude and verbose writings of this woman attracted attention of cultured men and clergymen, and that she gained a respectable following.

At a meeting of her disciples, held in London, twenty-four men were chosen to decide on her writings and their verdict was that they "were of divine origin," and then began the promotion of societies under the name of Christian, or True, Israelites.

Great expectations were raised in the minds of her followers for the man-child which was to be the sign and seal of her mediumship. The great event was postponed from time to time, but in 1814 she died, and post mortem examination showed that what had been mistaken for a coming god was dropsy. The societies nearly went to fragments under this staggering blow, but a leader arose, one George Turner, and silenced the dissension by proving himself the true "Messenger of God," and his prophet, and by visions wherein he saw "Johanna and her son in glory." He proclaimed that the son, Shilo, would come in person. The day appointed came, but not the son, yet the deluded followers continued to believe, and other leaders came to carry on the fraud.

Some writers on Spiritualism have introduced Johanna as a medium, like Ann Lee, Mrs. Eddy, and others. It strikes me that anyone who reads her writings and the blatant prophecies attributed to her can not otherwise than regard her as an ignorant, vain and conceited pretender. There is nothing in her thoughts or language above the low sphere in which she was born and reared.

If we admit that she was under control of spiritual beings, they must have been of the same grade as herself, and enjoyed the credulous devotion of the dupes. Astonishing manipulation of the weakness of human nature, but what will not mankind believe if in the garb of religion? What will it not do at its command and in its name?

Harvey Brown.—Q. Does Spiritualism teach that as soon as the spirit is disembodied it sees and remembers clearly all past thoughts, words and actions, and that spirits see clearly the thoughts, motives and actions of others from the beginning of their lives?

A.—It does not. Memory may be more active than in this life; it may be lethargized. For spiritual beings to read each other's thoughts, they must be on the same plane—attuned alike, or in harmony. This law once and for all puts an impenetrable wall around every spirit, which can only be broken through when there is mutual co-operation, otherwise the future life would be one to awaken terror for its unknown tortures. It has been accepted as proven by psychologists that memory holds latent, if not active, every thought and action of the past life, but a very small part are vividly recalled. It thus may happen that at some future time, when the right conditions call them out, the memory of every forgotten event will awaken. But this will not be at once. It does not occur at death. The old saying that "a dead man knows more than all the living" is an erroneous statement, like the most of current sayings. Some things the dead know which are unknown to mortals, but as a whole their knowledge is of the same kind, and often is even more limited. As illustration, take one from any trade or art to which they have exclusively devoted themselves. When they depart they awake to find they have no use for the pursuits which gained them sustenance and honor here, and in everything else they are as children.

Joseph Challand.—Q. I have heard it remarked several times that the Japanese, as a people, are such liars that the merchants of New York will not ship them goods without a guaranty accompanies the order. Are they not as truthful and as reliable in such matters as other nationalities?

A.—The Japanese are not Christians, and therefore the attempt is made by the abettors of the missionaries to show they are immoral and in great need of conversion. To do this, misrepresentation is resorted to, and it is a forgiven sin to lie about the heathen. There have not been as many crimes committed in Japan since the founding of its empire, as many robberies and murders, as occur in this country in a single year. Crimes of personal violence are almost unknown.

The statement in regard to their business honesty is one of those assertive libels most difficult to meet—difficult because of its falsity.

It is possible there may be dishonest merchants, but they are less in number proportionately than in this country, as the ratio of criminals is astonishingly less.

After all the missionary labor, and the constant assertion that there can be no true morality or correct living aside from Christianity, to find a nation entirely outside of its pales, who from remotest times have never been subject to its influence; who have a religion distinctively their own, yet with a standard of moral excellence at least equal to that held forth by Christians, is humiliating and destructive to all foreign missions.

J. R. S.—Q. M. was a gentleman whom I would have married had he lived. During his illness, which lasted a week, and of which I was totally ignorant, I had frightful dreams of hanging over an abyss or clinging to precipices. I at times thought I was dying. One day M.'s brother came and said he had died the night before of smallpox. He had been taken to Brother's Island and died without relatives or friends near him. The night before his death my dreams assumed more horrible form. I was awakened by a choking sensation—a feeling as though my breath had left me, and I thought I was dying. How can this be explained?

A.—Volumes might be easily filled with a record of dreams similar to this, and their explanation is by the telepathic influence of mind over mind. It is not a mystery how the receiving instrument of the wireless telegraph responds to the influence sent out by the transmitter. By exactly the same process and law, a receptive mind receives vibrations from another. The one condition essential is that it be in a receptive condition. Applying to this instance, the attachment of the lady would predispose her to the receptive state, and the patient, alone, and suffering, would think intently of her. Yet in his condition his thoughts would go out, not clearly, but carrying impressions of pain, gloom and disaster, which would be reflected on her mind, impressing the sensations of death.

The question may be asked, why are such manifestations confined to dreams? They are not exclusively, but in such instances the recipients are more impressible in the border-land of sleep than when fully awake. They do not reach true sleep, but an intermediate state, where their spiritual faculties partially escape the influence of the physical body.

GROWING OLD.

they tell me that my hair grows gray;
That wrinkles burrow in my cheek;
My eyes are dimming day by day;
My voice is broken as I speak;

That I no longer stand erect;
My step has lost its springing tread;
That those my childhood did respect
Have passed unto the silent dead.

If this frail house of clay were I,
I would admit their words were true;
But no! I hear my soul reply,
And answer bravely back to you:

"This tenement has much endured—
Its windows stained, its walls askew,
But when my harvests are secured
I shall remove to one anew.

"Not I, the one of whom ye speak
'Tis only that which I possess,
I am not feeble, old or weak,
Nor time may wrinkle or repress;

"My childhood friends whom ye call dead,
Have merely wrought their work and gone;
Moved into mansions on ahead
Where youth's immortal day-springs dawn.

"And I approach so near the line
That I can hear their silent tread;
Their voices answer back to mine
Assuring me they are not dead.

"Ah, no! friends, I am young and strong,
Tho' bound by time's dull cordage here;
When Death shall break the weakened thong
Then youth and liberty shall cheer.

"Ah, Death! thou rider, pale and cold,
I do not fear thy gentle touch,
Thou only canst the bars unfold
Which hinder now my progress much.

"HOW SHALL I BECOME A MEDIUM?"

It is fully answered in "Mediumship, and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio

Missionary Effort On Osmon Island

Starting a New Religion, and What Came of It. By Hudson Tuttle.

I shall never forget that Sunday morning. We thought it was Sunday, for we had lost our reckoning, having neither calendar nor almanac; it really was Friday. In no part of the world is the sky as blue, the sea as green, the shore as dreamy. The tide was at full and the water smooth as an inland lake. Coswell marched from the church followed by the entire populace down the pathway to the white strand. Pausing, he offered prayer, then walked into the water, the two chiefs following, disputing for precedence.

He quickly decided by seizing one with his left and the other with his right hand and plunging them into the water. When they reached the shore he beckoned, and one by one he immersed the throng, with more or less haste, repeating "In the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost."

Weary as he must have been, after such excessive exertion, he wrote in his diary regarding his work, stating that over six hundred souls had that day received the rites of baptism and been emancipated from sin. Had it been possible for him to have sent report of his work to the religious press at home, it would have been read by pastors when the boys went around for pennies for the missionary cause, greatly to the increase of the contribution.

Every convert believed he or she was made an especial ward of the titular God, and of the trinity knew nothing and cared less. Religion teaches humanity; with the converts it fanned their arrogance. The meetings were always crowded, for there was nothing to do in that favored isle. It was an endless play-day. They sang religious hymns as they did war songs, and no doubt felt the influence, the delight, in some scant measure, of awakening thought. The religion, however, they accepted, was not Christianity. It was a blend of their own and Christianity; and had they been allowed to explain their views, would have been an astonishing system. I hold that we had founded a new religion, which, if it had been planted in a wider field and properly protected, might have blossomed into world-wide acceptance. The foundation had been laid. By what to the natives was superhuman—hence divine—power we had established our claims. Every religion rests its evidences on miracles, as we rested ours. It had demonstrated its adaptability by gathering in the entire populace.

Bimbumbo had advised the delay of the expedition for a year. If they were going, they should have followed at once, he had told them. The advice seemed good to them. Coswell mingled with the people, was one of them, and had their confidence. He settled their petty disputes, chided them if cruel, and had their love—as far as that sentiment holds with such people.

With the coming up of occasions he might have introduced "Thus saith Bimbumbo" until a set of laws had been given, usages and customs established, and imparting his secrets to his son or successor, an order of self-elected priests been established, to aid the rulers and hold the people in spiritual, as well as physical, bondage.

What had been done in six months! What could be done in a lifetime—in a hundred years! A sprinkle of wisdom and common sense would preserve the conditions of growth, and the historian a thousand years hence would record the story of their unknown wise men claiming divine mission, landing on the island and founding a new religion.

Such were my reflections one sunset, as I watched the red orb plunge slowly beneath the horizon's edge, and thought of the morning rays just awakening my old home. As for physical enjoyment, this was Eden, yet this is only the beginning, the first coarse husk of the inner spiritual kernel. The old, hard life was preferable to this idleness, the cold, northern clime to the softness of the isle. I knew well the danger of an attempt to escape unless successful, yet felt the time would come when I would be driven by necessity.

As I said, the government had rapidly consolidated, and there was every promise of continuance and stability. It required tact, common sense, and a rather shrewd knowledge of savage character: what they would bear with and what object to.

In these qualities Rev. Coswell was wofully deficient. He had been taught in a theological school, and not in practical life. He knew more about creeds and commentaries than savage mentality. He did not know when he had pressed to the limit, and was not content unless he had full toll, and the grist into the bargain.

Had the Rev. Coswell only stopped with baptism! Had he only had the ordinary common sense to have known when he held trumps and played the game! He did not. The opportunity was too alluring to be resisted.

From the beginning of his labors among the islanders he had objected to the fashion of their clothing. His modesty was shocked by the wisp of grass girdle or palm leaf apron. As there was no cloth, except that laboriously woven from grass fiber into narrow belts, there appeared no way out of the difficulty. There was no need of garments for protection. There was more comfort without them, and he found his own a burden and a weariness, yet it was ground into the tissue of his mind that somehow, because of the fall of Adam and Eve, everybody should have on European clothing. If Adam had worn a dress coat and stovepipe hat, he was fully persuaded, the temptation would have been rejected, and Eve, had she worn a long skirt and high-neck dress, would have remained in the Garden of Eden, tending the fig trees she afterward stripped of their leaves for an apron. To his perverted eyes there was something essentially vulgar in the human form, and he would put a Mother Hubbard on the exquisitely-moulded Venus Medici, and a frock coat on Apollo.

He was constantly bringing the subject up, and I as constantly endeavoring to make him see that a custom so consonant with the climate could not be changed. However he might regard it, the natives thought nothing of it, and it would be pervertive of other thoughts to make them clothe themselves, on account of modesty—a feeling they knew nothing about. He was obdurate and threatened to appeal to Bimbumbo.

"It will be our ruin if you do," I hotly exclaimed—"our ruin and yours. You must never make the god run against racial traits or traditions. A god is supposed, even by the most credulous, to have common sense. You can't make a people take a god not one of them."

The Captain beseeched more than reasoned, yet all we said was unavailing. Bimbumbo talked to a full assembly:

"Thus saith the great Lord: I have borne with you long, but now, your women must wear cloth, and your men gather the rush and fiber of the cocoa and weave cloth to cover you. You must make a skirt for your loins, ye men, and ye women a waist as well. Only two weeks I give you, and every one not thus clothed I will smite as I smote the foe of the northern isle."

Now you may be sure that the week following was a busy one. All the women knew how to weave. It was by hand, a sort of plaiting. They knew nothing of the loom. They were not accustomed to continuous toil, and rebelled against it like children.

The chiefs were first to don their new attire. At first they put on airs, and plumed themselves. As the coarse fiber chafed and the heat increased they became disgusted and threw them off. Then they met Coswell.

"Where are your clothes," he asked sternly.

"We can't wear them—too hot—too bad feeling."

"You are not to rebel against Bimbumbo, are you?"

"Bimbumbo is our father, and hence is like us, and I know he would not wear this grass cloth when he felt better without it. He'd never command us to do so. If he has, he's been lied to—you have lied to him. I go to him. I tell him that with such clothing living is not a pleasure, but a torment."

The rebellious spirit was rife, and the chief of the village on the opposite side of the island, who had been a medicine man, or priest, and as such a leader until Coswell came, fomented the discontent.

"What misery is ours, with these hot garments," was the moan, and then followed: "If we are to keep ourselves clad in this manner it will be work from morning till night."

"Don't do it," whispered the discontented chief. "Return to the old Bimbumbo, and shame this mockery.

And thus it happened that on the fatal day when all were to come in the new attire, not half the assembly had on more than a waist-band, and some had none.

Coswell was fairly or unfairly caught. The terrible threat of Bimbumbo could not be executed, and if it was not, deception and weakness was confessed. He had prepared for this denouement by an excuse given by the "phono." It began to speak, and was received with derisive shouts and mockery.

The rebellious Medicine Chief addressed the people: "If Bimbumbo talked to us, would he not speak our language correctly?" The wily savage waited for this question to be well thought over, then went on: "Did this Bimbumbo? He made mistakes; he made the mistakes the missionary does in talking to us. They are funny mistakes for a man; we have laughed at them. What do you think of Bimbumbo making them? He is the missionary's god, not ours."

Fatal brogue! Coswell had not as complete a knowledge of the language as he thought he had. In the liquid glide of vowel sounds his harsh consonants grated harshly, and the natives, when their attention was called to it, saw through the trick. Their god must speak their tongue correctly, for he had given it to them.

I had in mind this very thing when I so closely questioned the missionary as to his ability to speak the language. He could make himself understood, but he spoke in an ungodly brogue, which revealed the donkey set up for Bimbumbo.

Riotous madness raged around the Chief. He went to the horn and shouted defiance into it. As he remained unscathed, others came and struck the instrument. It was knocked from the pedestal. With this, rage seized on the assembly—a sort of insanity and cruel lust for blood. Someone threw embers from a fire in the open court against the grass thatches of the temple, and like a flash it was in flames. In scarce the time of telling, only ashes remained—ashes and the post on which the "phono," now ashes, rested. It was hailed as an omen. "See! see!" cried the rebels, "the fire burns the false Bimbumbo. His sacred emblem remains unscathed!"

Then, as though seized with one thought, they cried: "Seize the messengers; we will make sacrifice of these traitors." The Captain and I had slowly withdrawn from the crowd, and seeing the surging, angry tide rise higher and higher, in the confusion accompanying the fire had ran to our boat and pushed from the shore, taking time to throw in a few cocoanuts from another near by. Scarcely had this been done than we saw Coswell running toward us, pursued by a swarm of natives. He had no chance at all, and was pinioned and dragged back.

At that moment we became objects of attention, and they swarmed down to their boats. Had we had only our oars to depend on we would have been easily captured. They could send their light canoes with the paddles with flying speed. The wind blew strong off shore, and we ran up the big sail, which no sooner felt the strain than our boat seemed to jump from the water. None too soon, for they were already alongside. Luckily for us, they had for once, in their haste, left their spears. The Captain could not repress his delight, which he expressed in a word they could appreciate:

"Wah! Good riddance, ye pirates!"

We were safe, but poor Coswell was beyond our aid. To have returned for him would have been to share his fate. That fate required no prophet to foresee. He would be sacrificed to the old Bimbumbo he had mocked. The Missionary Board would never receive his florid report, and his translation of Matthew met the fate of his palm-roofed cabin. His congregation of six hundred Christians might petition for another good missionary as tender as the missing one.

Thus perished one of the most promising attempts to found a new religion; perished, not for want of material, but want of tact in uniting credulity and deception in proper proportions, and by pressing measures in too radical conflict with traditions, which must be allowed to be outgrown, and cannot be obliterated by fiat of man or the gods.

The story I set out to relate has been told. The reader may be interested to know how we managed to save ourselves from the perilous position of an open boat, unprovisioned, in an unknown sea. Briefly, for two days the cocoanuts sustained us. For the next two we were hungry and athirst. The wind blew steadily and we made good speed, and at the sunset of that final fourth day, saw a ship's sail rise on the western horizon, and before the dusk, hailed, as by miraculous fortune, a free sailer like our own good vessel and found ourselves safe on board.

As I said in the beginning, I have had my experience; others may go converting the heathen; it is of no interest to me.

THE END.

WEATHER PROPHECIES.

Are Not All Prophecies, Whether Made in Spiritualism or Out of It, Founded on Law, Like that of the Weather?

The why of the weather is on the verge of a great advance; first through the possibility of a general daily survey of pressure the world over, which will enable meteorologists to make a chart covering the whole of the northern hemisphere; and, second, through a clearer understanding of the relation of variations in the sun's radiation to change from season to season in the weather and climate. The weather in the northern hemisphere runs eternally from west to each in a great swirl around the poles. Once there is a chart covering all the pressure centers of the northern hemisphere, the weather to the eastward of any given condition can be predicted accurately for several days, and, on special occasions, for relatively long periods. If the weather man knew more precisely just what sort of barometric pressures were making weather in Siberia, China, the mid-Pacific, and Alaska, in connection with India and eastern Europe, they could provide a far more exact weather prophecy than now for the United States, since the movement eastward of the weather over the United States is determined by these antecedent conditions lying west of the Pacific coast. The subsequent pathway across the United States, and later toward western Europe, is due to a further interaction with the Atlantic conditions; and the Atlantic weather again is a result of the interaction of conditions farther eastward; so that until the whole zone is understood with one comprehensive chart the weather man is much handicapped. The hot summer in the United States is due to an increase of pressures in the sub-tropics. A summer of this type means a strong, persistent circulation of air from the south with the interiors baked under excessive sunshine and hot sirocco winds which have been known to blast vegetation in twelve hours. These variations depend on the changes in Old Sol himself. So Old Sol himself is being studied by Prof. F. H. Bigelow of the United States weather bureau.

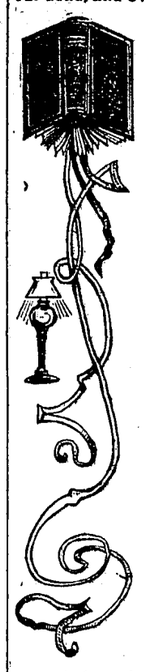
What Constitutes Religion?

The Medford, Okla., Patriot, gives this sensible view of the matter:



"It is not that men are less religious that they do not attend Sunday services and observe the Sabbath with sanctified airs. Many men are religious 365 days in the year who scarcely ever attend church, while others are religious only one day in a week. Religion does not consist alone in attending church and posing with a sanctified countenance one day in seven. 'Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.' The world needs more who are religious seven days in the week, those who spread out their religion seven days instead of reserving it all for one day in seven."

LIFE and REMINISCENCES OF Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

By Edward C. Smith.

"The Record of a generous life runs like a vine around the memory of our dead, and every sweet unselfish act is now a perfumed flower."

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL was a great and brilliant man, he was the greatest genius of his age. His place is beside Shakespeare, Voltaire, Goethe and Shelley. He was a great Lawyer, Politician, Reformer, Orator, Critic and Philosopher. His wonderful gift of language touched with the spirit and charm of poetry aided by his powerful gift of wit and humor, made him the most formidable foe the church has ever had.

He was great because he was honest. He shook the world with his eloquence and reasoning. His arguments were never answered. As a Lawyer his arguments were always so convincing that he won his case.

He knew many things by learning and more by intuition.

He was an intellectual Giant, and it is very probable that the wonderful combinations he possessed, the world will never see again.

The author who was a close friend and great admirer of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, was assisted by near relatives who collected a great amount of valuable data, and in no other way could this information be obtained. The writing of the "Life and Reminiscences" was purely a labor of love; and it is useless to say has been written in the fairest and kindest spirit, every detail having been carefully recorded. Much of this data was collected and revised before the Colonel's death, and great care was taken in only recording after careful research.

This valuable edition has been aptly illustrated with many beautiful half-tone illustrations of the Colonel in different periods of his life. Also portraits of his sisters and brothers, family, father and mother, together with a genealogical chart, also many valuable reminiscences. The work is well written, handsomely bound, and beautifully printed. All admirers of the Colonel will welcome its publication.

THE NATURE CURE

BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS, ILLUSTRATED.

A Bridge from the Old to the New; the Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. A Clear, Short-Cut Treatise on the Cause and Cure of Disease.

By MARVIN E. CONGER, M. D.
Assisted by ROSA C. CONGER, M. D.

The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of THE NATURE CURE.

The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as in NATURE CURE.

Our Definition of Medicine.—Any method or remedy that will remove, alleviate or modify pain and restore the sick to normal condition, is practical medicine.

Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. NATURE CURE will lead the way to certain success.

The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

The book contains 375 pages, and is finely illustrated; the mechanical and artistic work are the very best. Bound in fine English cloth, marble edges, $2.00; common cloth $1.50.

Nature Cure teaches how to heal by simple home remedies.

It teaches how Nature cures.

It does not use poisonous drugs.

It does not endorse dangerous experiments with the surgeon's knife.

It will save money in every home.

It is entirely free from technical rubbish.

It teaches how typhoid and other fevers may be cured at once.

It teaches how pneumonia, la-grippe, diphtheria and other forms of disease considered dangerous, may be cured in twenty-four hours.

It is, as a medical book for homes, THE BEST, and is up-to-date in every particular.

There is no similar book, no medical, hygienic or reformatory doctor book that compares with THE NATURE CURE.

"THE LANGUAGE OF THE STARS."

A Primary Course of Lessons in Celestial Dynamics.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LIGHT OF EGYPT."

This important primary work is the first practical exposition of the Astro-Magnetic forces of Nature—in their relation to man—that has yet been issued by the American press. It contains fourteen special lessons, embracing each department of human life, in such plain, simple language that a child can understand the elementary principles laid down. And in addition to these lessons is an Appendix, containing a full explanation of all technical and scientific terms in general use upon the subject, thus forming a brief, yet practical Astro Dictionary. This work is illustrated with special plates.

For Sale at This Office. Price, Fifty Cents.

"Longley's Beautiful Songs." A new edition comprising in one volume the four parts heretofore published, to which is added part five, also a number of the author's most popular songs, including "Only a Thin Veil Between Us," and its "Companion Piece." Cloth, 75 cents. Boards, 50 cents.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail." By Chas. B. Newcomb. Excellent in spiritual suggestiveness. Cloth $1.50.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." Demonstrates the continuity of life and our environment of spiritual influences. Free from all theories of superstition. By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 25 cents.

SPIRITUALISM AND MODERN THOUGHT.

of Cambridge, conducted their experiments in telepathy, they demonstrated that one mind can act on another directly through thought-vibration.

Thus we see that whenever the teachings of Spiritualism come in contact with modern physics there is a complete congruity between them, and in fact what comes very nearly at times approaching an explanation. The line of demarkation between the material and spiritual is not always distinct. With intelligent study all the uncanniness and weirdness of Spiritualistic phenomena disappears. Spirit manifestations are seen to differ from ordinary vision just as ordinary vision differs from sound.

In the phenomena of mediumship there is nothing unnatural, nothing supernatural, nothing extra-natural. Mediumship merely opens up a new province of nature, that is all. Out of the multifarious orders of being, of which mankind kens only the scantiest rudiments, another region has been won over to the domain of knowledge. All things in the universe are equally natural and under the reign of immutable, inexorable law.

In closing I wish to pause a moment to touch upon the SCIENTIFIC METHOD.

It is not enough in these days that a theory or doctrine itself must harmonize with modern thought, but the method by which such theory or doctrine is arrived at or built up must likewise be sound. It is now thoroughly established that what is known as the scientific or inductive method, in contradistinction to the theological or deductive method, is the only means by which real knowledge is gained.

All through the centuries down to the rise of modern science, any proposition in philosophy was considered sound, if it could be deduced from certain ancient dicta which had become hallowed by tradition. Very few ever thought of questioning whether the dicta themselves were in accordance with actual facts or not. For instance, the size and shape of the earth, the number of planets, and other purely physical facts were determined not from a study of actual phenomena, but by quoting scriptural texts and the authority of the Fathers. And, too, the whole body of Christian theology was built up through the process of deduction from the Athanasian trinity, and when Arius and his followers called this dictum in question they were at once listed as arch-heretics. The neglect of the objective and the slavish following of the subjective method had its culmination in the vagaries of German Hegelianism, which virtually declares that anything conceivable is actually real. The subjective method still has its place in philosophy, but only after every step in the process has been rigidly tested by the objective method.

The only method of knowledge which is now recognized as independently valid is the scientific method. This method is:

First, phenomena are observed.

Second, a provisional theory or explanation arises in the mind.

Third, with this provisional theory as a working hypothesis an extended examination of all phenomena of a similar nature must be made, and if after years of study the theory explains all, or nearly all, the phenomena in question, it is regarded as scientific explanation and is called "law."

I have said "nearly all" facts must be explained: Any facts not explained must be neutral as respects the theory. One single well-defined fact which militates against a theory destroys that theory.

If two or more theories arise in the mind which equally well explain the facts, that principle of logic which Sir William Hamilton called the law of parsimony compels us to adopt the one which is less strained, the most natural—that is, the one most in accordance with what we know of Nature in general.

To illustrate: When Darwin was in the Galapagos Islands the differences between the species and varieties on either side of deep or shallow channels was such as suggested to him a community of descent. Armed with this provisional hypothesis he spent a lifetime of study on the fauna and flora of the globe, and every new province of biology yielded up a multitude of confirmatory facts. To-day the law of natural selection is as firmly established as the law of gravitation. But if, as St. George Mivart thought, the eye of an octopus had really been the eye of a true fish, and accordingly not descendable from a totally different structure, this one little fact would have demolished descent with modification through natural selection. A considerable body of neutral facts have no effect on this theory, because future study may reveal that they are explicable on that or some other principle in harmony with it.

Again, as between natural selection and creative design, the law of parsimony compels us to adopt the one involving those forces near at hand, and which are known to be in operation, rather than appeal to a more remote cause.

That the scientific method is the method of the intelligent Spiritualist needs scarcely to be pointed out. First, in the seclusion of our own homes, by our own firesides, the mother, son, or daughter, is controlled by an intelligence not his or her own.

Second, the manifestations are of such a nature that the conclusion is forced upon our minds that we are somehow in communication with the personalities of deceased friends.

Third, with years of study and experimenting with many mediums, multitudes of similar, as well as new and varied, phenomena are explicable by our hypothesis, and the theory of spirit communication becomes firmly established on experiential and experimental facts.

The only way in which the spirit theory can be overthrown is by the discovery of militant facts, or by the establishment of a more natural theory, broad enough to explain the varied phases of mediumship.

In this age of agnosticism, when the creeds and dogmas of the older religious sects are crumbling and withering in the crucible of scientific criticism, it ought to be a source of gratification to us that our religious philosophy is in harmony both with the ultimate laws of organic life and the ultimate laws if inorganic matter. It can be said without hesitation that Spiritualism alone offers the world the only evidential basis for a belief in personal immortality.

MASTERSHIP IS THE RIGHT WAY.

THE GREAT WORK is Vol. III., of the "Harmonic Series." It makes clear the Way of Mastership. This is the Way that leads to Individual Liberty here and hereafter.

Every intelligent man and woman who is seeking for Spiritual Truth should read THE GREAT WORK. Why? Because:

1. It teaches the Constructive Process of Spiritual Development whereby we may communicate with our spirit friends without becoming Mediums.

2. It explains the most mysterious and fascinating phenomena of human life simply and clearly.

3. It presents a new array of demonstrated facts which prove that MASTERSHIP, and not Mediumship, is the Constructive Road to Spiritual Unfoldment, and that it is open to all who elect to travel it.

4. Its author speaks from the standpoint of one who has "had the personal experience and made the demonstration."

5. It presents to the world a Moral Philosophy so simple and exact that it may be understood by a child, and yet so profound as to meet the deepest and most exalted demands of the human soul.

It will be sent post-paid to any address on receipt of $2.00. Address, Department P. T.

Texas State National Spiritualist Association

The Texas State Association of Spiritualists.

The Eleventh Annual Convention of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists met in Houston, Texas, September 20, 21 and 22, 1907. The secretary, Mrs. Annie J. Quinn, being ill in Philadelphia, Pa., Miss Miriam Campbell, of Dallas, Texas, was appointed secretary pro tem. Only routine business was transacted the first morning. The committee on credentials made their report after the opening of the afternoon session. Number of accredited votes 21, being a gain over 1906 of five votes. The president's report was read and approved, and a brief financial report from the secretary was also approved.

Dr. J. H. Wroughton, of Houston, sent in his resignation, which was accepted, and Mr. H. B. Enos, also of Houston, was elected treasurer. Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale and Miss Edith Cummings, both of Fort Worth, were elected delegates to the N. S. A. convention.

On Sunday afternoon two little ones were "christened" and commended to the care of spirit friends. The ceremony was very impressive and beautiful.

Sunday evening at 8 o'clock Mrs. Cora B. Noyes and Mr. Martin Sabrasula (the latter a Bohemian) were ordained ministers of the gospel of Spiritualism.

The evening services were well attended, and Sunday evening Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, president of the Association, spoke to a packed house. Her address was listened to with profound attention, and many of those present came after the lecture to offer congratulations and thanks.

The Houston Spiritual Society exerted itself to make the meeting a success, and from the moment a delegate arrived, he or she was taken in charge by some member of that society and made to feel at home. Indeed the entire delegation were guests of the Houston Society.

The press of Houston gave extended notices of the meetings, and altogether it was one of the most successful and harmonious meetings held in recent years.

The committee on resolutions extended thanks to the Houston Society, the Houston press and The Progressive Thinker, and a motion was made and carried that the president's report be sent to the latter, with a request for publication.

Many regrets were expressed at the absence of the secretary, Mrs. Annie J. Quinn, who is a faithful officer and one of the most earnest, devoted workers we have in Texas.

The next place of meeting is Dallas, Texas.

MISS MIRIAM CAMPBELL,
Secretary pro tem.

President's Report.

To the Officers and Delegates of the Eleventh Annual Meeting of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists,

Greeting:

In writing a report of my work as president of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists, I am forcibly reminded that to do any work one must have tools.

If we were to employ a carpenter to work for us and give him no tools, we could not expect him to accomplish much.

If a farmer should attempt to raise a crop without plows, hoes and other instruments, his effort would result in failure.

So, I must begin my report by saying that I have been without tools—that is, money, with which to advance the cause of Spiritualism in Texas.

Mrs. Isa W. Kayner organized a Bohemian society at Kovar, Bastrop County, and the leader, Mr. Martin Sabrasula, made application for ordination as minister.

The by-laws of our State Association require that application for ordination shall be voted upon "at some annual meeting."

Mrs. Kayner asked authority to ordain Mr. Sabrasula, and I pursued the same course as before, i. e., sent questions to the Executive Board, and each voted to abide by our by-laws. Mr. Sabrasula was so notified by the secretary of the State Association, Mrs. Annie J. Quinn, to make application at this convention.

As stated, the former secretary of the State Association, Mrs. Minnie Malone Sayers, was called away at the opening session of the convention and Miss Edith Cummings, delegate from Fort Worth, was appointed secretary pro tem, who faithfully performed the duties of the office.

In the hurry of leaving, Mrs. Sayers in some way mislaid or lost the cut of the seal of the Association, and as it must be used in printing letter heads, badges, etc., the secretary, Mrs. Annie J. Quinn, and your president, had to take the responsibility of having a new one made, at a cost of 75 cents.

In January, 1907, I received a call to go to Sulphur, Ind. Ter., where I lectured for two weeks. Many people there are interested in Spiritualism, but like all others who seek this knowledge, they want proof mediums. On my return home I received a letter from Springfield, Mo., asking my terms, and desiring to engage me as speaker. I replied, but there being some delay in hearing from them again, I had a call to go to Galveston for the month of March, and at the end of that month I was engaged for three months longer. Some weeks after reaching Galveston I received a call to go to Springfield, but had already promised to work for the Temple Society.

A pleasant part of my work in Galveston was naming the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson. The ceremony was at the home of the parents, and we earnestly prayed that the little woman might indeed be baptized with a shower of spiritual blessings.

Sunday, March 31, being the anniversary of the modern advent of Spiritualism, and also Easter, we combined with the two anniversaries a memorial service, and chairs were decorated with flowers in memory of loved ones passed from the mortal life. At the evening service I ordained Mr. Samuel A. Chambers, of Galveston, a minister of the gospel of Spiritualism.

My work in Galveston closed a month earlier than was anticipated, urgent matters at home claiming my attention.

During the year two societies have been chartered: Bohemian Society No. 1, of Kovar, Bastrop Co., and Bohemian No. 2, of Taylor, Williamson Co.

Our Bohemian friends have many of them learned the truth which makes for happiness here and hereafter.

Letters came to me from the census bureau of the United States government asking information concerning Spiritualism and Spiritualists in Texas, and I wrote personal letters to Spiritualists in every city and town where I had acquaintances, begging them to fill out the blanks sent them by the secretary of the State Association, she having been supplied with these blanks by the census department.

It is a puzzling thing to try to explain the apathy of the vast majority of Spiritualists with regard to the progress of our philosophy and religion.

President Barrett of the N. S. A. has a standing notice in The Progressive Thinker calling upon Spiritualists all over the United States to "stand up and be counted." Yet, I am sure not even half the number in the United States have been sent to the census bureau, and the result will be that all other churches and denominations will have a FULL COUNT, and will far outnumber us.

Spiritualists, WAKE UP! For your own soul's sake, look at your life since you became a Spiritualist.

Have you done your duty? How much of your time and money have you given to the cause which has made you happier, broader, better than you were before? Remember, you cannot count your money on the other shore; time lost now can never be recalled. We must all "lie down in the narrow couch of death." What can you take with you to that other life? When you awake on the silent shore of eternity, will you be naked and a beggar? Answer, to your own soul. What have you done? Is the world a better place to live in because you have helped to make it so? Is there anyone who is better, nobler, for efforts you have made? Good deeds, kindly words—these alone can you take into the realm of infinite life. How much will you carry with you?

O, friends, if we but do our duty, each one of us, Spiritualism will stand before the world under different aspects. Have we no gratitude? If anyone on earth does us a kindness, do we just accept it and make no effort to repay it? Then, surely, we owe our best efforts to those blessed spirit friends who have shown us the way "out of darkness into light." The angel hosts are striving, striving, ever striving to teach this truth to man—this truth we call OUR Spiritualism; this knowledge of a continuity of life and love. But they must teach it through material channels; we cannot reach up to the spiritual altitude upon which they live; so they must come to the grosser plane of existence, and must have the help of mortals to reach mankind with this truth, fraught with more stupendous import than any other thing given to the world for centuries.

Let us do our best, with heart, hand and pocketbook, to give them the help they need on the material side of life.

On my return home from Galveston I took up the work at Fort Worth, where for two years I have lectured every Sunday night when at home, with the exception of about two months. Nearly two months ago I sent a notice to The Progressive Thinker, asking Spiritualists all over Texas for donations to aid in the work of the State Association, which notice I supplemented by personal letters to forty or fifty of our people who, I believed, were able and willing to contribute. Up to date I have received from Mr. and Mrs. Chas. W. Newman $1.00; Mrs. Luella A. Coburn $1.00, all of San Antonio; Mr. and Mrs. Fulcher $1.20; from Capt. and Mrs. Joe Weaver, Orange, $2.00; Mrs. Sophronia Beverly, Killeen, 50 cents, and from Mrs. G. C. McGregor, of Waco, $5.00, making $10.70, in response to an URGENT appeal for help!

O, friends, is the cause dying? There are thousands of sad hearts, thousands of burdened lives, many grief-stricken homes, to be brightened, comforted, strengthened. Can you withhold your hand from these stricken ones?

Help us to help others. There is no selfishness in this plea. It is not for myself that I beg, but for those who know not the glorious relief, the comfort, the lifting of the burdens of life, which comes with this knowledge.

I would recommend that officers and delegates confer on this subject, and devise ways and means to secure sufficient funds to enable the State Association to employ good, reliable mediums to travel over Texas and give the proof of life beyond the grave to the thousands of anxious hearts, who will "rejoice and be exceeding glad" to learn that which has comforted us, made life better and sweeter to us.

May the angel hosts gather with us here and impress upon the souls of all present the crying NEED for concerted action.

Let us do SOMETHING; let us show the "stuff we are made of;" let us join hands, dropping all personalities, and work together for the advancement of mankind, the uplifting of humanity, the betterment of the world.

During the past year I have written 370 letters pertaining to the business of the Association, and all through the year letters have come to me asking about mediums.

I cannot close my report without tendering to the secretary of the State Association, Mrs. Annie Quinn, my sincere thanks for her faithful work, and the great assistance she has been to me in my work. There are few more faithful, earnest Spiritualists in the world than Mrs. Quinn, who has for years given freely of her time, money and labor, working untiringly for the local society in Dallas, and for the past year for the State Association. She is just recovering from what physicians said was typhoid fever. Starting on a summer vacation she reached her brother's home in Philadelphia, Pa., and has been under the care of doctors and trained nurses ever since.

Mrs. Isa W. Kayner has done good work in our State, and has been with The Truth Seekers society of Dallas for the last two years. It is a pleasure to have workers of Mrs. Kayner's ability and moral character in our State, and there is no easily explainable reason why nearly every city and town in Texas should not have such a worker.

Friends, officers and delegates, I would like to do some good for our cause; you have elected me president of your State Association, but alone I can do nothing.

YOU must help me. YOU must hold up my hands in the good work. May peace and harmony abide with you. Very truly,

MRS. CARRIE M. HINSDALE,
President Texas Association of Spiritualists.

TRIED TO KISS MISS SCOTT.

And the Result Has Kicked Up Trouble.

The East Ohio Conference of the M. E. Church now in session in Cleveland, will have some weighty matters to decide among the clergy. Rev. C. B. Henthorne, presiding elder, is charged by Rev. W. B. King of Uhlrichsville, with having tried to kiss Miss Scott, of the church, against her will. Elder Henthorne retorts that Rev. King chews tobacco and then denies it. Miss Scott, it is alleged, was intimidated into signing the retraction of her charges. Brother King says he was chewing licorice for his throat. Also that one of his ex-members took a trip with a woman not his wife. The entire Conference, we are told, has taken sides, and much dirty linen will be aired in the star chamber trial, which is being conducted under true Russian military style.

In the opinion of this writer it will require a great deal of white-wash to make Brother Henthorne as "white as wool," even though his sins be as scarlet. He is the immaculate teacher of the gospel who opposes Spiritualism with tooth and toe nail. We can stand his ridicule.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 36 CHICAGO, ILL., OCT. 19, 1907 NO. 934

A Remarkable Book.

Accompanied With a Remarkable Statement.

BOOK A SPIRIT GIFT—SO SAYS THE CELEBRATED DR. VAN DYKE, A PRINCETON PROFESSOR, WHO INSISTS THAT HIS "STORY OF THE OTHER WISE MEN" IS THE WORK OF DIVINE INSPIRATION. HE SAYS ARTABAN [A SPIRIT] WENT WITH HIM WHILE HE TOILED THROUGH A SCORE OF VOLUMES OF ANCIENT HISTORY AND TRAVEL. HE SAW HIS FIGURE WHILE HE TRAVELED ON THE MOTIONLESS SEA OF THE DESERT AND IN THE STRANGE CITIES OF THE EAST.

ALL THIS COMPREHENSIVELY ILLUSTRATES THAT OUTSIDE OF SPIRITUALISM AS A DISTINCT SECT, SPIRIT RETURN IS BEGINNING TO BE COMMON—SO COMMON THAT THE WHOLE WORLD SHOULD ACKNOWLEDGE ITS TRUTH. IT HAS BEEN PREDICTED BY WISE SPIRITS THAT SPIRIT RETURN WILL BECOME SO DIFFUSIVE THAT SPIRITUALISM WILL NO LONGER BE REGARDED AS A DISTINCT SECT.

"It was sent to me, and it has seemed as if I knew the giver, though his name was not spoken."

In these words [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune], in a new preface to his "Story of the Other Wise Man," Dr. Henry Van Dyke lays aside the credit for literary creation and makes a complete and definite claim to inspiration more specific than that advanced by any writer of the Bible except St. John, the divine, in his explanation of the origin of the apocalypse.

"The Story of the Other Wise Man," hitherto printed and widely circulated as an exquisite work of the imagination, has been translated into German, French, Armenian, Turkish, and other foreign tongues, to say nothing of its reproduction in a modern phonetic language.

But with its present reprinting in an edition de luxe the work attains new and startling significance because of this explanation of its origin.

Is Professor at Princeton.

Although Dr. VanDyke is professor of belles lettres at Princeton University, he is known as a New Yorker. He was formerly pastor of the Brick Presbyterian church.

He is an enthusiastic fisherman and has written many stories of his experiences in angling for trout in Canada.

Dr. Van Dyke returned to America last June after a tour of the holy land.

"I have been asked to tell where the story comes from," the preface reads. "I do not know where it came from—out of the air, probably. One thing is certain, it is not written in any other book, nor is it to be found among the ancient lore of the east. And yet I have never felt as if it were my own. It was a gift. It was sent to me, and it has seemed as if I knew the giver, though his name was not spoken.

How the Story Came to Him.

"The year had been full of sickness and sorrow. Every day brought trouble. Every night was tormented with pain. They are long—those nights when one lies awake and hears the laboring heart pumping wearily at its task.

"Well, it was in one of these long, lonely nights that this story came to me. Of the Fourth Wise Man I had never heard until that night. Then I saw him distinctly, moving through the shadows in a little circle of light.

"His countenance was as clear as the memory of my father's face, and I saw it for the last time a few months before. The narrative of his journeyings and trials and disappointments ran on without a break. Even certain sentences came to me complete and unforgettable, clear-cut like a cameo.

"All that I had to do was to follow Artaban, step by step, as the tale went on, from the beginning to the end of his pilgrimage.

"Though the story of the Fourth Wise Man came to me suddenly and without labor, there was a great deal of study and toil to be done before it could be written down.

Fourth Wise Man Went With Him.

"Artaban went with me while I toiled through a score of volumes of ancient history and travel. I saw his figure while I journeyed on the motionless sea of the desert and in the strange cities of the East.

"The story is that of one of the magi, or wise men of the East, who came to worship at the birthplace of Jesus. The man never reached Jesus until the day of Calvary, for he spent his time and his resources on the way in doing acts of saving kindness and mercy. It was to this wise man, according to the story, that the immortal words were spoken, 'Inasmuch as thou hast done it unto the least of these, my brethren, thou hast done it unto me.'"

"Story of the Other Wise Man."

Dr. Van Dyke's "Story of the Other Wise Man" was published first in 1896. His original foreword follows:

"You know the story of the Three Wise Men of the East, and how they traveled from far away to offer their gifts at the manger cradle in Bethlehem. But have you ever heard the story of the Other Wise Man, who also saw the star in its rising and set out to follow it, yet did not arrive with his brethren in the presence of the young child Jesus? Of the great desire of this fourth pilgrim, and how it was denied, yet accomplished in the denial; of his many wanderings and the probations of his soul; of the long way of his seeking and the strange way of his finding the one whom he sought—I would tell the tale as I have heard fragments of it in the Hall of Dreams in the palace of the Heart of Man."

When Herod was King of Jerusalem.

Dr. Van Dyke recounts that in the days of Augustus Caesar, when Herod ruled under him as king of Jerusalem, there lived in the city of Ecbatana, in Persia, a man named Artaban, a medium. He says Artaban had "the brow of a dreamer and the mouth of a soldier, a man of sensitive feeling, but inflexible will—one of those who, in whatever age they may live, are born for inward conflict and a life of quest."

Artaban held council with nine men of the ancient priesthood of fire worshipers, the magi, to whom he said: "We worship not the fire, but him of whom it is the chosen symbol, because it is the purest of all created things. It speaks to us of one who is Light and Truth."

Following some talk about the stars, in which Ligranes, one of the magi, said: "The stars are the thoughts of the eternal," Artaban said: "Now again the two great planets are meeting. This night is their conjunction. My three brothers are watching at the ancient temple of the Seven Spheres at Borsippa, in Babylonia, and I am watching here. If the star shines again they will wait ten days for me at the temple, and then we will set out together for Jerusalem to see and worship the promised one, who shall be born king of Israel. I believe the sign will come. I have made ready for the journey. I have sold my house and my possessions and brought these three jewels—a sapphire, a ruby, and a pearl—to carry them as tribute to the king."

Artaban Sets Off Alone.

Artaban pleaded with each of the magi to go with him, but all made excuses, and he finally set off alone on Vasda, the swiftest of his horses. After traveling far through a rough country he came upon a poor Hebrew who seemed to be dying. He battled with himself a long time as to whether he should hurry forward to the king or succor the man.

"God of truth and purity," he prayed, "direct me in the holy path, the way of wisdom which thou only knowest."

He turned back to the sick man, gave him water and a potion of healing herbs. The Jew raised his trembling hands and blessed Artaban and added:

"I can tell thee where the Messiah must be sought. For our prophets have said that he should not be born in Jerusalem, but in Bethlehem of Judea. May the Lord bring thee safely to that place, because thou hast had pity on the sick."

Artaban hurried away to the temple of the seven spheres, but the other wise men had gone. He found a piece of parchment which read: "We have waited past the midnight and can delay no longer. We go to find the king. Follow us across the desert."

Find Mary, Joseph and Jesus.

Bewailing the fact that his horse was spent and fearing that he would never see the king because he had tarried to show mercy, the traveler still pressed forward through the shifting hills of treacherous sand.

Artaban returned to Babylon, sold his sapphire, bought a train of camels, and resumed his journey.

He arrived at Bethlehem the third day after the three wise men had come to that place and had found Mary and Joseph, with the young child, Jesus, and had laid their gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh at his feet.

Artaban entered a cottage and found a young mother hushing her babe to rest. She was telling him of the wise men when Herod's soldiers came and the cry went up: "They are killing our children!" He helped the mother to hide, held back the soldiers, and said to them in a low voice: "There is no one in this place but me and I am waiting to give this jewel to the prudent captain who will leave me in peace."

Gives Up Second of His Gems.

He showed the ruby glistening in the hollow of his hand like a great drop of blood, and the captain took the gem. Then Artaban wailed:

"God of Truth, forgive my sin! I have said the thing that is not to save the life of a child, and two of my gifts are gone. I have spent for man that which was meant for God. Shall I ever be worthy to see the face of the King?"

The weeping woman said, gently:

"Because thou hast saved the life of my little one, may the Lord bless thee and keep thee."

Artaban traveled through Egypt looking for the household that had come down from Bethlehem. He went to the foot of the pyramids and to Alexandria, and once he took from his bosom the pearl, the last of his jewels. As he looked at it a mellow luster, a soft and iridescent light, full of shifting gleams of azure and rose, trembled upon its surface. It seemed to have absorbed some reflection of the colors of the lost sapphire and ruby.

Thirty-three years of Artaban's life had pased away, and he was still a pilgrim and a seeker after light. Worn and weary and ready to die, but still looking for the King, he had come for the last time to Jerusalem. It was the season of the Passover and there was a tumult among the Parthian Jews.

"We are going," they said to Artaban, "to the place called Golgotha, outside the city walls, where there is to be an execution. Two famous robbers are to be crucified, and with them another called Jesus of Nazareth, a man who has done many wonderful works among the people so that they love him greatly. But the priests and elders have said that he must die because he gave himself out to be the son of God."

Gives Away His Last Jewel.

Artaban followed the multitude and came upon a troop of Macedonian soldiers dragging a young girl with torn dress and disheveled hair.

"Have pity on me," she cried, and save me for the sake of the God of purity."

One thing only was sure to Artaban's divided heart—to rescue this helpless girl would be a true deed of love. He took the pearl from his bosom and gave it to the men who held her. An earthquake came which shook the buildings down around them. When Artaban regained consciousness his wounded head lay on the girl's shoulder. Then there came a voice to him in the twilight, small and still. Then the old man's lips began to move as if in answer. He said, in the Parthian tongue:

"Not so, my Lord! For when saw I thee an hungered and fed thee? Or thirsty and gave thee drink? When saw I thee a stranger and took thee in? Or naked and clothed thee? When saw I thee sick or in prison and came unto thee? Three and thirty years have I looked for thee, but I have never seen thy face, nor ministered to thee, my king."

The Words of Christ.

He ceased and the sweet voice came again. And again the maid heard it faintly and far away. But now it seemed as though she understood the words:

"Verily I say unto thee, inasmuch as thou hast done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, thou hast done it unto me."

A calm radiance of wonder and joy lighted the pale face of Artaban like the first ray of dawn on a snowy mountain peak. One long, last breath of relief exhaled gently from his lips.

His journey was ended. His treasures were accepted. The other wise man had found the king.

A Ringing Communication.

Touching On the Modern Scientific Methods, by a Chicago Physician.

The attention of the believers in the spiritual philosiphy in the United States has been called to the fact that in the next few years the different State legislatures will have bills introduced restricting or entirely prohibiting the practice of mediumship, and Spiritualists are warned to be on the alert if they wish to offset this inimical legislation.

It is a well-known fact that since scientific methods have been applied and attempts made at classifying the different phases of the phenomena by scientists like Podmore, Meyer and Mrs. Sidgwick, that the modern press has become more lenient, and the public generally are therefore inclined to lay aside a great deal of their former priestly-made prejudice and are really desiring to know more of the wonderful phenomena.

It is an actual fact, however, that I, myself, have observed, over and over again, of even the better class of mediums, that they show a jealous disposition toward each other, and one may think that a certain medium has wonderful gifts, or remarkable phenomena, only to hear her condemned as fraudulent by other mediums.

It is true that environments are against many people believing even that which they see with their own eyes, and therefore they cannot even believe themselves, much less someone who is ridiculed and denounced as a fraud, even by those who should be their truest and stanchest friends. This was thoroughly understood, perhaps, by Jesus when he said: "I have yet many things to tell you; however ye cannot bear them now, but when he, the spirit of truth, will come, he will lead you to all truth."

IT IS EQUALLY TRUE, TO THE DETRIMENT OF THE CAUSE, THAT THERE ARE MANY FAKERS IN THE FIELD, AND ONE SUCH CHARLATAN BRINGS DISGRACE TO THE WHOLE, BECAUSE THE PUBLIC CANNOT SEE THE DIFERENCE BETWEEN THE REAL AND THE GENUINE PHENOMENA, AND AFTER HAVING BEEN TAKEN IN SEVERAL TIMES, AND ESPECIALLY AFTER HAVING PUBLICLY EXPRESSED THEIR BELIEF IN CERTAIN PHENOMENA ONLY TO FIND OUT LATER ON THAT THEY WERE THE VICTIMS OF A SHARPER, IS IT ANY WONDER THAT THEY BECOME ENEMIES AND WISH TO CONDEMN IT ALL?

CAN YOU CONDEMN THE HONEST INDIVIDUAL FOR WISHING TO BE PROTECTED FROM THE HORDES OF FAKERS THAT ARE NOT ONLY PREYING UPON THE HIGHEST SENTIMENTS POSSESSED BY MAN, BUT ARE FLEECING HIM OUT OF HIS HARD-EARNED MONEY AS WELL, IN THESE FRAUDULENT PRACTICES?

From reliable reports we are justified in our assertions that the whole country is overrun with fake materializing mediums, fake trumpet mediums, fake billet readers, fake bluebook readers, and every other kind of fake that can be worked upon a sincere but ignorant public. It is not enough to fake them in these matters, but direct attempts to defraud by selling worthless mining stock, giving advice in disease where, in the majority of instances, the one who gives the advice is absolutely ignorant of even the cause of the condition, and frequently does more harm than good.

Can you really blame the honest individual for wishing to be protected from them, and as there is no way that we can know the true from the false, is it any wonder that we condemn it all?

This is exactly the state of affairs that brought it in disrepute and caused the Jews to restrict it, except among the priesthood, and it is the same cause that made the early Christians the sect everywhere spoken against, and for which, no doubt, they finally dropped this unreliable part of their religion altogether.

These fakers all call themselves Spiritualists, and the public naturally think they all belong to the same crowd, and therefore they are all under suspicion.

Modern scientists are beginning to use the same line of critical investigation to these phenomena as they are at working out problems in other sciences, and they soon become satisfied that there is much in the phenomena that merits careful and painstaking investigation, and with a little help from honest mediums they will do much to lift it out of the mire that it has been sunk in in former times.

The Christian church has always opposed science and scientific methods because it was constantly afraid that science might show some things to be different from what its views were. Are the Spiritualists also going to follow out this line of policy, and err on the wrong side? Were it not better to let the scientists make some few mistakes?

The people to-day, however, are ignoring the church and pinning their faith to science, and everywhere there is a demand for experts along certain lines, because the specialist is taught how to properly do certain lines of work.

The crucial test is coming in the Spiritualist ranks when the honest individual will insist in some way to be distinguished from the charlatan, because the opprobrium is very hard to bear.

A better and a higher organization is needed.

AN ORGANIZATION IS NEEDED THAT WILL AID SCIENCE IN EVERY WAY POSSIBLE. AN ORGANIZATION COULD WELL AFFORD TO AID SCIENCE AND THEN APPROPRIATE EVERYTHING THAT SCIENCE WORKS OUT. IT IS A SIGNIFICANT FACT THAT THE SPIRITUALISTIC PHILOSOPHY HAS NOTHING TO LOSE BY SCIENTIFIC METHODS, AND IT CAN AND SHOULD ENCOURAGE AND THEN CLAIM AS MUCH AS POSSIBLE.

An organization is needed that will also define what the Spiritualistic philosophy stands for. President Barrett has made statements that, if carried out, would be uplifting and would do much to place this beautiful philosophy upon a higher plane in America.

By keeping close in touch and encouraging scientific methods they could well deserve to call themselves the "Spiritual Scientists," and if by some distinguishing mark they could show that they encourage and appreciate the work that scientific investigators are doing, and by some manner show that they wish to keep aloof from the faking element that now permeates it, what a growth and encouragement they would receive from those who now keep entirely out of the organized ranks.

EXPERIENCE HAS SHOWN THAT THE BEST ORGANIZATIONS ARE THOSE WHICH ADAPT THEMSELVES TO CHANGED CONDITIONS AND BY GRADUAL GROWTH BECOME STRONG AND POPULAR.

A strong organization is absolutely necessary for many reasons—

1. For protection. Honest mediums must be protected and encouraged.

2. For uplifting and aiding those who now, because of the environments, cannot stand alone, and who soon fall out of the ranks.

3. For aiding and furnishing psychological environments for scientists to work by; for it is the work of the trained mind that counts everywhere to-day.

The next step necessary in the evolution of a scientific religion will be to show the Jew, as well as the Christian, that all they ever had was Spiritualistic phenomena, and that the former personified it and called it Eloah, Yahveh, God, and that the latter called it Holy Spirit. It will be necessary to show the Jew, as well as the Christian, that this phenomena is the very best basis of their religious belief, and that it can be, and is, demonstrated to-day as it was centuries ago. However, before this will be accepted as a fact, it will be necessary for scientists to prove that the phenomena really exists, and that under similar conditions and environments the same phenomena will again occur, and perhaps even more wonderful phenomena than the Jews and Christians had will occur.

When the people once know that this is the very basis of their belief, what an impetus this will at once be to the Cause! What an uplifting of the misunderstood spiritual kingdom that Jesus tried to bring about!

There is nothing new. The old Jews possessed a Spiritualistic hygienic religion, and we are about to go over the same ground again. Medical science is gradually working out the hygienic part, and the modern hospital and dispensary are but the new edition by trained minds of the old Egyptian temple.

SCIENTISTS WILL ALSO WORK OUT THE SPIRITUAL LAWS, AND IT IS A FACT THAT IN EUROPE SPIRITUALISM IS ON A MUCH HIGHER PLANE BECAUSE IT IS ALMOST EXCLUSIVELY IN THE HANDS OF THE SCIENTISTS.

Spiritualists cannot afford to oppose science, even if it may at times require severe rules, yet in the end the truth will not suffer.

PROF. ALEXANDER WILDER.

Dr. Andrew Jackson Davis Pays Him a High Tribute of Respect—Madame Eddy and Madame Blavatsky.

May I be permitted enough space in your overcrowded columns to express, pro bono publico, a few thoughts concerning the truly profound scholar and author, Alexander Wilder?

About the beginning of 1880, when I was addressing every Sunday a large congregation in Steck Hall, on 14th street, New York City, it came to pass that Professor Wilder called upon the writer and presented me a ticket of matriculation to attend (whenever I could spare the time) some lectures by himself and by the other professors in the United States Medical College. At this time the old school of medicine had obtained an act of the New York Legislature making all prescriptions by mediums, magnetizers, clairvoyants, etc., a crime punishable with fines and imprisonment, unless the mediums and clairvoyants aforesaid were duly graduated from some regular medical college, and the possessors of duly executed diplomas.

At this time I was not practicing nor prescribing for the sick in body and soul; but I had knowledge of magnetic and clairvoyant practitioners who, in consequence of the unjust proscriptive law, were compelled to retire from their wonderfully successful practice or be arrested and condemned as offenders and criminal under the law. Under these conditions and circumstances I was moved to investigate the opportunities for obtaining, by a regular course of study, a legal diploma in the United States Eclectic Medical College, located in the city of New York. Accordingly I matriculated and paid for the right to attend all the sessions of the college, and this without interruption for three years, and until the time for graduation and the reception of a legal diploma. And, fortunately, I was able to induce several magnetists and medical mediums to matriculate, and to thus—by obtaining a certified diploma—protect themselves in practice beyond the reach of the old line of doctors.

Before I entered as a student, and by a unanimous vote of the Harmonial Association in Steck Hall, Alexander Wilder was appointed to the chair (adopted by College Board of Trustees) of "Psychological Science and Magnetic Therapeutics." At this period such a chair to a college was a new departure—an absurdity, and a cause of mirth and wonder. But need I assure you that under Prof. Wilder's scientific and literary administration the teachings became attractive and highly esteemed by the entire class?

And now, full twenty years after that unpopular and little-understood branch of true medical education, behold how almost universally the facts of psychology and the laws of magnetic therapeutics are accepted and incorporated in regular schools and colleges. Even in the secular daily newspapers you read frequently of the "psychological movement;" of the mental medicine cures; of the psychical subjects; of the remarkable experiments in the mysterious realms of spiritual intercourse; of tests which overwhelm all theories; of materialization, and not less destructive to the (so-called) established formalities of orthodox theology.

Now please stop a moment and give yourself time enough to render an honest tribute of appreciation and just praise to the masterful teachings of Prof. Alexander Wilder, who, nearly a quarter of a century ago, educated students to understand these occult and now popular subjects.

During the past year the human origin of "Christian Science" has come openly to the plane of common intelligence. It has come to pass, legitimately in the magazines, that Dr. Quimby, of Portland, Me., taught his patient, Mrs. Eddy, substantially all the dogmas and doctrines which she subsequently embodied, with the assistance of competent literary gentlemen, in a very sacred and costly volume entitled "Science of Health."

In like manner, and with the learned literary editorial revision of Prof. Alexander Wilder, the readers of Madame Blavatsky can behold the origin of much of the profound knowledge of oriental religions and occult mysteries with which her great volumes are wonderfully freighted. She was the writer in the premises, but who was it that corrected her errors in oriental knowledge? Who rendered her book correct in facts and in her literary excellence? The well-known modesty as a scholar and editor would save Prof. Wilder from ever making any claim of his part in revision and correction, etc., but it seems to me that he is entitled to as much credit in the Blavatsky literature as the departed Dr. Quimby is deserving of credit in launching Mrs. Eddy's Christian Science.

In this connection, in order to do justice to both Madame Eddy and Madame Blavatsky, it should be admitted that both were, and are, mediums of an impressional and an inspirational character. Nothwithstanding all extraneous helps in their book-making accomplishments, yet there remains ample evidence that, at special intervals, both these women openly manifested the possession of spiritual gifts of a high order. Hence come the true explanation and testimony of their several wonderful works.

In my estimation, Dr. A. Wilder is an intellectually strong man—too independent spiritually to be made subordinate to the disclosures of Swedenborg—too learned and skeptical to be led away by any of the occult mysteries, in which he is ever loyal to the dictates of common sense. He is, like myself, approaching the shores of the Summerland; but he, like myself, is enough faithful to the rules and conditions of physical and mental health to continue at work in this rudimental world of winters. I think he deserves a superior slice of appreciation and prosperity, and here's hoping that what he deserves he will receive in this world, for in the next world everyone is sure of receiving all that he or she is justly entitled to.

THE HOME CIRCLE.

Excellent Results That Flow Therefrom—A Materialist Who Found the Light.

To the Editor:—I have been thinking. A necessary thing to do, if we would enter the highway of progress. I have been sitting behind the intellectual flash-lights photographed upon the pages of The Progressive Thinker for many months past, and have found much enjoyment in the glimpses portrayed by your contributors, and have concluded to offer your readers a bit of my experience.

Only a short time ago I was a Materialist, but through reading your great paper and the little pamphlet published by your social editor, Hudson Tuttle, I became a seeker after the great truths you are contending for.

We have service in our own home each Sunday morning. While I do not pretend to give public tests, we have gotten for ourselves many tests, some very startling ones! I go under control and talk upon many and varied subjects pertaining to this life and the great beyond. I am just beginning to write. I seem to be almost normal when I work, yet I am possessed of a strange vague feeling of only partial consciousness, but when I talk I realize I am far from normal, yet I am conscious of the words spoken. How it will end I cannot say.

When I think how short has been the time since I began getting these inspirations, and how plain and unassuming my life has always been, I feel hopeful of wonderful unfoldment along these lines.

It is strange how unsatisfied we all are with what we can do; but I suppose it is the incentive that helps us to move on.

There are but few in our beautiful little city of Carthage, who are avowed Spiritualists, and but few mediums come here.

We have just had two great mental wonders with us for a week—Dr. Alexander McIvor Tyndall, and Miss Ruth Grey. I feel like an atom compared with this truly sublime man. He is editor of the Swastika Magazine. You have but to read it to realize his true worth to the thinking world.

Coming into the light of this new day, I scarcely can tell of the joy. I trace the lines of beauty out beyond silence and death, or what to some is death, but by the messages I receive I know it is filled with life, the real true life. Even the distorted leaf on the plant beside me, whose beauty was destroyed by a worm, as I remove the withered leaf, I know that its strength is not lost, but added to another; so those loved ones gone, but lend beauty and understanding to our lives when we come into our own.

Each passing moment brings to us a note of harmony or discord; each tangled web is a measure of beauty when we learn to understand, and each joy that comes to us measures our lives in it—to the fullest is ours by right. Do not shut it out by misunderstanding.

As I look out upon the great Ocean of life, filled with beautiful vibrations, I catch the reflection of those voices in that joy-song which is filled with notes of real life and light from that true world; and as yet I know I am only touching the hem of the garment.

What silence teaches us can best be understood by those in the church by turning to the life line of the lone one who wandered along the shores of the river of Jordan. He went into the true silence, and there learned the true lessons of life.

BEYOND THE GRAVE.

I stood to-day beside the grave
Where we laid my darling, so noble and brave,
And I cried to God to send relief,
For my heart was breaking with its burden of grief.

As I knelt and prayed for sweet release,
My heart grew light with a strange new peace,
As a bird in the pine-trees overhead
Sang softly to me, "He is not dead!"

Oh! was it my fancy, or did I hear
The voice of the one to me so dear?
'Tis not fancy! Once more the accents fall—
Once more I hear his loving call.

I hear these words with bated breath:
"There is no grave, there is no death.
Look up, dear one, beyond the skies,
For the soul is immortal, it never — dies."

Through tears I catch a glimpse of the land
Where we shall wander, hand in hand,
And where at last, by God's own grace
I shall meet and see him "face to face."

Spirit Spheres: Their Forms of Government, and Religious Observances

A Lecture Delivered by Spirit John Pierpont, through the Mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley, at Onset, Mass., August 9, 1907. Subject Given by Dr. George A. Fuller, Chairman.

Stenographically Reported for The Progressive Thinker, by Mr. Fred. Baker of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dear friends, it is always a pleasure and privilege for us to be with you at this beautiful camp, and to extend to you the greetings and benedictions of souls arisen; to voice to you that which we trust will be helpful in your search for light. On Sunday morning last your good chairman presented for our discourse the subject of life in the spirit of those who have gone on from earth, and to-day we are requested to continue on that line in the theme presented from this platform, namely, "Spirit Spheres: Their Forms of Government and Religious Observances."

It is a pleasure to speak to you of spirit world conditions and employments, and of the varying forms of living that are expressed upon these planes of human consciousness. You have had, from time to time, from the teachers upon your platform and in your classes, pleasant and instructive discourses upon the various subjects that lead human thought from the mortal plane; you have had those who gave you pleasing thoughts concerning various schools and cults on metaphysical, theosophical and other lines of present-day research, and if it is reserved for ourselves to speak to you from the spirit world concerning that spirit world, its conditions and people, we are very glad to respond to the request and to bring to you a breath of life from those worlds in space that are peopled by human intelligences who once lived on earth like yourselves, and who, through struggle, have passed onward over that experience which they gained from the tribulations of mortal life, and who have thus been enabled to understand and sympathize with every experience of pain and sorrow, joy and peace, which you all meet here along the roadway of life.

Oh! those worlds in space, how grand they are;
So filled with wondrous light!
They bear the soul in thought away
To yonder mansion bright.
Their people are the souls of love
Who once dwelt here below,
Who gained their happiness above
Through discipline and woe.
They marched along the heights of Time,
And felt the chastening rod,
But now, from yonder heights sublime,
Beneath the smile of God,
They send their benedictions down
On you, dear friends, to-day;
To you they bring the noblest crown
And it shall last for aye—
A crown beset with jewels fair,
The gems of endless youth,
With pearls of love so rich and rare,
And jewels of blest Truth.
Go on, and on, and never fail
To do your duty well;
Remember this: TRUTH SHALL PREVAIL
Far more than tongue can tell;
For endless love that's given you
From angel friends above
Shall lead you all your journey through,
For GOD, HIMSELF, is LOVE!

Our theme, then, to-day shall be of spirit spheres, and concern forms of government and religious observances "over there." It is a vast theme, nor can it be exhausted in an hour's discourse; what could be given on such a subject wiuld fill many a volume and be educational in its force and revelations. We will, however, do the best we can in the time allotted to us.

SPIRIT WORLDS—OR "SPHERES," IF YOU PREFER THE WORD—ARE MANY. WE CANNOT BEGIN TO DEAL WITH THEM ALL; THEY ARE INNUMERABLE, STRETCHING OUT AND OUT AS GLORIOUS ORBS IN THE GREAT SPACES OF SPLENDOR IN THE UNIVERSE. WORLDS UPON WORLDS OF LIVING ENTITIES, FILLED WITH THE POWER AND MAJESTY OF CONSCIOUSNESS OF HUMAN EXPRESSION.

Think for a moment, friends, of all the people that this one little earth has held during its ages of human habitation, and you will realize that not a tithe of that vast number could find even a foothold here in the present day. There would be no room for that immense army; but they are all out in the great spaces of the universe; in those grand worlds of splendor there is ample room for all souls, and none are lost. Not one is quenched, nor consumed, nor taken from the embrace of Infinity—all are cared for, led onward, gathered into the glorious, living, palpitating atmosphere of spiritual life.

These worlds that are nearest the planet earth, or that spirit world most vitally connected with your world, will be that in which probably you will be most interested. Your friends have gone thither; others whom you have admired from the records of their early lives and struggles, historic careers of the centuries that have appealed to you, those of whom you have read and heard, learning of their wonderful productions of intellect, artistic genius and beautiful moral attributes; these you hope to meet sometime when you have sloughed off the body of clay and have entered that imperial world. And Spiritualism teaches of the reality of that world.

Now, friends, if there have come up schools and cults—of learning, if you will—which claim there is no reality, no probability of human life after it slips from mortality, and that human consciousness is merely an abstract term, without form and parts for individual expression, we beg to take issue with them, for we are speaking from experience, from personal observation and from our contact with other advanced human beings who have had experiences like our own. This is the method by which man on earth gains his information, by experience, his powers of observation and study, and by coming in contact with other minds; and we have the same way of gaining knowledge in the spirit world, as well as many other means of adding to our information.

Therefore while we simply present our own opinion on many philosophic questions that are brought to us, and leave our readers and listeners to retain that which appeals to them, and to cast aside whatever they are not ready to accept, yet, especially in these matters pertaining to the spirit world we can speak from absolute knowledge, and tell you, friends, positively, you will find a natural world when you pass from the mortal form.

It is, however, possible that if you desire and prefer to hover around this earth to remain in its physical atmosphere, and live the life that is neither of earth nor of the real spiritual world, you may do so; there will be no law against it. You may live a very vague and intangible existence in a form made up from the elements which you have sent out from yourself while you have been on earth; that can be but a very unsatisfactory state. But if you desire and elect to pass at will into a spiritual world for which you are fitted and adapted—a world with natural scenery, beautiful conditions, uplifting associations, where powers are gained for the advancement and growth of your interior qualities, you can do that; because the aspiration, the desire and tone of mind and of heart-life will lead you on. Many of your dear friends who have gone onward are living in those worlds of light. Their spheres of attraction may be such as correspond with your aspirations and the attributes within you. Perchance they are enabled to tell you of their homes, their employments and conditions of being, because of some magnetic attachment which will make it possible to bring down their line of vibration and thus transmit to you their thoughts and communications that will inform you concerning these things.

Sometimes your friends are enabled to communicate these matters through your own agency, or through some medium whom you have met, and they are happy to do so, for life to them is beautiful; but more so if they can acquaint you with its affairs and cause you to understand something of that life which you may reach by and by.

FORMS OF GOVERNMENT IN THAT SPIRIT WORLD OF WHICH WE SPEAK ARE VERY SIMPLE AND VERY NATURAL; THEY ARE NOT AT THE DICTATION OF ANY MAN OR BODY OF MEN WHO ASSUME TO BE RULERS, AND WHO USURP PRIVILEGES THAT THE MASSES CANNOT HAVE.

The forms of government are for and by the people, in the very nicety of that expression. They are for the good of all, and very simple. There are no emoluments to be gained by any office-holder, because in the spirit world office or position in government, or any line of industry, or of active thought, neither depends upon ancestral glory, nor is it confined to any expression or achievement of one class above another. There is perfect equality between man and man, between woman and woman, and between man and woman, on the spirit side.

You will understand that we are not now speaking of any lower form of spirit life, such as is peopled by those undeveloped beings who have been spiritually warped and misshapened by earth conditions, and who must outgrow those conditions before they can rise to higher states. But we are speaking of those worlds and conditions where happy, peaceful, harmonized and fraternal spirits dwell, and we assume that you are of that character. We assume that if you are not absolutely happy at the present time, you are at least harmonious with yourselves and your fellows, and are trying to do your duty daily as it appeals to you, and that you are at peace with your fellow men, and love to come in contact with them for kindly purpose and social exchange of thought.

Assuming all this, we will say that you are endowed with the qualities that will enable you, when you pass from earth to rise into an atmosphere of light and beauty on the spirit side, and to immediately pass onward into this country of souls of which we are talking to-day.

Then you will be able to comprehend that the powers of government there are very simple, nevertheless its people can, if they choose, select one who will be a sort of leader, but unlike the sense in which the word is often understood and employed on earth.

Spiritual leaders are the souls who may be considered to be the centers of great circles and concourses of intelligences; they are chosen by the people to interest themselves as leaders, in the welfare of the general whole. These are chosen by acclaim, by the intelligent wish and expression; not by any electoral vote, nor by any form of choice employed by the nations of earth; not because of pedigree, or prowess, or of worldly station. Our form of government is the fulness and beauty of the best features of government of your American Republic, and of all that are advanced upon this globe. Our officials are chosen for their qualities—I will not say for uprightness, because all who dwell there must be upright, else they would not have been attracted to those planes; they would not have gravitated there were they not filled with the spirit of integrity, honor and peace. We will not say officers are chosen for their intelligence, because all people there are intelligent—some, perhaps, are more advanced in mental development and achievement than others, but all are on the line of intellectual growth and expression or they would not be there.

Again, we will not say their officials are chosen because more loving, more tender and beneficent in their thought and compassion for their human brothers and sisters, because all are loving in those worlds, all are tender-hearted and have the desire to serve their fellowmen when opportunity permits, and therefore they are in accord with those who comprise what we may call the Spiritual Congress, and who occupy its halls of thought and expression.

Perhaps we had better pause here and let it go at that, for the difficulty of awakening in your minds a true conception of life, its methods, motives, purpose and achievements in spiritual worlds, appeals to us. There are no adequate forms of simile and metaphor, no mode of comparison in your world and affairs that we can employ for your comprehension, so we will say those higher-world officers are chosen because they are very wise and understand perhaps a little more fully than their constituents what will be for the blessing and educational advantage of the many. The central figure, whom you may liken to your president of the United States, is chosen wholly for his fitness for the office and for his adaptability in every essential to the needs of the people—for they have needs according to their line of life, as you have needs and demands here.

This executive officer is chosen, then, for his superior fitness in every respect—he is a wise soul, progressive, and is not swayed by prejudice or by minor considerations upon any question that may be brought before him. The same with his confreres and associates—they are wise men of lofty thought. There is no private emolument pertaining to their office, no gift, no "graft"—nothing at all that can appeal to selfishness, if selfishness could exist in those Councils of State. Consequently there goes out from those temples of government an influence of beauty and outflow that reaches the souls of their people to benefit and bless.

We do not say there is no prejudice in the minds of any people there—we will not claim there are no self-opinions there, no selfishness in the lives of individuals, for perfection has not been gained by any in that clime; they are still progressing onward, but their aspirations are high and their intentions are good. They desire to know more, to be better guided, to learn more and to rise to grander heights than they have yet attained. They are all open to conviction and amenable to teaching, and these minds of wisdom are selected to advise them how to act for the betterment of the whole, rather than for the blessing of a few.

These advisers have been chosen to be the helpers of the people—the common people, if you like the term; we do, for we love the common people and belong to them—are at any time admitted to the councils of their advisors, and those who hold the affairs of State in hand. Any thought, measure or question the people wish considered can be presented; it may seem at first to touch the welfare of but a few, but if may hold elements of beneficence, when brought to proper expression, for the good of all.

It is therefore very fitting that we should have counselors, especially as those chosen are not only wise and of liberal views, but are also intuitive and sensitive to the influx of wisdom and knowledge from still higher worlds of thought and human consciousness.

THEREFORE WE HAVE SIMPLE FORMS OF GOVERNMENT, A LAW OF ALL FOR ALL AND EACH FOR EACH, LIVING IN HARMONY TOGETHER; NONE SEEM POOR, NONE ARE NEGLECTED, NO ONE HAS TO REACH OUT AND ASK FOR AID TO KEEP WANT AND PAIN AWAY; ALL THINGS ARE FREE FOR HUMAN INTELLIGENCES IN THESE WORLDS OF BEAUTIFUL POSSESSIONS AND GRAND ENVIRONMENTS.

Picture to yourself a country of earth, of fine, equable climate and natural scenery; picture to your minds the most beautiful parks, symmetrical structures erected upon the glowing banks and slopes of streams and lakes, or in the fertile valleys and amid the groves of Nature as presented in her handiwork. Imagine all that life would be in such an Arcadia of favorable surroundings, where peace and plenty dwell, harmony abounds, where love reigns and beauty of thought and high quality of expression are the rule. Try to realize a life where no fear of pain, of sorrow, poverty and want, no hint or taint of crime would ever come. Were you now, friends, in such an Arcadia, you would not care to ever leave it for a higher world or more spiritual realm.

Yet, this is but a faint intimation of what such life is of which we have been talking, in the spiritual realms of activities and realities that are natural and belong to the human souls that have won such possessions, in their journey through this life—and perhaps through other spheres of spirit life.

The counselors and advisers are not continued on through the ages in any particular office—it is best for the development of human progress to have change, and other souls are expanding, growing in attributes that fit them for such offices, so that those who have been distinguished by dignity of position return to the ranks of the common people, serving as teachers and helpers to those in need of guidance and instruction, who receive educational forces thereby, while other officials come forward to fill the ranks of Statecraft.

All advance together, and all are happy. There is no harsh criticism, no denunciation to wound the sensibility of a human soul, but all is loving thought and exchange of affection. If the pupil does not understand, he goes to the teacher, not in fear and trembling, but in confidence and love, as you approach a kind earthly father; he asks his questions knowing that sweetest affection will incline the response and give him strength to understand the problems he desires to solve.

So, dear friends, having this perfect harmony of thought and attitude there is complete oneness between all mankind of those higher spheres, and all are filled with the desire to send forth an influence of helpfulness to those who are, in the sense of advancement, beneath them, and those who are spiritually undeveloped, not having sufficiently thrown off the crudeness of earth to allow them to rise to spirituelle states.

We also seek to aid beings who are groping along the mortal road with the desire to learn more of the life here as well as of the life hereafter. Such souls are sending their influence to illuminate your minds as best they can, bringing to you their sweetness and glory to encourage and comfort you, that you may grow a little stronger and happier, and to make you a little more able to bear the ills of this mortal life, with their benediction of peace, even though you may not know from whence this influence comes.

In closing this portion of our subject, permit us to add that the leaders and teachers in the departments of that good government that maintains on high are not confined to the male sex, but are composed of male and female wisdom souls; the question of sex plays no part in the selection of officials there, nor in settling the question of their fitness to lead and inspire.

Religious Observances.

You will observe that as these estates of being in that advanced condition of spiritual life and consciousness are realms of peace and harmony, the religious observances—if we can use that term with understanding—will be of a like character; but the idea of religion with us is simply right living. We claim for religion that it is living in peaceful association and harmony with our fellowmen, developing the sweet and beautiful attributes of spirituality, love to God—on Infinite Good—and love to man, Altruism in its fullest and highest sense. This, to our world, is religion.

Keeping oneself undefiled and unspotted from the world, visiting the widow and the fatherless with tender compassion and helpful cheer, giving unto humanity the best that is within us and receiving from humanity whatever can be absorbed for spiritual uplifting.

This is a simple religion; it calls for no creed or expression of creed, for no formulas of opinion or expressions of faith. It calls for no traditional assertions; it is simply going about doing good in the humble guise of unselfishness and not in the spirit of self-sufficiency and with pharisaical pride.

You mortals know that as you lift your hands to the morning light, as you raise your hands to the clear, bending skies, as you uplift your eyes to behold the glory of the stars, you pay no attention to your movements; they are involuntary, for you are simply glad to be alive. As you breathe in the richness and fullness of the morning upon this beautiful bay of Onset, in the glorious summer time, you are spiritually worshiping the beautiful, the good and the true. So these spirit people are glad to be living where such glorious conditions ever exist, glad to breathe in the light and influence of such a life. In doing good they pay no prideful attention to that service; they simply emanate the goodness as you exhale your breath upon this summer air.

But, dear friends, religious observances may be conducted in any form desired or cared for by the intelligent mind. If a company desires to meet in grove or garden, or on the banks of a flowery stream, and exchange thought concerning the spiritual significance of life and the many important questions arising therefrom, they may do so. If a few, or many, wish to meet in a temple erected by thought power—for there are many such edifices on high—and express their religious sentiments and emotions, they are free to do so. If, within those beautiful walls that are permeated by magnetic aura, light and intelligent energy, souls come together to sing songs, breathe out invocations to a mightier source of light and love, express interior convictions of life and duty, calling this an expression of religious fervor, they are at perfect liberty so to do. Many do convene in such fashion in the world of light beyond. There is no interference between man and man in the exercise of the devotional nature or what you call the religious emotions and elements in man. Hence, there is no inharmony in the atmosphere growing out of any condition of thought, enthusiasm or religious expression, any more than there is with forms of government or industrial processes and expressions on the spirit side.

AS WE HAVE SAID, THERE IS PERFECT EQUALITY; MAN AND WOMAN STAND SIDE BY SIDE, WALKING ON TO A HIGHER UNDERSTANDING OF LIFE, UPON EQUAL PLANES IN THE HALLS OF CONGRESS, IN TEMPLES OF ART AND MUSIC, IN THE LABORATORIES OF SCIENCE AND IN THE VARIOUS LINES OF EMPLOYMENT AND ACHIEVEMENT.

Man and woman marches on equally in the light of heaven, each doing a personal part, each complementing the other in achievement and aspiration, and both united in the realms of light and love for the benefit not only of the individual, the family, the community and the nation, but for the entire world; and in this we mean not only that world of decarnated spirits, but also this mortal world where there is greatest need of education and advancement of "society" into higher paths of understanding of its own duty toward humanity.

Society here has a duty here which it is constantly shirking. By this word "society," we mean that body of intelligent people that constitute a nation, a state, a city, or any community, and it owes a duty to its constituents that make up its life. It owes an educational force to its people, also a protecting power, and that is what it does not afford to them. Such society has its prisons for discipline, its houses of correction and its judicial courts; it has its various forms of detention and restraint, all of which are needed by its present conditions for the protection of its citizens who are law-abiding and who are upholding its institutions; but it should have more than this.

We admit that society has its schoolhouses and gives instruction to children and various individuals in a much-needed way, all of which is to be approved, but it owes much more to the world and to humanity. Society owes a system of protection—of instruction, guidance and paternalism to the waifs, the outcasts, those who are of the slums, of the criminal quarters, in order that the high tide of crime may be stayed, and that evil tendencies born in the child shall be suppressed.

When such society comes to an understanding of its plain duty and opens out its institutions of love and education—not of necessity buildings of brick and stone or iron, but of more real heart-love for and stone or iron, but of more real heart-love for humanity; and when society takes to its bosom the children of the slums and provides them with proper conditions for their unfoldment in higher attributes which will cause the pathways of humanity to open into grander forms of being and wider scenes of beauty on earth, then will the process of regeneration be most complete for individuals, so that when they pass from mortal life they will not be compelled to meet lower conditions of darkness in the spirit world; for all would be then self-centered in the atmosphere of love and peace, for they would then be so impelled forward by the principles of altruistic brotherhood as to be fitted to reach the higher scenes and states of consciousness, activity, expression, companionship, association, achievement and glory in the spiritual world, of human brotherhood.

One word more and we have done. That word is "altruism." We speak of human brotherhood, sing of it, talk of it in our earthly meetings and councils, as do some in spirit life who have not yet attained to its grandeur. All admire and believe in it; as a theory it is beautiful, but its practice has not yet been acquired.

Once the simple practice of the fraternal spirit or brotherhood of common interests is established among men, and we regard each other as brothers and sisters in love; when we desire to see all happy and free from pain, error, sorrow and suffering of any kind, and are willing to share our advantages with each other, our share of truth, knowledge, peace and love, we shall have gained on earth something of that pure condition of things that maintains in higher spheres, and which will clear the way for those forms of altruistic government in your nations, states and communities, that will be for the protection and progress of all, and not for the aggrandizement of the few. Humanity shall then see spiritual conditions more fully in operation on the earth plane, and peace and plenty shall prevail, while the hearts of the people shall be triumphantly illuminated by the grand light and glorious love of the angel world.

EYESIGHT RESTORED

Eyeglasses May Be Abandoned.

A Wonderful Discovery That Corrects Afflictions of the Eye Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for the relief of most forms of disease, as a new method—the Actina treatment—has been discovered which eliminates the necessity of former torturous methods. There is no risk or necessity of experimenting, as many people report having been cured of failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye after being pronounced incurable, through this grand discovery.

Rev. C. Brunner, Pastor of the Reformed Church, Bridgeport, Conn., writes:—"So far your Actina has done me good and my eyesight has really improved and I have good hope that by continuing, my eyesight will be restored."

Mrs. T. F. Moyle, Watertord, Wis., writes:—"About two years ago I was taken with iritis in both eyes and nearly went blind and it was thought an operation would be necessary. I sent for an Actina last April and it has taken all the inflamation out and my eyes are now well.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother, of cataracts."

Hundreds of other testimonials will be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept 843B, 811 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

It comprises 268 choice selections of poetry and music, embodying the highest moral sentiment, and free from all sectarianism. Price, 50 cents.

"AS IT IS TO BE."

A Very Suggestive Work Which Beams With Spiritual Truths.

This is a beautiful book, by Cora Lynn Daniels, and it scintillates with grand spiritual thought. An idea of this work can be obtained by reading the titles of a few of the chapters therein:

The process of Dying; Light and Spirit; The Law of Attraction; Senses of the Spirit; What Is unconscious Will; Fear; Astrology; The God-Soul of Man; The Drama; A Day in Heaven. Price $1.00.

A Remarkable Case.

The Trial of E. W. Vanderbilt---Full Particulars by a Prominent Lawyer.

Mr. Vanderbilt was a widower, and is a wealthy lumber merchant in Brooklyn, New York. He is an intelligent business man, honored and respected in the community where he lives. He is a professed Spiritualist, and has been for many years, and as such, he believes that disembodied spirits of departed mortals can, under favorable circumstances, return and communicate with men here on earth.

He had been in the habit of attending the meetings held by Mrs. Pepper, a medium who drew large audiences in Brooklyn, New York.

He finally married her and conveyed certain property to her, and it is alleged that he made a will in her favor.

Mrs. Pepper-Vanderbilt.

Mrs. Pepper had been divorced from her former husband, Mr. Pepper.

She was a medium held in great esteem by many, gave seances, lectured, and finally organized a Spiritualistic church in Brooklyn, New York. She drew large audiences—drew largely, it is said, from the different churches, and on that account, it is claimed by many, that she incurred the ill will and enmity of Christians generally, and of the different churches in that place. She finally was married to Mr. Vanderbilt, and the finale is yet to be seen.

I never attended any of Mrs. Pepper's meetings or seances, and have no acquaintance with her or with Mr. Vanderbilt. I have never seen either of them, and know nothing of them except what I have read in the papers. So far as I know, Mrs. Pepper-Vanderbilt may be one of the biggest frauds that ever plied her vocation on earth, and the lowest in the scale of humanity, or she may be one of the best and most remarkable psychic mediums that ever lived, and one of the purest and most honorable women of the present century.

Of these matters I have no knowledge sufficient to constitute a belief. I therefore have nothing to say, either in favor of these parties or against them.

I DESIRE, HOWEVER, TO SAY A FEW WORDS IN REGARD TO THE COURT PROCEEDINGS, BY WHICH MR. E. W. VANDERBILT WAS ADJUDGED TO BE INSANE, ON ACCOUNT OF HIS BELIEF IN SPIRITUALISM.

The Complainant.

Miss Vanderbilt, the unmarried daughter of E. W. Vanderbilt, by his first wife, was the complainant. From current reports, and from the evidence taken at the hearing of the case, it appears that the complainant, Miss Vanderbilt, has been a truant at school, a spendthrift, and an ungrateful daughter at home, squandering her father's property and despoiling his estate. She was offended because her father deeded certain property—some claim all his property—to his present wife, Mrs. Pepper-Vanderbilt. It is, however, whispered in various quarters that the daughter was advised, urged ahead, and aided by the churches in Brooklyn, to prosecute her father on the charge of insanity. However that may be, she entered a complaint against her father, charging him with being INSANE and mentally INCOMPETENT to manage his own affairs, on the grounds that he is a SPIRITUALIST, and that he BELIEVES DISEMBODIED SPIRITS can communicate with mortals.

The Court.

A Lunacy Commission was appointed, and a Sheriff's Jury impanneled to determine by legal procedure, the question as to whether the respondent was mentally incompetent to manage his property and financial affairs. The complainant introduced a mass of testimony; little, if any, of it was relevant or pertinent to the question at issue. Evidence was introduced and admitted on the part of the complainant to prove that Mr. Vanderbilt is a Spiritualist, and to prove that he believed that disembodied spirits could return and communicate with mortals. The complainant, however, was permitted to go still further. She placed upon the witness stand a woman, called "The Woman in Blue," who was ashamed, or afraid, to reveal her identity. She took the witness stand heavily veiled, and gave her name as Mrs. Darrell, which subsequently proved to be false. Her name was Mrs. Darrow. She gave the location of her residence, which on examination proved to be an uninhabited place.

She was permitted to testify that Mrs. Pepper-Vanderbilt was an immoral woman, that she practiced fraud in her Spiritualistic manifestations through the aid of accomplices. She was permitted to testify that Mrs. Pepper-Vanderbiltt was not a virtuous woman.

This testimony was controverted by witnesses on the part of the respondent. After many days in taking testimony of this character, the Sheriff's jury brought in its verdict, as might have been expected, to the effect that Mr. E. W. Vanderbilt WAS INSANE BECAUSE HE BELIEVED DISEMBODIED SPIRITS COULD COMMUNICATE WITH MORTALS.

And here I have no hesitancy in saying, that during a period of more than thirty-five years in active practice before State and Federal Courts, and before the highest judicial tribunals of the land, I have never seen such a travesty of justice as was enacted in the trial and conviction of E. W. Vanderbilt. In justification of this statement let me give you a few extracts from the record, as reported by the New York American:

"The Lunacy Commission called upon Mrs. Pepper-Vanderbilt to produce a Spiritualistic manifestation in Court, so that the Commission and the jury could see for themselves that Mr. Vanderbilt was not the victim of an insane delusion. * * * Over and over it was explained to her that if she demonstrated her claims, her husband's sanity would be established and he would win a complete victory in the pending suit.

* * * "Mr. Ketchum, chairman of the Committee, said to Mrs. Pepper-Vanderbilt: 'Do you understand that Mr. Vanderbilt is said to be insane because he believes that Spiritualists have communicated through you to him? * * * It is claimed that he is a lunatic, and that claim is based in part on his belief in certain manifestations of communications with disembodied spirits."

These monstrous statements made to the witness and jury by the chairman of the Commission conclusively show that the Commission was prejudiced against the respondent; that it was an unfit tribunal to have jurisdiction of the case; that it had no knowledge of the laws of mentality, or of psychic phenomena; that it had no knowledge of judicial procedure, or of the weight or relevancy of evidence. It proved conclusively that the Commission had no intention of administering equal and impartial justice. Think of the preposterous attitude of the Commision! That a man's sanity, or his mental capacity to manage his own affairs depends upon the character or conduct of his wife. Think of it!

If a man's wife is virtuous he is sane; if not virtuous he is insane. If she is an honest person, her husband is sane; if dishonest or fraudulent in her practices, her husband is insane. If a man believes in the philosophy and religion of Spiritualism he is insane; if he does not so believe he is sane. If he believes that disembodied spirits can comunicate with mortals he is insane; if not he is sane. With such declarations as these laid down by that august judicial tribunal (?) to the witnesses and the jury, could it be expected that a verdict or judgment could be reached other than that the RESPONDENT WAS INSANE? But think of the monstrous statements coming from the judicial tribunal having jurisdiction of the case, which outrival the judicial actions of the INFAMOUS SCROGGS and JEFFEREYS. It is a menace to the life and liberty of every man and woman in the State of New York. And if the courts shall ultimately sustain the findings of the Commission, no man, woman or child will be safe under the Constitution and laws of the State. Should anyone desire to "railroad" a man to the insane asylum, or to deprive him of the custody of his property, all that he need do, under the rules laid down by this Comission, is to place his wife on trial and prove that SHE IS NOT VIRTUOUS, or prove that SHE IS NOT HONEST. All that one need do is to prove that the PERSON COMPLAINED AGAINST IS A SPIRITUALIST, or prove that he believes DISEMBODIED SPIRITS CAN COMMUNICATE WITH MORTALS.

In view of these things one is led to exclaim:

"Oh! Justice,
Thou art fled to brutish beasts
And men have lost their reason."

Questions of Law.

The Constitution of the United States and of the several States vests every man over the age of twenty-one with plenary power to dispose of his property according to his own judgment. Hence, the fact that a man conveys his property to his wife is no evidence of insanity, and cannot be legitimately used against him in evidence until evidence from other sources tending to prove him incompetent has been adduced, and not then, if conveyed for a valuable consideration, or for love and affection, which under the law is a valuable consideration. The evidence that Mr. Vanderbilt conveyed his property to his wife does not in the remotest degree tend to prove that he is mentally incompetent to manage his own affairs. On the other hand, it may prove his good judgment, prudence and foresight. It is a presumption of law that a man is innocent till he is proved to be guilty; and that he is sane until he is proved to be insane. And under the maxim of law: Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus (false in one particular, false in all), the testimony of "THE WOMAN IN BLUE" should have been disregarded by the jury if she perjured herself as to her name or residence.

It is not always necessary, however, to prove a person insane in order to establish the fact of his mental incompetency to manage his own affairs. The law presumes, and it is so enacted in the Statutes, that a male under twenty-one years of age is incompetent to manage his own affairs, or to convey his property. Now, how would you prove in Court that such a person is incompetent to convey his property? Under this ruling laid down by this Commission you would prove that he is a Spiritualist; that he believes in some kind of a religion or philosophy that the Judge presiding at the trial does not believe, or you would prove that his mother, or his sister is a prostitute. The legal process, however, would be to prove that he is under age. In case of a man over twenty-one, the fact of his incapacity to manage his own affairs may be proved, not by proving the bad character of his wife, nor by proving his religious or philosophical belief, but rather by the testimony of business men who have had dealings with him in the line of his vocation, or who have examined him in business and property affairs, in values of property, and in the varied intricacies of business and financial affairs. Let such men testify as to his business capacity. No man's mental capacity can be established by proving the bad character of his wife or relatives.

SPIRITUALISM.

The belief that the human spirit survives the dissolution of the body, and under certain circumstances can return and communicate with men on earth, is as old as the human race, and this constitutes the distinctive belief of Spiritualists. The believers in Spiritualism are numbered by millions, and are to be found in all lands, and in every country upon the earth's surface. Within its ranks are some of the most brilliant intellects of the twentieth century of civilization. Within its ranks are presidents and professors of colleges and universities. It numbers among its adherents statesmen of the highest order, monarchs and rulers of nations. Many ministers of the Christian churches are Spiritualists, but they dare not announce it to their congregations. The churches to-day are honeycombed with Spiritualism, but the members of these churches have not the manhood or womanhood to publicly announce the fact. And where the old style Christian preaching of eternal torture is had, the congregations are depleted, and the pews are vacant. But are these men—are any men—to be judged insane because of their religious or philosophical beliefs? If that be so, the next step will be to re-establish the ROMAN INQUISITION, and to send men to the rack, the torture and the stake, on account of their beliefs. Was Socrates, whose name shall live with illustrious glory through all the coming ages, insane? He believed that a spirit attended him through all his life, prompting him to pursue the good and to shun the evil. Yet Socrates was condemned to death by ignorant and superstitious men 399 years before Jesus walked the shores of Galilee or stood upon the Mount of Olives, because he believed in spirits (gods) which the Athenians did not believe in. Was Homer, the glory of whose name will never die; was Homer, who wrote the never-dying songs: the Odyssey and Illiad; was Homer, who believed that disembodied spirits could communicate with mortals; was Homer, I say, insane because of these beliefs? Were Sophocles, Euripedes and Aeschylus, the immortal tragic poets of Greece, insane because they believed in the intercommunication between disembodied spirits and mortals? Were Phidias and Praxiteles, the greatest artists the world has ever known, insane because they believed that spirits could communicate with mortals? Was Jesus INSANE when, on the Mount, he believed that he held converse with the disembodied spirits of Moses and Elijah? Were Peter, James and John INSANE when they believed that Jesus held converse with the disembodied spirits of those Hebrew prophets? IS IT ANY MORE EVIDENCE OF INSANITY TO BELIEVE THAT A DISEMBODIED SPIRIT CAN HOLD CONVERSE WITH MORTALS THAN IT IS TO BELIEVE THAT AN UNEMBODIED GOD CAN SPEAK TO MAN? On almost every page of the Bible you find it recorded: "And God said unto Moses," "And the Lord said unto Aaron," "And the Lord said unto Samuel"—and so on throughout the Old Testament "God said unto" all the prophets and priests of Israel. I therefore repeat, is it not as much evidence of insanity to believe that an unembodied God can converse with men, as it is to believe that a disembodied spirit can speak to mortals? If it be a fact that a man is insane because he believes he can converse with disembodied spirits, then all of the prophets and priests of Israel were insane—the entire Jewish race was insane.

If a man is insane because of such a belief, then Jesus and his apostles were INSANE, and all Christians are hopelessly INSANE.

But away with such nonsense. The time has passed when men shall be condemned, or led to the INQUISITION or STAKE, or be adjudged INSANE because of their beliefs. We expect that the findings of the Commission which had jurisdiction of the Vanderbilt case will be reversed, and that the Commission and its chairman will be relegated to their deserved oblivion.

Returned Home.

A Glowing Tribute to the Life of Hon. Athelston Gaston.

"I sometimes hold it half a sin
To put in words the grief I feel;
For words, like Nature, half reveal
And half conceal the Soul within."

It is next to impossible to find words that will fittingly express our grief and horror over the seeming accident that has taken our beloved friend and co-worker, Hon. Athelston Gaston, from our midst. He has been a familiar figure for so many years among the Spiritualists of the Nation that it hardly seems possible that he is to be no longer with us in bodily form. He has taken his departure in the sunset time of life, when his wise counsels were most needed among his brethren. As a mortal he has fallen asleep just at a time when life's shadows were lengthening toward the west; when night's purple curtain was wrapping itself around the years to conceal them from his gaze. He had become weary of his earth's journeyings and no doubt longed for the rest that is now his.

The way he went wrenches our hearts because of the suddenness of the shock of his vanishing from our sight. Perhaps there was no other way for him to go back to the home whence he came nearly seventy years ago. He had made this earth of ours a visit of almost three score and ten years, as we measure time—busy years, years of hardship, of defeats, of joys and of sorrows; but he has harvested them all now and their lessons are clear to the eyes in his new life beyond the shadows. His daughter and his beloved wife, two brothers and all of the dear ones of his father's household were there to give him greeting, to explain to him in his bewilderment some of the things he could not quite understand. Ever since he was seventeen years of age he has been a devoted Spiritualist; hence the life immortal was not a strange one to his interior being. He was bewildered, solely because of the sudden change from the mortal to the spiritual state.

Athelston Gaston has left his mark upon this earth of ours. He has shown us what a clear brain, willing hands and determined will can accomplish. He fought the battle of life bravely and won many material and spiritual victories. He was on the unpopular side in religion and politics, and his success in his many undertakings is more to his credit because of that fact. His residence city was opposed to his political views, yet he was twice elected its mayor, each time by a large majority, and was honored with other official positions that were within the gift of that municipality. In 1898 he was the democratic candidate for Congress from the 25th Pennsylvania District, and although it was usually republican by 4,000 majority, he was triumphantly elected and served his constituents with conscientious fidelity in the House of Representatives in Washington.

In the business world he made right and justice his motto and endeavored to follow the old rule of "live and let live". As fortune came to him he was willing to share with those less favored than himself, and many are there who are able to-day to bless his bounties to them, given, as they always were, in secret. He was a lover of children and always had a cheerful, pleasant word for them whenever he came into contact with them. He made his religion a part of his daily living, and inspired those who associated with him to do likewise. I met him for the first time September 28, 1887; from that day to the present he has been my friend, his home was ever open to me whenever I desired to come to him as a guest, and he and his good wife never wearied in their efforts to cheer and inspire me to persevere in my undertakings in life. When trouble peculiar to school life vexed me, it was his voice who comforted and cheered me on. His admonition always being, "Let your conscience be your guide". He hated expediency, for he believed in principle. It was through his influence that I first went to Cassadaga, where, for many years I was identified with the public work of Spiritualism.

Mr. Gaston was connected with that Camp from 1881 to 1902. During seventeen years of that period he was president of the Association. It is more than probable that he held the honors he received from his friends at Cassadaga in higher esteem than he did any of those that came to him in other departments of life. He contributed liberally to the support of the movement at that point, and was a generous giver to various public charities at other points. During the past fourteen years he has frequently attended our National Conventions, and on several occasions was a working delegate. He felt, however, that his work was with Cassadaga Camp, rather than with any other activity. He recently published a valuable work containing some of the choicest spiritual gems of thought I have ever seen in print. This book cannot fail to do those who read it a world of good.

It seems to us as his friends that he might have been spared to us ten or fifteen years longer to give us the benefit of his cheery presence and to inspire the younger workers to persevere in their endeavors to serve the cause of truth. It was not to be, however, and we must now accept the fact of his departure and learn the larger truth of reconciliation a little later. He now has the light of the soul world to guide him as he goes forward over the roadway of eternal progression. Upward and onward will he take his course. He has made this world of ours better for his brief visit to it and his return home ripe in years and rich in the treasures of the soul.

No doubt he had his failings, for all mortals make mistakes, but he had the ability to rise to great heights in his spiritual thought and made every experience a step upward. We shall meet him no more in the mortal. Ours will now be the blessed privilege of greeting him in our inner lives in the spirit.

I shall miss my friend, helper, counsellor and brother during the remainder of my own earth journey, but memory will sacredly hold in store all of those helpful and blessed associations of the bygone years. We are parted in the mortal, but even that is not for aye. He is simply gone before me a little time, stolen out of the night of earthly environments into the beauteous day in the Eden of God. To me he is saying:

"Then steal away; give little warning;
Choose thine own time;
Say not Good-night, but in some fairer clime
Bid me Good-morning."

In loving memory.

HE IS A SPIRITUALIST.

But Kicks Violently at Any Attempt to Force a Church or Jesus Upon Him.

To the Editor:—In No. 932 of The Progressive Thinker, third page, fourth column, is an article headed "Spiritualism and Religion," written by Dr. Edward Page, of Boston, which I read with a great deal of satisfaction, as he voices my sentiments exactly.

What is a Spiritualist?

To be one, a person must believe or know that man has a spiritual part as well as physical; that the spiritual survives the death of the physical; that under proper conditions the spiritual, after the death of the physical, can communicate with those still in the physical form. If a person believes these three points, he or she is a spiritualist.

Spiritualism is either a scientific fact, based upon natural law, the same as any other science, or it is a delusion and a humbug, and in either case has no more connection with religion, morals, or any code of ethics than has chemistry, pneumatics, or any other of the sciences. It is simply a means of communication between two individuals, one in the form and the other out.

If Spiritualism is a religion, so is the telegraph, telephone, post railroad train, mail coach, and every barefooted messenger boy.

Like the doctor, I have been a Spiritualist for fifty years and more, and have watched with shame and sorrow the change going on in our ranks.

Spiritualism don't owe Christianity a cent; it has always been our foe and persecutor, and now, "tell it not in Gath," we have a church of our own, and a Jesus, and are crowding in with the other churches, so as to be respectable, and be called "reverend" and get half-rate R. R. fare.

The trouble with many people is that they confound the terms "religion" and "morality," when in fact there is no connection there. Religion is faith, superstition, form and ceremonies, while morality consists in doing as you would be done by, and acting up to the dictates of conscience. It often happens that in countries and among people where there is the most religion, there you find the least morality.

TRENCHANT ARTICLE.

The Writer, a Lawyer, Gives His Impressive Views of the Divorce Question.

To the Editor:—I have just been handed a copy of your paper containing an article entitled "The Divorce Evil, So-Called," with the request that I answer it from the standpoint of a lawyer.

In the first place, so far as denying its assertions are conceded, I have no answer to make. The writer, Mr. R. A. Dague is obviously correct as far as he has gone; his only error being that he in the handling of the subject has left half the truth untold.

The Romish church as a unit, and many (I thank God not all) of the Protestant clergy have so far forgotten the God they claim to represent, that upon the Sabbath day they proclaim Him from their pulpits to be the God of Love, Tenderness, Happiness and Charity, while throughout the balance of the week in innumerable channels, by act and utterance, they emphatically repudiate their pulpit philosophy.

There is a bit of advice as true as it is old. It is, "Always tell your physician and your lawyer the whole truth."

Supposing, for the sake of argument, that the women I have represented in numerous divorce actions, have suppressed, through motives of modesty, one-half the truth—even then the tales of debauchery, cruelty, torture and horror that have reached my ears from the lips of poor, frail, trembling wrecks of women, would bring tears almost to the eyes of a sphinx.

If the lawyer were to advocate the enactment of a law subjecting women to a condition of slavery as understood previous to the civil war, the press and pulpit, from ocean to ocean would hurl anathemas of righeous indignation upon his head, yet with hundreds of thousands of women existing, not living, in a condition that is a veritable hell, suffering the tortures of the damned and the agony of the doomed, the holy (?) creatures cry, HALT! to any advocated law, or the enforcement of any law that will break their chains, cure their affliction, and bestow upon them the indescribable joy of the peace and freedom that the Almighty God intended they should have.

I can and do now and here declare without a moment's fear of successful controversion, that the condition of thousands upon thousands of these poor creeatures is worse than was that of the negro slave before the war. Of my own personal knowledge in the trial of divorce cases, I know whereof I speak, and were it not for the fact that common decency forbid the publication of such details in a paper of this character, I could and would offer a fund of evidence of acts, facts and conditions so damnably horrible that even the minister of Christ (erroneously so-called) would throw up his hands in horror over the revelation of truths, to which he is at present a stranger, and of facts in his own bailiwick, of which he has lived his life in ignorance.

The eagerness of a certain portion of humanity to criticise and sit in judgment upon matters of which it is totally ignorant, is a well known fact; but the proneness of the clergy to discuss questions, and formulate conclusions of fact, when it is woefully and conspicuously ignorant of matters in the premises, is truly painful, and yet these so-called disciples of God, who believe in subjecting woman to an existence too horrible to contemplate, and in protecting the fiend who holds her captive, dares to lift his hands in prayer and supplication to God, and to send missionaries to Europe to Christianize races who can and do show the true spirit of real Christianity to a far greater extent than can be found in the homes of these reverend gentlemen.

And yet almost weekly the wail of the pulpit orators is heard with the old familiar query, "Why are we preaching to empty pews?" Ordinarily intelligence can answer this:

Because, although posing as the minister of God, you are not preaching and teaching the true, obvious will of the Almighty Creator, nor can you so long as you stoop so low as to advocate throwing innocent women and children into a cauldron of agony and torture and putting the lid on to keep them there.

May the pews of such creatures become emptier even than they already are, and the iniquitous causes thereof relegated to a welcome and deserved oblivion.

Most respectfully yours,

C. A. R.

Good Books OF ELIZABETH TOWNE.

JUST HOW TO CONCENTRATE.

This book tells how to use the wonderful forces of being to promote a happy, harmonious and healthy life. It is practical, helpful. Tells how to develop and practice concentration, train the emotions, improve the memory and direct all powers for the betterment of conditions. The very thing for those who feel tied to a life of barren drudgery. Contains the key to better conditions of mind, body and environment. Bound in dove color and green heavy paper; 31 pages. Price, 25 cents.

HAPPINESS AND MARRIAGE.

If you are looking for cut and dried advice on marriage and harmony in the home you won't find it in this book. Most books on marriage are about as much alive as salt codfish. This book isn't that kind. "Happiness and Marriage" is alive, and deals with life. It treats of the every-day problems that confront all married people, and tells how to solve them successfully. It is not a book of theory, but of practice—based on practical experience. Altogether this is one of the most original and striking books the author has yet produced. "Happiness and Marriage" is well printed on heavy laid paper, and contains a portrait of the author. Paper covers, 80 pages. Price, 50 cents.

JUST HOW TO WAKE THE SOLAR PLEXUS.

This unique booklet teaches that the Solar Plexus is a Center or Storehouse of Energy and Power. When this center is normally active it Radiates Life, Health and Strength to the whole body, as the sun radiates warmth and life to the vast system of worlds of which it is the center. The Solar Plexus may be called the Sun Center of the Human Body. The Hindoos of India say that the soul functions through this center The book gives deep breathing exercises of great value, and teaches how to awaken the Solar Plexus to fuller life and mortal activity. Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the most famous woman author in America, says of this book: "It contains a fortune in value if you practice the simple exercises given. It is complete in itself, and is not an introduction to, or advertisement of a larger work. It contains in itself the full teachings of the author upon the subject of the Solar Plexus. Price, 25 cents.

JUST HOW TO COOK MEALS WITHOUT MEAT.

The Multum in parvo of cook books up to date. If you want to know how to live without using animal food this book will help you. It is the result of the author's own actual experience in adopting a vegetarian diet. Space is devoted to the consideration of Soups, Salads and Deserts and several practical menus are given. A booklet for every-day people. It does not tell how to cook elaborate course dinners, but for every-day living it is just the thing. You need the book whether you are a vegetarian or not. Price. 25 cents.

Books by Lilian Whiting

To the thoughtful reader who loves spiritual and inspiring themes, the books of Lilian Whiting especially appeal. They are full of helpful thoughts, and as Prof. Louis J. Block has said of them, "A stimulant to generous action, and an avenue to spiritual heights from which the outlook is broad and cheering."

The Psychic Riddle.

By I. K. Funk, D.D., LL.D., Editor-in-Chief of "The Standard Dictionary"; Author of "The Widow's Mite, and Other Psychic Phenomena," "The Next Step in Evolution," etc.

A book full of psychic suggestions, supported by startling experiences, all told in a wonderfully conservative way. It harmonizes with the judgment pronounced by The Review of Reviews, New York, on the author's previous publication of this subject: "A very sensible, cautious, level-headed piece of work all through;" and also with the judgment on the same book pronounced by the Cleveland Record: "There has never been so fair and painstaking a book put forth on this subject as this one." Price, $1.00.

MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

Modern Spirit Return burst upon the world like a bright morning sun upon the darkness and fog of a beclouded atmophere. The darkness of ignorance and the fog of superstition held and enveloped the mind of the civilized world.

Spirit Return is at once the grandest est and most beautiful fact known to mankind. That those who have passed from human sight, whose fleshly bodies have been consigned to their kindred dust, do yet live in realms unseen by mortal eye, and can return and make their presence known in various ways, must be recognized by the thoughtful mind as a fact of wonderful interest and importance, and possessing a grandeur entirely its own.

And that the dearly loved ones who have passed out of our earthly lives, whom we can no longer hear nor see with our physical senses, can come to us and again commune with us and thus again enter into our lives, with the proved continuation of their affection, friendship and love—what thought can be more beautifully helpful and soul-inspiring than this? It cannot be otherwise than that the world will be made better by this knowledge, if allowed its natural and proper influence in the lives and characters of people.

The influence of modern Spirit Return in dispelling the long taught unnatural and superstitious dogmas and errors of so-called orthodoxy, can hardly be over-estimated. Old-time beliefs have been toned down till scarcely a vestige of them remains except in moss-covered, outgrown creeds of churches whose members, from clergy down to laymen, are actually ashamed of the dogmas formulated in days of former ignorance and inhuman beliefs embodied in creeds to bind the minds and consciences of the people. The minister who now believes and preaches the former common belief in hell and the endless damnation of sinners, is a rara avis, and is looked upon as a "back number" by his clerical brethren.

So it is that spiritual light and truth is spreading and the joyful news brought to the world by Spirit Return is advancing in all quarters, the churches included, and the world of scientists not omitted. The poet, J. C. Underhill says:

In our haste and in our blindness oft
in sadness we have said:
"Better that we grope in darkness than be numbered with the dead."

Now a light is shining 'round us—lo! the angel world is here!
Death is shorn of nameless terrors—spirit loved ones now appear.

Angel friends have built a ladder from the mortal to the skies,
And descending and ascending, fill our souls with glad surprise.

Lo! the night of gloom is ended,
banished by the light of day,
And the brightness of the glory
melts the shadows all away.

Set the bells of heaven ringing, echoing over land and sea,
Ringing out the night of sadness, ringing joy that man is free.

Please take notice what Spiritualism has accomplished under the present and past unfavorable conditions, and then with bowed heads consider how much more advanced in everything it might be to-day, if the fakes and frauds had been driven from our ranks at the start.

A New Leaf in the History of Spiritualism

An Impressive Portraiture of the Actual Condition of Our Cause.

THIS ISSUE OF THE PROGRESSIE THINKER ILLUSTRATES IN AN EXCEEDINGLY MARKED DEGREE THE ACTUAL CONDITION OF SPIRITUALISM WITH REFERENCE TO THE CLASS WHICH HAS INFESTED OUR RANKS FOR THE LAST FIFTY YEARS, AND WHOSE SPIRIT MANIFESTATIONS ARE ENTIRELY OF EARTHLY ORIGIN, HAVING NO CONNECTION WHATEVER WITH THE SPIRIT WORLD, THUS BRINGING OUR CAUSE INTO DISREPUTE, AND THROWING A DARK CLOUD OVER IT. THE TIME FOR ACTION ON THE PART OF THE N. S. A. HAS ARRIVED.

Facts, and Facts Alone, are Outlined in the Following, Touching on the Actual Condition of Our Cause, and Thus Enlightening All Spiritualists in Reference to Its Status. It is Only by Looking Squarely at Defects, and Realizing Their Existence, that One Can Devise a Remedy Therefor.

There is nothing more important in the material universe than to thoroughly understand, so far as possible, the nature of the object you are critically examining or controlling. The engineer, in whose hands are placed the lives of many on the train which he is propelling at terrific speed, is ever vigilant, active and thoughtful in his efforts to detect defects in the engine he is controlling. In fact, whenever the engine is at rest for a few hours, skilled mechanics, with painstaking care, examine every part of it, SEARCHING FOR DEFECTS, and if found, remedying the same before human lives are entrusted to its propelling powers in moving a train.

DEFECTS must be remedied wherever they exist, or something disastrous is sure to follow.

In the electrical connections, if any DEFECT therein, how fatal to life and limb is the "live wire."

The aeronaut discovers too late the DEFECT in his balloon, and a cruel death results.

The engine was DEFECTIVE, an explosion followed, the steamboat was ruined and hundreds meet a watery grave.

In all the multitudinous walks of life, DEFECTS stalk forth like DEMONS, and are equally as dangerous.

A DEFECTIVE bridge, a DEFECTIVE bolt of iron, an IMPERFECT connection of parts in any structure, or the least little weakness of certain material, may end in a terrible catastrophe.

A single sentence may result in a terrific war, and a defective brain center blind the action of the mind.

A religion that can't DISROBE ITSELF for fear of DEFECTS being plainly discerned, is destructive in its tendencies.

To continually look for the beautiful, the perfect, the good, the refined, the soul-elevating, ignoring evil in all respects, one becomes blind to DEFECTS, dwarfed in his development, ignorant of the actual condition of the world, and cannot possibly be an effective instrument to carry on the work of reform.

He who has a knowledge of what constitutes a DEFECT in the various departments of life, is prepared to advance rapidly.

If no DEFECTS, there would be nothing to improve.

The one who constantly looks on the bright side of life, ostracizing the dark side, the imperfect side, the side of crime, poverty, degradation and misery, becomes spiritually blind in certain directions, and is only half developed.

If one grows spiritually, the defects of his nature must recede in the exact proportion as he advances.

We are led to this line of thought by the tendency of many Spiritualists to COVER UP the dark spots of what is known as Modern Spiritualism, and rising in open rebellion against those who make it their business at any time to expose its defects.

When we commenced the disagreeable task of exposing fake mediumship there was a commotion all along the line; dire distress was manifested, open rebellion in fact, fearing that we would injure the Cause beyond repair. The DEFECTS we have pointed out were startlingly impressive as well as alarming. For fifty years there had been a rotten current of fraud, deception, trickery and falsehoods bearing the cognomen of mediumship, in physical phenomena, in the exchange of tests, in the dark seance, in leading people astray, in making ruinous investments through the advice of Jesuitical spirits, etc., etc., etc., until we resolved to thoroughly examine the DEFECTS in our system of philosophy and religion, and devise a remedy therefor. First, there was a large pamphlet published under the startling title of "THE VAMPIRES OF ONSET." It detailed most minutely the fraud and deception carried on there some twenty or more years ago. The author of the work makes the following prefatory remarks:

"The compiler of this little pamphlet IS NOT an opponent of Spiritualism; on the contrary, he has for many years been interested in the study of psychical phenomena. He is proud to say that he counts among his steadfast friends many well-known Spiritualists, and has their approval of this work. He fully believes all rational, law-abiding men and women among Spiritualists and sympathetic investigators will indorse all efforts to show up the records of some of THE VILE CREATURES who, under the mask of mediumship, have been coining money from the most sacred feelings of the human heart; who, with diabolical cunning and all the artifices of the mountebank and prostitute, have plied their wiles to victimize and demoralize heart-broken mourners seeking knowledge of their beloved dead.

"The claim sometimes made that these venders of spurious wares, these destroyers of manhood and womanhood, and wreckers of virtue, have mediumistic powers MAY WELL SEEM ABSURD to ordinary common sense, and those who admit the claim should regard them as all the more dangerous on that account. That such vermin are permitted among people claiming to be civilized and respectable is a matter of profound astonishment to a large number of Spiritualists, and to the world at large; but that THESE PESTS should be publicly recognized and treated with consideration and courtesy due only to decent people, and this by officers of the Onset Camp and leading representatives of the Spiritualists in Boston and elsewhere, is a MATTER FOR SERIOUS ALARM AND ENERGETIC PROTEST. If this brief but authentic compilation shall assist in awakening virtuous Spiritualists to the deplorable state of affairs at Onset and elsewhere, so inimical to public morals and proper study of psychical phenomena, the purpose of its publication will have been accomplished."

Boston, Mass.

At that time the frauds had great control in all the various camps. They had to be considered from every point of view. To antagonize them was dangerous, and "very injurious to the best interest of the camps and the Cause," was by many asserted. Not a single paper dared to wage an inveterate war against these vampires. The Banner of Light, under Mr. Colby, quietly and without remonstrance, let the tricksters prevail. The Religio-Philosophical Journal, after a spurt of opposition, like a sick kitten, subsided and finally died,

"THE VAMPIRES OF ONSET" was a most startling production, and should be read by every Spiritualist—too bad that it is now out of print.

IS IT WRONG TO POINT OUT THE DEFECTS OF AN ENGINE, AND THUS SAVE, PERHAPS, THE LIVES OF HUNDREDS?

IS IT WRONG TO POINT OUT THE DEFECTS OF A BOLT, OR CERTAIN CONNECTIONS IN THE MACHINERY OF AN OCEAN STEAMER AND THUS SAVE A WRECK, AND A TERRIBLE LOSS OF HUMAN LIFE?

No! a thousand times no!

Can it be wrong, then, to point out the DEFECTS in Spiritualism—some of them most glaring—and thus save people from being led astray by bogus messages, or badly swindled?

No! a million times, No!

"But "The Vampires of Onset" was a timely book. It started a new vibration and set the masses to thinking as never before. But it did not complete the task of exposing the DEFECTS in our ranks, for they were MOUNTAIN HIGH. Then came the exposure of Hugh Moore, Mabel Aber Jackman, and others, at Lily Dale, showing conclusively that their "spirit" manifestations were entirely of earthly origin—simply the work of human beings. This exposure shook the camp from center to circumference, and shocked Spiritualists everywhere. Some of the management at the camp were timid, afraid that disastrous results might follow, but instead the camp flourished financially and spiritually, and Lily Dale gradually recuperated from the dire experience it had. Since that time scores of materializing mediums, one after another, have been exposed time and again, and IN EVERY CASE—NOT A SINGLE EXCEPTION!—the spirit proved to be the medium or a confederate dressed in artificial toggery.

Had Lily Dale, Onset, Lake Pleasant, and other camps, this year caught the materialized spirits, in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand they would have proved to be human vultures imposing on the credulity of a long-suffering public.

That our camps still need a cleansing process—a purifying process—in relation to the dark seances, is evident.

Since "THE VAMPIRES OF ONSET" was published, other pamphlets and books have followed explaining the tricks of those mediums who resort to fraud.

One pamphlet, of 64 pages, is by a life-long Spiritualist, one esteemed for his sterling character and devotion to truth, and whose wife is a most excellent medium. The title of the work is "Mysteries of the Seance and Tricks and Traps of Bogus Mediums." It contains much that is valuable to every reflective mind that is investigating occult subjects. In his introduction the author says:

* * * "There are thousands of these to-day—good, honest, liberal souls, who are gifted with fine psychical powers, and in a great measure depending upon their mediumship for a livelihood, who are dragging out a hand-to-mouth existence, because the bogus medium with his or her sensational tests and clever trickery draws away the test-hunting and phenomena-chasing element and gets the dollars. The local societies, too, favor the bogus one in too many instances. These societies, in their early struggles for existence, were glad enough to get their honest home mediums to give tests for them and help them out, but when the sensational fake came along with his brilliant work, he or she could pull in a crowd and fill the coffers of the society. Thenceforth, except in times of adversity, the societies have no use for the home medium. We can name several societies now paying big salaries to fakes, knowing them to be such. Yet they call themselves "Spiritualists." What a travesty upon the name!

"WHEN SPIRITUALISTS LEARN TO TAKE CARE OF THEIR TRUE AND HONEST MEDIUMS, AND KICK OUT OF THEIR ORGANIZATION ALL THE FAKES AND THEIR ASSISTANTS, THEN WILL THE CAUSE STAND SOME SHOW FOR RECOGNITION BY THE WORLD, AND THE INTELLIGENT ONES WHO KNOW ITS TRUTH WILL NOT BE ASHAMED TO BE CLASSED AMONG ITS NUMBERS.

"There are many in the Spiritualist ranks who oppose any mention of the fraudulent work of crooked mediums and resist any attempt to expose or do away with them, and all who insist upon honest work only, are denounced as "fraud-hunters." Most of them acknowledge, however, that there is much fraud. As there is no question in the minds of honest, intelligent people regarding the propriety of denouncing fraud in all its guises, no apology is offered for this work. The statements made herein are true and can be verified by anyone who will investigate with his eyes open, and use ordinary common sense in so doing. If all Spiritualists would but turn "fraud-hunters" there would soon be no frauds to hunt.

"With malice toward none, and charity for all."

This pamphlet by Mr. Lunt has been instrumental in doing a most excellent work.

The next book published detailing the rotten trickery and fraud in our ranks is by David P. Abbott, of Omaha, Neb. His gentlemanly deportment, suavity, and gentleness of manners make him at once a favorite with any medium, genuine or otherwise; in fact, he is a typical investigator of Spiritualistic or occult phenomena. The Open Court Publishing Company of Chicago, a leading firm, sends forth this remarkable book of 350 pages. It is neatly and substantially bound in cloth. The firm sends us the following advertisement which appears in the next column, and explains itself:

Of Stupendous Importance.

The Beauty and Grandeur of Spirit Return.

THE FACT THAT SPIRITS CAN RETURN TO EARTH AND COMMUNICATE WITH MORTALS IS ONE OF STUPENDOUS IMPORTANCE. IT TRANSCENDS IN VALUE, INTRINSIC MERIT, IN FAR-REACHING EFFECTS AND POTENT INFLUENCE IN ALL THE AFFAIRS OF LIFE, ANY OTHER FACT EVER PRESENTED TO THE CONSIDERATION OF MORTALS. WE HAVE, EVER SINCE A MERE BOY, BEEN BROUGHT IN CLOSE TOUCH WITH THE SPIRIT REALMS, AND HAVE HAD A GLIMPSE OF THE BEAUTY AND GRANDEUR OF THE SAME, AND KNOW WHEREOF WE SPEAK. SPIRIT RETURN IS A SUBLIME TRUTH, TRANSCENDING IN IMPORTANCE ANY OTHER TRUTH EVER UTTERED BY MORTAL LIPS, AND THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER IS LOUDLY INSISTING THAT AN ERROR, OR A LIE, OR AN INFAMOUS TRICK, OR DECEPTION, OR A BOGUS SPIRIT, SHALL NEVER BE ALLOWED TO APPEAR DRESSED IN THE COSTUME THAT TRUTH ALONE SHOULD WEAR.

'Behind the Scenes with Mediums,' Those Claiming to Be Such.

By David P. Abbott.

Many years ago two little girls, the Fox Sisters, startled the world with their mysterious rappings. This was the beginning of Modern Spiritualism.

Soon after this mediums began appearing all over the country, who could cause raps to sound on furniture, tables to tip, etc.

Next, professional mediums began traveling over the country giving exhibitions of rope-tying and CABINET MANIFESTATIONS. Later came the slate-writing, the billet test mediums, etc., until at the present day there are many HUNDREDS OF PERSONS following this profession for a livelihood. There are several hundreds of them in Chicago alone.

In the present work, Mr. Abbott has given the public a collection of the most VALUABLE SECRETS of fake mediumistic work in existence. Never before in the history of Spiritualism have such VALUABLE SECRETS been made public.

Many secrets of the kind have from time to time appeared in books on the subject; but heretofore the trick mediums, and the dealers in secrets for the use of mediums have succeeded in keeping out of print their most valuable secrets.

Most of the secrets revealed in this book were obtained by Mr. Abbott directly from fake mediums, while he purchased not a few of them from dealers at exorbitant prices. He has given his VERY BEST SECRETS in this work; and being a practical performer himself, although not a medium, he has included only up-to-date secrets that are thoroughly professional and practical and such as are actually being used by many professional performers and alleged mediums of the present day, in mystifying an innocent public.

For the magician and performer this book is invaluable, while for the honest Spiritualist it is a boon long needed.

Honest believers in Spiritualism do not desire TO BE DUPED by impostors and charlatans. In this book many tricks of such persons are so thoroughly exposed, that by studying its pages anyone may become a competent investigator of any phenomenon of a super-normal appearance.

That the reader may understand how the secrets herein revealed have been TREASURED AND GUARDED from the public heretofore, and of the value placed on them by performers, we will state that the value of the secrets contained in this volume estimated at the prices charged for them by dealers, would run into hundreds of dollars.

Not a few of the secrets contained have sold at twenty-five dollars each, while a number of them have never even been offered for sale. The little chapter on "VEST TURNING," contains a secret that is being sold to-day for two dollars and fifty cents, while the secret contained in the chapter, "Performances of the Annie Eva Fay Type," was sold to a medium of Mr. Abbott's acquaintance for two hundred and fifty dollars.

Many of the slate tricks are worth at least ten dollars each, and the book is very complete in its exposure of fake slate-writing and billet work. The exposure of the BILLET TESTS of certain Chicago mediums of the present day is of great value.

It is impossible to enumerate here all the VALUABLE SECRETS which this work contains

Owing to the bearing of the subject on the question of personal immortality, the work has a certain philosophical import; and in addition to this, descriptions are presented in a very interesting manner.

Mr. Abbott is a member of the American Society for Psychical Research, and has written on the subject for the Journal of that society.

The above work is most valuable, as it fully exposes the subtle tricks of the Fakes.

The next work, and the largest one, is by Hereward Carrington, a leading member of the American Psychic Research Society, at the head of which stands Dr. James H. Hyslop. In many respects he is a most wonderful man. Calm, dignified, urbane, critical, clear-minded, highly cultured, and thoroughly in earnest, he is with those qualifications a typical investigator of psychical phenomena, and his work will create a profound sensation. The following advertisement by the publishers explains more fully the character of the work, and where it can be purchased:

"The Physical Phenomena of Spiritualism, Fraudulent and Genuine."

Being a Brief Account of the Most Important Historical Phenomena; a Criticism of their Evidential Value and a Complete Exposition of the Methods Employed in Fraudulently Reproducing the Same,

By HEREWARD CARRINGTON.

Member of the Council of the American Society for Scientific Research; Member of the English Society for Psychical Research, etc.

One of the most valuable books ever published dealing with psychical research phenomena. The first portion of the book describes in great detail THE TRICKS AND FRAUDULENT DEVICES employed by mediums in order to DECEIVE THEIR SITTERS. The author has for many years made a study of LEGERDEMAIN as a pastime and is a connoisseur on the subject. Slate-writing performances, materialization, roping, sealed-letter reading, mind-reading performances, etc., are considered at great length, and the fraud fully exposed. The completeness and detail of this part of the book render it INVALUABLE TO ANY INVESTIGATOR.

The second portion of the volume deals in a most interesting manner with the apparently genuine phenomena—raps, movements of objects without contact, trance phenomena, and the mediumship of D. D. Home, which the author considers genuine.

This massive work is elegantly bound in cloth, is illustrated, and contains 420 pages. It is an ENCYCLOPEDIA of the legerdemain tricks of dishonest mediums. Its references are INVALUABLE, and its conclusions INVINCIBLE. The great object in the publication of this book is to assist each one in their investigation of psychic phenomena, and is in no wise opposed to honest mediumship where the results are wholly genuine. The price of this remarkable book is $2.16. Address the publishers,

The above work is most remarkable in its especial line, and will well pay perusal, as it illustrates in a most comprehensive manner the rotten frauds that have been practiced in our ranks, much to the detriment of our Cause, and to the great disgust of the Angel World.

The above four books graphically explain how people all along the line of Modern Spiritualism during the last fifty years have been swindled by rotten fake mediums, palming off their tricks as genuine manifestations of spirit power.

And now comes some startling information as follows, which will shake Spiritualism from center to circumference in Michigan, equally as bad, as when Maybee, the materializing medium, was tried, found guilty, and sentenced to prison for 90 days for masquerading as a spirit.

A Potent Illustration.

Explaining How "Generals" and "Next" Have Been Utilized to Bring Disgrace Upon Our Cause.

MR. FAUROT'S AFFIDAVIT, AND THE ACCOMPANYING COMMUNICATIONS FROM HIS PEN WILL CREATE A DECIDED SENSATION IN MICHIGAN, WHERE SO MUCH DECEPTION HAS BEEN PRACTICED. POOR MAYBEE! HOW HE DECEIVED FOR YEARS THE GULLIBLE SPIRITUALISTS OF THAT STATE; BUT HIS END CAME WHEN THE "SPIRIT" WAS GRABBED AND HE WAS FOUND TO BE DRESSED IN ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY PERSONATING A SPIRIT.

SPIRITUALISTS, CONSIDER!

A Sworn Statement of Experience with Phenomena, "So Called."

After sitting continuously for three years in developing classes conducted by Mrs. Belle Fuller, "Trumpet Medium" (two years), and Mr. Emmet Forbush, "Materializing Medium" (one year), I hereby set forth the results as given me by Mr. Forbush.

His first demand was a financial consideration of one hundred dollars; one-half to be paid in certain personal property and the other half in cash when earned by giving "seances."

This agreed to, the following disclosure was made to me by Mr. Forbush: THAT ALL MATERIALIZATION, TRUMPET WORK AND A LARGER PORTION OF ROSTRUM MESSAGE WORK WAS PRODUCED BY FRAUD.

Materialization is produced by covering the face with a piece of cheesecloth, the use of false beards, cheesecloth robes for ladies, a piece of cheesecloth or a handkerchief over the shirt front and tie, and a small piece to cover the hair for producing gray hair. The different heights are accomplished by getting on the knees for the height of children; stooping in different heights, and standing erect. Extra tall forms are made by standing on tiptoes. Fat men and women are produced by bowing the body outward, but they cannot come outside the curtain. Dematerialization is done by drawing the hands down the inside of the curtain quickly. Materializing through the floor is done by placing the head as near the floor as possible, then through the curtain and rising up. Luminous paint is used for illuminated forms. The singing of the audience is for the purpose of drowning the noise made by the medium in making up.

In trumpet work the "medium" or confederate does the talking.

Information known as "Generals" are written out and circulated among the "mediums" (John Brown, Sister Mary, Father, Brother, Uncle George, etc.). The materializing medium carries his paraphernalia next to his body under his clothing, except when going to give a "test," when he resorts to other means of concealment. I was also informed that I was eligible to admittance to any seance anywhere free of charge. I had simply to tell the medium in charge that I was "next."

"Grand Rapids, Kent Co., Mich.

"Personally appeared before me, a Notary Public in and for Kent County, Mich., Edward Faurot, and made affidavit that the above statement is true.

"E. EDWARD FAUROT."

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 17th day of September, A. D., 1907. E. GAYLORD WARNER,
"Notary Public,
Kent County, Mich."

The foregoing statements are made for the purpose of showing the actual conditions which Spiritualists are daily fostering, and which is strongly supported by a large class of Spiritualists who are willing to be swindled and will not believe the facts when proven to them.

After several years' investigation and intimate connection with mediums of various phases, I make the broad statement that there is no materialization or trumpet work other than is set forth in the above sworn statement, and I challenge them all

The Four Volumes,

"THE VAMPIRES OF ONSET"; "THE TRICKS AND TRAPS OF BOGUS MEDIUMS," BY E. D. LUNT; "BEHIND THE SCENES WITH THE MEDIUMS," BY DAVID P. ABBOTT, AND "THE PHYSICAL PHENOMENA OF SPIRITUALISM," BY HEREWARD CARRINGTON, CONSTITUTE FOUR VOLUMES OF INTENSE INTEREST TO EVERYONE WHO IS INTERESTED IN THE WELFARE OF SPIRITUALISM, FOR THEY EXPLAIN HOW DECEPTION HAS BEEN CARRIED ON IN OUR RANKS. IT IS A MOST PITIABLE TALE THEY TELL, OF FRAUD, TRICKERY AND DECEPTION THAT HAS BEEN PROMINENT IN OUR MIDST, AND THOUSANDS OF SPIRITUALISTS CAN TELL OF PARALLEL CASES.

Fraud and Deception.

Their Strange and Poisonous Occult Influence When Practiced in Daily Life.

IT IS INTIMATED BY A HIGHLY ENLIGHTENED SPIRIT, THAT WHEN A NATION, THROUGH ITS OFFICIALS AND LEADING MINDS, BECOMES THOROUGHLY STEEPED IN CRIME, FRAUD, DECEPTION AND SELFISHNESS, IT THEN EMITS A SUBTLE, OCCULT POISON, THAT CAUSES ITS DOWNFALL.

IT IS STATED ON MOST EXCELLENT AUTHORITY THAT PERSIA PERISHED WHEN ONE PER CENT OF THE PEOPLE OWNED ALL THE LAND. EGYPT WENT DOWN WHEN TWO PER CENT OWNED NINETY-SEVEN HUNDREDTHS OF ALL THE WEALTH. BABYLON DIED WHEN TWO PER CENT OWNED ALL THE WEALTH, AND ROME EXPIRED WHEN 1,800 MEN POSSESSED THE KNOWN WORLD. IT WAS NOT WEALTH THAT CAUSED THEIR DESTRUCTION, BUT THE FRAUD, DECEPTION, SELFISHNESS AND CRIME CONNECTED THEREWITH. WHILE THE GREAT MAJORITY OF SPIRITUALISTS ARE THE MOST MORAL PEOPLE ON EARTH TO-DAY, YET THEY HAVE TOLERATED IN THEIR MIDST A CLASS OF FAKE MEDIUMS AND UNSCRUPULOUS RASCALS, AND THAT TOLERATION HAS RESULTED IN EMITTING A SUBTLE, OCCULT POISON THAT IS ACTUALLY PREVENTING THAT COHESION IN OUR RANKS WHICH WOULD OTHERWISE RESULT IF OUR HEAVEN-BORN TRUTH COULD EXIST IN ITS ANGELIC PURITY. SEE, SPIRITUALISTS, THE COHESIVE PROPERTIES OF OUR GLORIOUS CAUSE IS GRADUALLY DIMINISHING, AND WILL SO CONTINUE WHILE THE FAKE ELEMENT IS TOLERATED IN OUR MIDST.

THE BANNER OF LIGHT, WITHOUT ANY SERIOUS OBJECTION, TOLERATED THE ROTTEN FAKE ELEMENT IN BOSTON AND ELSEWHERE, AND IT WAS COMPELLED TO SUSPEND PUBLICATION. THE RELIGIO-PHILOSOPHICAL JOURNAL WINKED AT THE CRIMES OF DISHONEST MEDIUMS, AND IT DIED THROUGH ITS SINS OF OMISSION. THE LIGHT OF TRUTH FAVORED ALL THE FAKE MEDIUMS IN THE LAND, AND IT EXPIRED IN THE AGONY OF AN UNWELCOME DEATH. ON THE CONTRARY THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, WHICH HAS WAGED AN UNCEASING FIGHT AGAINST THE FRAUD AND DECEPTION IN OUR RANKS, PRACTICED MORE OR LESS ALL ALONG THE LINE, HAS PROSPERED EXCEEDINGLY WELL, WITH AN INCREASING CIRCULATION.

Another Statement by Mr. Faurot, Giving Fuller Explanation.

To the Editor:—Your favor of recent date, acknowledging the receipt of my sworn statement, at hand, and desiring to offer a little further explanation that you may have a clearer understanding of the case, I write you again.

It was my misfortune to be classed with the "EASY MARKS" in the spiritual religion, and I became an enthusiastic supporter of all work which appeared to be honest.

Under the direction of Mr Forbush ("his Guides") I organized a developing class with a membership of ten or twelve. This class continued through the space of two years, or nearly one year after he gave me the "development." It came to a sudden end by my exposure.

In the meantime, (before I got my "development") I became a boarder in Mr. Forbush's family, by his urgent invitation. Gradually he gained confidence in me, and on account of the many things did by me in a benevolent way for him, he decided to reward me by making a "medium" of me. There were one or two conditions, however, that I must agree to, before I secured this "development:" That I give him certain property (one book case and set of books, value, $25.00. One gold filled watch, cost $16.00, and $7.00 yet unpaid on a suit of clothes purchased by me for him, AS ORDERED BY THE "GUIDES", and fifty dollars in cash when earned by giving seances, and that I MUST KEEP ALL MATTERS A SECRET!

I did not keep the secret, for I considered a promise to withhold a matter which was instrumental in deception and the securing of money under false pretenses, would incriminate myself, if not by legal action by being conscious of supporting crime.

After much thought and study, I decided that if I made an exposure at once no one would believe me, so I concluded I would GET INTO THE RING by entering the work myself for a short time, and get evidence against other mediums through the exchange of "Generals."

BY GIVING THE SAME WORK UNDER THE SAME CONDITIONS FOR A TIME, THEN TELLING THE PUBLIC THAT MY WORK, AS WELL AS MR. FORBUSH'S AND THE "TRUMPET MEDIUMS" WAS NOT GENUINE, I WOULD HAVE GREATER INFLUENCE WITH THE PEOPLE THAN I OTHERWISE WOULD.

Mrs. Belle Fuller, whose "spirit manifestations" I brand as entirely of earthly origin, says that "anyone who declares Mr. Forbush is not a genuine medium, is a fool," hence, under the circumstances, the better class of Spiritualists of Grand Rapids, together with myself are classed in that category by this "medium;" but if such brazen-faced deceivers as Mr. Forbush and his accessories are examples of wisdom, I thank the eternal stars that I am a fool.

Mr. Forbush has never given a test under any but conditions which he named himself, and either at his own home or the home of some other fake medium. He explained to me how he removed a window sill, and arranged it so he could conceal his traps therein, loosely replacing it so he could easily get his robes, etc., after the audience had searched him and his cabinet. No one would think of a window sill being loose and the stuff hidden under it.

The cheese-cloth or mosquito-netting test is no better than Mr. F's tests. The "medium" simply carries a supply of needles filled with different colored thread, and after the light is out, he pulls the thread out of the cheese-cloth where it is sewed up, steps out, takes the trumpet and produces the finest kind of manifestations; then steps back through the opening, sews it up after him with the same color thread that was originally used, then when the light is turned on, the test is complete

Mr. Forbush has been challenged to prove his honesty, but remains silent. He has been offered ten dollars (by Mr. Fred Terry) to produce anything under strict test conditions, but fails to accept.

I have openly declared that all his spirit manifestations are of earthly origin, and he dares not face me in an effort to make me prove it. His silence proves his guilt. Hoping for the elimination of all deception from our society, and above all for the success of the greatest eliminator, The Progressive Thinker, I am.

Yours Sincerely,
E. EDWARD FAUROT.

Mrs. Belle Fuller's Spirit Manifestations of Earthly Origin.

To the Editor:—In regard to Mrs. Belle Fuller, I will say that I have conclusive evidence against the genuineness of the "spirit" manifestations given in her presence, through the fact that she freely exchanged "Generals" with me, knowing that I was doing the same work that she was. However, I did not detect her methods while I was a member of her class, for the reason that I was confident, at that time, of her genuineness as a medium, and did not suspect any deception. In fact, I would not have been susceptible of believing anything wrong at this time, had Forbush withheld his revelation. There is another fact that is evidence within itself of Mrs. Fuller's methods. When Mrs. Spencer was on trial, Mrs. Fuller went to the witness stand and testified to her honesty.

After I became acquainted with the trick work, I became quite familiar with Mrs. Spencer, and she came to my house and held a seance, which Mr. Martin sent you for publication. In this seance the supposed guides conversed with one another. I DID THE TALKING IN ONE TRUMPET AND MRS. SPENCER IN THE OTHER. Mrs. Spencer's "spirit" manifestations are wholly of earthly origin, and Mrs. Fuller knew it at the time that she was on the witness stand.

She has also opened her house from time to time for such tricksters as John Mabee and Mr. Forbush.

I hold in my possession about a half bushel of material which Mrs. Spencer left at my house when she went west. It consists of information of various kinds, on people of this city and different parts of the State—newspaper clippings and written "Generals."

There are those in this city who will stand by such characters, no matter what or how much evidence is produced against them. I feel I have done my duty as best I could, and now if they choose to follow the same old rut, that is not my fault.

Trusting that my information is satisfactory to you, yet willing to assist you in any way I can, I am

Yours sincerely,
E. EDWARD FAUROT.

WOMEN LOATH TO DISINHERIT.

Few Mothers Leave Wayward Children Out of Their Wills.

"One feature of women's wills is the infrequency with which they disinherit their children," said a lawyer. "It is quite unusual for a mother to cut off a child. Fathers frequently exhibit such spurts of temper. A son or a daughter may do something that displeases him and to get even he simply wills the disobedient offspring five dollars and lets him go. But mothers can't do that. They are too soft. If ever they show any partiality at all it is in favor of the black sheep of the flock. No matter what a child may have done or how deep his disgrace, the mother only wills him an extra slice of her property to make ducks and drakes with. I have written hundreds of wills in my time, many of them for women. Often I have known my client to begin the interview by declaring: 'Now, there's Willie. He has behaved very badly. I shall cut him off without a penny.' I never remonstrate against such a cold-blooded proposition; I don't need to, for before the will is half written her heart has conquered her head and Willie has been given the lion's share of the estate."

What Other Conclusion Can You Come to?

THE MATERIALIZING SEANCE IN MANY CASES HAS BEEN THE HOTBED OF CRIME, OF LICENTIOUSNESS OF THE WORST KIND, OF DEBAUCHERY, BOGUS "SPIRITS" OFTEN MARRIED TO SENILE GULLIBLES UNDER THE "AFFINITY" ACT, AND CIVILIZATION MADE TO BLUSH WITH SHAME AT THE OUTPUT. THIRTY OR MORE "SPIRITS," AT AS MANY DIFFERENT MATERIALIZING SEANCES, HAVE BEEN GRABBED, AND IN EVERY CASE—NOT ONE EXCEPTION—THEY HAVE PROVED TO BE THE MEDIUM OR A CONFEDERATE DRESSED IN ARTIFICIAL TOGGERY. IF THIRTY MATERIALIZING MEDIUMS, ONE AFTER ANOTHER, HAVE ALL PROVED TO BE FRAUDULENT, WHEN GRABBED, IS IT NOT ABOUT TIME A CHANGE OF PROGRAM SHOULD BE INAUGURATED BY THE N. S. A.?

A BAD STATE OF AFFAIRS.

Spiritualism in Decatur, Ill., Illustrating What Our Cause Has to Contend With in Every Large City in the United States.

To the Editor:—I would like to tell the readers of The Progressive Thinker why Spiritualism never advances in our city; it is simply this: There has been a Professor C. E. May who advertised himself as being the "Most Wonderful Psychic Medium of the Day," "being in perfect harmony with God and the angels, asking the people to come to him in all business investments, delays in marriage, domestic affairs," etc., etc., all material instead of spiritual advice. If he only realized how many hearts had been made sad, how many homes been made dreary by just such a common "fortune teller" as he giving advice, and the poor "fortune hunters" doing as they are advised, he would surely hunt other means of making a living. This Professor has been out at Dreamland Park for the past four months. This park is an amusement place, patronized largely by the lower class of people, but being outside the city limits he escapes paying a license. Before he came, H. M. French was here about three months, "telling fortunes," and having a good time, and in the meantime, Chas. Winans has been here four times since January 1st. Some of the older and more sensible believers have quit him after seeing his false beards, etc., but there are always a few new ones to take their places, and pay out their money for fake materialization.

Now, the first two named professors are tramp mediums, claiming not to belong to society or organization of any kind; as Professor May said, he "didn't think they were on a fair basis."

Now is it any wonder that when a Spiritualist wants to do a little missionary work among outsiders that they are met with this rebuff: "The religion of Spiritualism is fine, but I don't want to mix with "fortune tellers." It is just such mediums as these that are ruining Spiritualism in Decatur.

Hasten the day when mediums will not be allowed to go over the country lecturing until they are strictly qualified for it, or at least belong to some State association.

CHRIS SCHAWACKER'S CANE BRINGS THE "DEAD" TO LIFE.

Undertaker and Bondsman Relieves Dead Wagon of Its Task After It Arrives—The Lesson Imparted.

Chris Schawacker, undertaker and professional bondsman, has his own method of resurrecting the dead.

When a "dead wagon" from the Coroner's office went Wednesday afternoon to the rear of 213 South Main street, where a man was said to have fallen dead, Schawacker was among the spectators that gathered about. The man lay apparently lifeless, there being no indication of pulse. He was said to be William Patterson, a steamboat stoker.

Just before the men loaded the body into the wagon Schawacker stepped forward and struck, with a cane, a brisk blow on the worn sole of the man's shoe, and the man arose and walked. Suspended animation from alcoholism is said to have caused the man's condition.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

In the year 1907, the second day of October, the above incident occurred in the United States. It would have been accounted a "miracle" in the days of Moses and Aaron, those pious old frauds of Egypt. Surrounded by the proper "religious atmosphere"—the mystifying murmurs of muffled priests, the proper purrings of pulpiteers, or the siren sighs of sanctified sisters—this little occurrence would have been a "genuine indication of favor from the Most High," and the fat, pudgy priests as well as the rest of the "God-favored" gang would have crowed about it for many days thereafter. It would have become "a remarkable answer to prayer," and any other polite lie that "God's own" could think of at the time the reporter eagerly questioned them.

It's too bad to have wasted all this fine miracle material on the desert air outside the walls of a church!

I guess the pulpit-pounders and the adipose near-men known as priests haven't got a monopoly of the miracle business just yet. No, indeed, not while St. Louis has citizens like Chris Schawacker to do the "get thee up and walk" industry a good turn!

If old shrewd Pharaoh (Egypt's John D.) could have witnessed this scene just a few minutes before Aaron did the vaudeville snake-and-cane stunt, wouldn't Egypt's monarch have cried, "Get the hook!" and wouldn't Aaron have received the merry ha! ha! at the conclusion of his feeble imitation of a real miracle?

OBSESSION.

Impressive Views in Regard to the Same—How the Spirit Gets Possession Under Peculiar Conditions—Interesting Cases.

The condition of obsession is not always due to psychological influences from the spirit side of life alone. I have been studying the causes and collecting evidence from many and various experiences of different people. I have made a special study of the treatment of these cases, and know we must deal with spirit intelligence to effect a cure, but how did the controlling or obsessing influence get hold, and how to relax that hold, is a serious consideration.

Mental laws are at work in a universal way, and we understand very little of the power of the mind. But the individual soul is able to balance its relations if it has ordinary physical conditions to operate through, and more attention should be given to the perfect development of the physical temple of the soul, through which we must learn the kindergarten lessons of life.

The imperfect physical relations of the organism is sure to precede the undesirable spirit influence. Many cases date from an operation where ether or chloroform lowered the vibration of the spiritual forces working through the patient's body, and opened the door for another personality to step in and take control. I will give you two cases for illustration:

A lady came to me a few years ago, learning that I was teaching and helping people along these lines, and asked if I could explain what ailed her. She had been in the hospital for a slight operation nearly a year previous, and after the chloroform had been administered she floated into space for a time, then gradually became aware that she was in her body, yet unable to move or speak, and while lying in this physical stupor she became conscious that a voice spoke to her; some invisible being, yet knowing all about her present and past conditions of life. From that time the voice had never left her, but had directed her to do strange things. She felt a peculiar hypnotic influence that made her desire to be alone and listen to the strange teaching of this voice. I asked what the teaching was, and at once the controlling intelligence spoke through her lips and began expounding spiritual laws of reincarnation. The relation of atoms; how our bodies were builded; how the mother thought she was holding to her breast her own babe, and in reality she was nursing some murderer who was reincarnated in it.

The lady herself had not been a student of Theosophy or Spiritualism, and the ideas were strange to her, but in a disconnected manner she expressed what some are teaching along those lines, and asked if I could explain or understand what it all meant. The voice had warned her not to talk of these things, or of its presence with her, to most people, but directed her to come and talk freely to me, as I would understand, but others might think her insane. The voice did not tell who it was, but claimed that the lady was to do a great work. That the world was now ready to be taught, and she was the instrument that was to be the teacher.

She had left her home in a distant city and come to Washington. Her friends did not know where she was. She said she did not feel anxious about her two little children; they were with her mother, and her husband could get along without her. She was so peaceful and happy, she said, she did not want to see the city or talk with people, but lay most of the time in her room and listened to this voice, and saw such a bright light—bright as a noonday sun, yet she had looked at it till it did not dazzle her eyes. Her money was gone and she had pawned her wedding ring, but was assured that it was well, and that she was to be enabled to do a great work.

The other case I will mention is also one who went to a hospital for an operation, but a different kind of personality got hold of her. She was controlled by someone who had been poisoned and thought everything—even her clothing—poisoned. She became partly herself and partly someone else, in such a way that her doctor said she was insane. She would talk to invisible people, apparently hearing them talk and answering, proving a condition of clairvoyance and clairaudience, which had not been, till the ether held the physical entranced and confused her own mind.

There is such a condition as the loss of one's own soul consciousness. The dominion of another strong enough to blot out the individual self, for a time, at least. How great that time may be, no one can tell. It may be a higher influence or a lower one in spiritual unfoldment. But that which has the strongest electric power will dominate. If we are capable of holding our own individual consciousness, we can become one, so to speak, with any intelligence that may touch us, gaining from them their experience, and the oneness of the Divine Soul of all Nature becomes ours. It is the true meaning of the Orient who tells of losing his selfhood in the Eternal self.

This principle of blending of the psychic consciousness needs much study, for it is the "Way, the Truth and the Light" that Jesus tried to teach; it is the salvation of the individual, also the progression of each from lower to higher unfoldment. It is the law which contains the principles of hypnotic power. Diseases of both body and mind are received or rejected through its use. It is the fundamental principle of Christian Science, through which Mrs. Eddy has done a great work, yet she has only used a little of its power, and few of her followers understand the real method by which they are healed. The ignorant use of a law of Nature that brings good to human life is better than not using that law at all; but an intelligent knowledge of the law, and power to use it, may bring untold blessings.

EVIDENCE OF SPIRIT POWER.

Excellent Tests Illustrating Spirit Guardianship.

I believe in spiritual or occult power, but was a skeptic up to 18 years ago. I believe there is something in it, but I am not satisfied.

Prior to this first incident I am going to relate I was very bitter against so-called Spiritualism, as a short time previous to this members of my family had drifted into it, which had caused much unpleasantness. At this time I was living in a little town in central Texas. One morning I awoke feeling very much depressed, and with the impression that there was something wrong with my father; that he was either very sick or dead, and I told my husband how I felt at the time, but he only laughed at me, and said I was homesick, which I knew I was not; but the impression was so strong I could not cast it off at once, and in the course of three of four days I received a letter from a brother stating that my father was very ill, had been expecting him to die, but that he was better.

Two years later I visited at Austin, Texas, and while there I had a dream that I was in the bedroom of a neighbor of mine at home. It was dimly lighted. Watchers by the bedside of my friend told me that she was dying, which I saw at a glance, and on my return home I was informed that she died that same night.

Again, four years ago I and my family were off on a recreation trip, and one morning early I began to feel very much depressed, and as the morning passed I grew more so, and at 10 o'clock I felt almost as if I should die. I could not be still for a moment, and told my family and those with us that I would be compelled to go home; that I knew there was something wrong there. But we could not start until the next morning, as we had to go all the way by water, and those with me said it was only my imagination, but I knew better, and when, on our way home the next morning, the mail launch that carried the mail between the two towns, hailed our boat, and the carrier handed me a letter from a brother at home, stating that he had received a message the evening before that our youngest brother had died that morning at 10 o'clock, near Phoenix City, Ariz. None of the family, nor I, knew he was sick. My mother, who was only a short distance from me, had the same experience that I did.

I have frequently had similar impressions, and in recent years have felt an unseen presence near me, but I have never developed anything further, or gotten anything like satisfactory results of spirit communication except through the mediumship of others. MRS. A. JETER.

Spirit Return.

It Is Increasing the World Over.

IT IS AN UNDENIABLE FACT THAT SPIRIT RETURN IS INCREASING THE WORLD OVER. SCIENTIFIC MEN, MEN OF SUPERIOR INTELLIGENCE AND WIDE-AWAKE EXPERIENCE, HAVE COME TO THE CONCLUSION THAT SPIRIT RETURN IS A GRAND TRUTH, BUT THEY ARE UNWILLING TO BE TAGGED AS SPIRITUALISTS, AND TO SO TAG THEM WOULD AROUSE THEIR BITTER OPPOSITION, AND BE REGARDED AS AN INSULT. WE DEEPLY REGRET THIS ATTITUDE ON THEIR PART, ARISING CHIEFLY IN CONSEQUENCE OF THE DISREPUTABLE FAKES IN OUR RANKS, WHICH HAVE GIVEN RISE TO FOUR VOLUMES DETAILING THEIR CRIMES. READ THE FOLLOWING IN REFERENCE TO A FAMILY OF NEGROES, WHICH ILLUSTRATES IN A MARKED DEGREE THE DIFFUSIVENES OF SPIRIT RETURN, THE LEADING PERSON THEREIN BEING A MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL.

THE COLOR LINE.

It Cannot Be Drawn When Spirit Return Is Considered—A Colored Minister and His Four Little Picaninnies the Center of Remarkable Spirit Manifestation.

To the Editor:—Mrs. E. T. Delbach, of Millen, Ga., furnishes a most remarkable narrative, setting forth that a family of negroes living near the historic old village of Alexandria has been discovered to possess remarkable mental powers. So wonderful have been some of their actions that the whole section of the state is acquainted with the facts.

The data for the following account of this family have been secured from Mr. W. S. Godbee, a kinsman of Mr. Russell J. Godbee, on whose plantation the father of the family was raised. Mr. Godbee is one of the most prominent planters of Burke County.

The family of "Georgia wonders" consists of father, mother and four children.

Rev. Ezekial Burke, the father, is gifted with magnetic or hypnotic power that enables him to perform effectual cures of almost all diseases man is subject to.

He has stopped the most intense pain in a few moments and with a few treatments has effected a cure from ordinary troubles.

He discovered his powers in November, 1905, by curing a bad case of neuralgia for his wife.

He was born and reared on the plantation of Mr. Russell J. Godbee, near Telfairville, and is 32 years old. His grandparents were the slaves of M. Billy Bates, of the sixty-eighth district, the father of Hon. John F. Bates. Julia Burke, the wife, was born 26 years ago in Augusta, Ga. She is not gifted with any extraordinary power, but is quick and bright. She is the daughter of one of the handsomest mulatto women ever reared in the South.

Four Remarkable Children.

This couple have four children, Emma, 9 years old; Norman, 7; Ezekiel 5; and Walter, 3. These four "little picaninnies" are gifted with mental telepathy to a remarkable degree. They can communicate with each other at any distance and are never lost from each other. Many of the best men of this section have fully tested them and will certify to this fact. Aside from "thought wave" or mental telegraphy, they are the most perfect mind readers, mediums and interpreters that have ever possessed the gift. They are absolutely perfect. It is impossible to mislead them.

It is said that they can put a person in communication with the dead or the living, and can perfectly describe persons and places that they never saw or heard of.

Interview With General Wright.

Judge Godbee, of Millen, visited "the wonders." He asked the two oldest children for an interview with Hon. Wm. A. Wright. Upon being informed that he was in his office, he told them to ask Mr. Wright to please step to the door, he wanted to see him a moment. The boy said, "he say he can't come."

The judge asked why. Both said, "He say he can't walk. He is crippled."

"Well," said the judge, "how does he walk?" They gathered sticks and boards and improvised crutches and described the mode of locomotion of Mr. Wright.

They described Stone Mountain on one side, Kenesaw on another, and gave a perfect description of the panorama of Atlanta as viewed from the Candler building.

The girl was discovered to possess this power last November. She told her mother she could tell her all about her grandparents, whom she had never seen, and repeated conversations that her mother and grandparents had had before she was born.

A few days after this the girl and her mother were at a spring about three hundred yards from the house. Her mother wanted a bucket from the house and told her to go for it. The girl said she would tell her brother to bring it, and began to play about. Her mother scolded her for not calling the boy, but the next moment he was there with the bucket.

Many Tests Made.

Since then thousands of tests have been made by the hundreds who have visited in the woods near Sapp's Old Mill. Both the father and the children are seemingly ignorant of any power out of the ordinary and can make no explanation of their wonderful gifts. The girl was first gifted with the powers and then discovered it in all the other children. She can "go in" and can then see the others as they "come in."

No one who has visited them can explain the powers of the mysterious little darkies.

Everyone comes away perplexed. The people of this section are astonished at the wonderful power and wisdom exhibited by these four little innocent and ignorant darkies.

Thus it is that Spirit Return is being manifested everywhere—even through four "little picaninnies." Would it not be wise to stop dubbing Spirit Return an "ism," in view of the fact that it is the result simply of a natural law, just as much as is the vibration of the telephone?

What common term would be applicable to those not in our ranks, but who firmly believe in Spirit Return?

T. RUTH.

It will write in full sight—yes, in full sight and it will write more, write better, write easier and keep on doing so longer than any other typewriter.

UNIVERSAL SPIRITUALISM

Spirit Communion in All Ages, Among All People—by W. J. Colville.

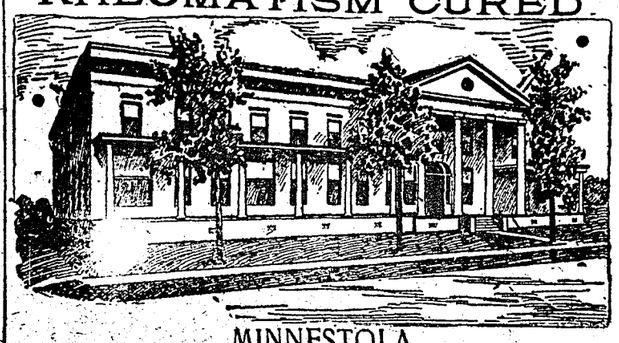
This work has two distinctive features: (1st) A resume of the Spiritual faith and practice of Egypt, India, Persia, Greece, Rome, China, Japan, and other ancient nations, not excepting Europe during Christian centuries. (2) A summary of recent experiences in America, Great Britain, Australia, France, Germany, Italy, and other modern lands, all tending to show the persistent continuity of spiritual revelation. Clairvoyance, Telepathy, and Psychic Phenomena in general is dealt with in separate chapters at the end of the volume, making it a highly useful textbook for all who are interested in the great question of human immortality. The Author says: "The libraries contain a large number of extremely valuable works dealing with every imaginable phase of Spiritualism and occultism, but I have searched in vain for a single portable volume, issued at a popular price, which gives a brief and lucid statement of the claims made in all ages and in all countries on behalf of the mighty truth of communion between inhabitants of earth and dwellers disrobed of flesh in the one vast spiritual universe. The enormous and ever increasing interest in "Psychic" problems and the eager, constant demand for historic information coupled with a rational setting forth of intelligible spiritual philosophy, has led me to appear once again before the public with a book." Price $1.00.

PIONEERS OF PROGRESS.

BY T. A. BLAND.

"It is a historic review of the progress of the nineteenth century on all lines. But the element that makes it universally popular is its human interest."—Chicago Record-Herald.

"A broad-minded lover of his fellows, Dr. Bland delights in giving credit to those men and women who have said things or done things to help forward the welfare of mankind."—Chicago Post.



"It contains biographies of some forty men and women whose live thoughts and heroic deeds gave character to the most wonderful century of the world's history."—Farm, Field and Fireside.

"It is just such a book as one might expect from a man who looks back over seventy-six years spent in tireless pursuit of high ideals."—Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, in Unity.

"The work is written in an easy, pleasing style, and is so interesting that we doubt if one reader in a score who commences one of the sketches will lay the book down until he has finished it."—The Arena.

It has 254 pages, is bound in best cloth with gold title. Price $1.00.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

The Song Cards for sale at this office at $4 per hundred, by mail $4.50, are the help you need in society work.

WEST SIDE SPIRITUALISTS WHO ARE WILLING TO TAKE PART IN ORGANIZING A SOCIETY IN THE DISTRICT OF HUMBOLDT PARK, WILL PLEASE SEND THEIR NAMES AND ADDRESSES TO E. J. CARE OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, 40 Loomis Street.

E. W. Sprague and wife are now at their home in the city of Detroit, Mich., where they expect to remain in the missionary, and other fields of work for the grand cause of Spiritualism. Mr. Sprague's services may be secured for Sunday or week-day meetings, weddings and funerals, anywhere in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, or Canada, in places not too far away from Detroit. Mrs. Sprague will also respond to calls for meetings and seances. They are both well known platform test mediums. Individuals or societies desiring their services can address them at 1082 Trumbull Ave., Detroit, Mich.

The ladies of the Illinois Sunflower Club will hold a Bazaar on Sunday, November 30, in Jefferson Hall, Fraternity Hall building, No. 70 East Adams street. A fine supper will be served at 6 o'clock. All Spiritualists interested in the cause are requested to lend their aid.

The Third Annual Harvest Festival and Dance will be given under the auspices of the Golden Rule Pleasure Club, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western ave., Saturday evening, November 2, 1907. Tickets 25 cents, including score card. Music by W. W. Kirkland; Supper extra.

D. G. Hill writes: "The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society met in its new home on Sunday afternoon, October 6, with Mrs. Nellie Kusserow and Mrs. Golden as the principal workers. In the evening we had with us our own faithful worker, Dr. Geo. B. Warne, as our speaker. His subject was along the line of present conditions and the immediate needs of the Spiritualists. He held the attention of the large audience for over one hour, and the friendly welcome after must have made him feel that his lecture was fully appreciated. Prof. A. W. Kirkland and his estimable wife gave us a number of beautiful renditions with violin and piano, which brought the hearty approval, followen with messages by our well known sister medium, Mrs. C Kirchner, and another stranger sister, Mrs. Nicholson, from California. Their messages were fully enjoyed. Our speaker for Sunday evening, October 20, will be Dr. J. H. Randall, the well known speaker of our city, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue."

Dr. Schaeffer writes: "The opening service of the First Church Psychical Research, in Kenwood Hall, Cottage Grove avenue and 43rd st., was a success in attendance, in enthusiasm, and financially. Several good mediums were present to give messages of greeting and love to all in the hall. The interest was certainly encouraging, and all returned to their homes glad of the opportunity of meeting with us. Several gave their names to become members of the society, and will be received into the church Sunday, October 20.

Titus Merritt writes: "The First Association of Spiritualists of New York City, had a large attendance at 3 p. m., a very convenient time to assemble. Elk's Hall is a part of Majestic Theater Building, situated on the S. W. arc of the Columbus Circle, its furnishings and appointments are harmonious and the officials of the order do all in their power to make it agreeable for the society. Another advantage in the locality is that the Rev. Madison C. Peters, one of the rational scientific ministers of the present age, holds services in the Theater, 11 a. m., closing 12:30, a grand opportunity for refreshments, then walk in Central Park or have a social greeting in the hall until 3 p. m. The pianist and violinist give us fine music which attracts a fine class of spirits and no Diakka. Mrs. Newton being an excellent reader, does her part well. Mrs M. Gaule-Reidinger, in her psychometric readings, brings consolation to many hearts, and illustrates the beauty of harmonial Spiritualism."

Titus Merritt writes from New York that the Spiritual Ethical Society has resumed its meetings. Miss Chushman is president, and Mrs. Helen T. Brigham, the highly gifted inspirational speaker, will occupy the rostrum. In the near future Mrs. Shepard Lilly is expected to address the society, she, too, being an eloquent speaker.

Miss E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "The First Association of Spiritualists held its first meeting in the Pythian Temple, with Mr. L. A. Wood as president, and Mrs. H. D. Morgan, secretary. Mr. Harrison D. Barrett opened the meeting with an able address, followed by Mrs. Mary T. Longley, two very pleasing speakers. Washington Spiritualists are looking forward to the Annual Convention which is to be held in the Masonic Temple. Mrs. M. J. Stephens, Mrs. Collins, Mrs. M. Keeler, Mrs. Price, Mrs Julia Warneke, and Mrs. White have opened their meetings for the winter. During the convention mediums cards will be found on the book table. Come prepared to subscribe for The Progressive Thinker. Mrs. Collins

BEAR IN MIND that the editor of The Progressive Thinker is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not, agree with their respective views.

The Progressive Thinker goes to press one day earlier this week, in order that the paper may reach Washington at the commencement of the N. S. A. Convention. This accounts for the delay in several items.

can accommodate some 25 people in her home during the convention, 725 H. st., N. West.

Harry J. Moore organized a class for instruction in Spiritualism in Grant's Pass, Ore. He writes that he has under contemplation the organization of similar classes in several more places, having already organized them in four cities.

W. D. Noyes writes: "Upon our arrival in Galveston we were received at the Spiritualist Temple by Brother Frise, the genial president, and introduced to the members by Sister W. H. Dean in a few well-chosen words, which were responded to by Mrs. Noyes and the writer; then followed ice cream and cake, and a social visit. Sunday evening the Temple was filled with friends and Christians. We are now settled for the season, and will officiate at funerals and perform marriage ceremonies, and do whatever is expected of speakers and messagebearers. Address me at the Spiritualist Temple, Galveston, Tex."

Mrs. J. H. Severance writes: "I would like to announce to my many friends, readers of The Progressive Thinker, that I have changed my residence to New York City, in order to have my daughter, Lillian Stillman, with me. I am located at 544 West 147th street, New York, where I can now be addressed. I will answer calls to lecture in the East or West or make engagements for the camp season."

W. T. Schumacher writes: "The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature at Van Buren Opera House was well attended on Sunday, September 29. Prof. M. E. Norrington, M. D., of Wheeling, W. Va., gave us inspiring thoughts for the uplifting of humanity. The pastor, Mrs. M. Schumacher, will serve the society Sunday, the 20th, and spiritual messages will be given by Sister Smith and other mediums at 7:30 p. m."

W. Z. Hatcher, of Cleveland, O., writes: "I have succeeded in repairing an impaired reputation, having sent in a new subscriber for each year, only missing the last one, to your most valuable paper, The Progressive Thinker. I hope you may live many years to publish the good news that our dear friends do communicate with us from the other life, with the testimony of thousands from both the educated and the uneducated."

M. Lizzie Beals writes in reference to the Worcester Association of Spiritualists, G. A. R. Hall, 35 Pearl St., Worcester, Mass.: "Services were resumed Sunday, September 22. Mrs. N. J. Willis, of Cambridge, served our society the last two Sundays of September. She has given us an excellent course of lectures, which appeal to the thinker and student in every walk of life. We hope to again welcome her to our platform in the near future. For the month of October Mr. Alfred H. Terry, Miss Susie C. Clark and Rev. Juliette Yeaw will be our speakers."

Vine H. Hickox writes: "The First Spiritual Society (now termed a church) of Niagara Falls has progressed well during the past five years under the leadership of Mrs. A. G. Atcheson of Buffalo. This lady has labored hard during that period of time to plant the truth of Spiritualism in this city. The consequence is, the Maccabee Hall is crowded by large audiences every Sunday evening to receive messages from their departed friends. A mssage that is worthy of note was given to a Lady on Sunday evening, September 8, through the psychic powers of Sister Atchesen. The lady in question, Mrs. W. C. Krell, of 1658 Ontario Avenue, this city, received a message from her father that astounded her. Sister Atcheson described him to perfection. The lady, not knowing that her father was in spirit life, thought that the medium was mistaken, and declared he was alive and well. However, the next morning Mrs. Krell received word that her father, Mr. Giles Rogers of Jamestown, N. Y., passed away from earth life by drowning in Cassadaga Creek, on Saturday, September 7, the day before the message was given to his daughter."

Spiritualists visiting Buffalo, N. Y., will find comfortable, pleasant home accommodations at The Spiritual Retreat; 723 Prospect avenue. Mrs. M. E. Lane.

S. A. Huntington of Malden, Mass., writes of The Progressive Society: "Mrs. B. W. Belcher of Marlboro, Mass., was again with us on Sunday evening, October 6. She chose for her theme "What Spiritualism Is Doing for the Advancement of Humanity," giving, as she always does, a fine instructive address. After the conclusion of her lecture she devoted forty-five minutes to giving many evidences of the continuity of life. Mrs. Annie R. Chapman of Brighton, Mass., will be the speaker and message bearer on Sunday evening, October 13, and Mrs. Alice M. Whall of Everett, Mass., on the 20th."

Correspondent writes: "Mrs. De Loux desires to announce that she has opened her meeting for the next year at the New Grove Club Hall, 40 E. 31st, near Cottage Grove avenue. Her first meeting was a great success, the hall being filled. All are welcome at these meetings, and every endeavor will be made to have them conducted along true spiritual lines."

Mr. Belding, a prominent Spiritualist of San Diego, Cal., passed through the city last week on his way to Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond left Chicago last Sunday night for Washington, D. C., to attend the National Spiritualists' Convention held there this week, to which she has been invited to make a report of her work at The Hague as the delegate of the National Spiritualists' Association to the Peace Congress held there this summer.

Mary B. Hill writes: "The Band of Harmony meeting held October 10 was very pleasing and interesting, as Mrs. Richmond gave an account of her travels and experiences while at the Peace Conference. The exercises of both afternoon and evening are both pleasing and instructive. The next regular meeting will be held October 24, in hall 309 Masonic Temple. The society decided to hold a bazaar December 12, 1907, in the same hall. We hope all friends and members wil bear this in mind. Those who live in other places are invited to remember us if they are not able to be with us."

Dr. and Mrs. Geo. B. Warne, Dr. C. A. Burgess, delegate of the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond of the Church of the Soul, Mrs. Alice Sexsmith, Mrs. J. R. Francis, and others from Chicago, are now in Washington, attending the N. S. A. Convention.

A. Booth writes from Rockford, Ill.: "The Psychic Research Society commenced its meetings, after a vacation of four months, on Sunday, September 29. We were very much pleased to note that there had been no removals by death or otherwise from our midst. The officers of the society were in attendance, and there was a good audience for the opening night. The outlook for the coming season seems to be very promising, and we are endeavoring to give people of Rockford a feast in spiritual things. The official board are at work securing the best talent they can possibly afford, and hope that their efforts will be sustained by the various workers that come to our rostrum. The first worker with us is Mrs. M. A. Helyett, late of Lynn, Mass., now a resident of Chicago. This was her first visit to the society and proved a very pleasant one, both to the society and to Mrs. Helyett. Her work in giving tests and messages was excellent, reading from sealed questions, every description and message being fully recognized. She will serve the society again next Sunday, October 13, and also hold a test circle on Tuesday, October 15, and we hope she will be greeted with a very large audience. On Sunday, October 20, Mrs. Dr. Caird will be with us, and we hope that she will be able to give us as good a meeting as she did last spring. Other workers, including Dr. Warne, who comes to us the first Sunday in November, and we hope to see H. D. Barrett in that month, also. Due notice will be given through the columns of The Progressive Thinker."

Hattie F. R. Peet, secretary, writes: "The regular monthly business meeting of the "Illinois Sunflower Club" was held as usual, at Lincoln Hall, Tuesday, October 8, at 2 p. m. Our beloved president, Mrs. J. R. Francis, also Mrs, Isa Cross, vice-president, were absent, as they are attending the National Spiritualists' Convention, at Washington, D. C., Mrs. Francis having been appointed by our Club as delegate, and Mrs. Cross as alternate. But we had a goodly number present, and all are interested in making our approaching Bazaar a success. This Bazaar is to be held at Jefferson Hall, 70 Adams st., on Saturday afternoon and evening, November 30. The following committee are appointed to serve at the Bazaar, and contributions to the different booths are solicited from our friends and patrons. Mrs. Isa Gross, general manager; Mrs. A. W. Bloom, on supper; Mrs. E. J. Bloom and Mrs. Myers, on aprons; Mrs. Helen A. Musser, on fancy work; Mrs. Skinner and Mrs. Nash, on handkerchiefs; Mrs. Kirchner, on dolls; Mrs. Goodrich, toilet articles and cosmetics; Mrs. Lichtig on psychic readings and mediums; Mrs. Sidell, on candy. Our next Tea Party will be held at Lincoln Hall, 70 Adams st., Tuesday, October 22, from 2 till 5 p. m. Mrs. L. Deitz will preside at the urn. Some of our best mediums will read the cups. Each 10 cent cup of tea served gives you a reading. Join us with your friends on these most enjoyable occasions. Friends will please send their contributions to approaching Baazar to No. 40 Loomis st., care of Mrs. J. R. Francis, president."

Geo. S. Derr writes: "Since I have been a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker, I have been a reader of Hudson Tuttle, and I like him because he is so candid, so truthful and fearless in all that he writes, and therefore I preface this by stating that it must not be considered a criticism or a correction, but only calling attention to an error that everyone makes who is not familiar with nautical phrases, and sailors who delight in a story that will show up in a true light what they call a "sky pilot" (teacher or priest), laugh when they discover any nautical name wrongly used. I don't want them to laugh at Hudson Tuttle. I want him to send a story among them that will take their souls into our spiritual harbors in fleets. Mr. Tuttle makes use of the word "sheet" as the sail; there is no name for a sail, but "sail," with the prefix denoting its kind or place. 'Sheet'' on small boats is merely a rope made fast near the outer end of booms (if there is a boom) or outer lower corner of sail (if it is a sprt sail), but on large vessels it is a block and tackle, to shift jibs or fore and aft sails from side to side, or to suit the wind. When a vessel is sailing the sheet sometimes extends far outboard, and as the vessel rushes through the water the spray wets it, hence,

A wet "sheet" and a flowing sea,
And a wind that follows fast,
And fills the white and rustling "sail"
And bends the gallant mast.

With success to Spiritualists and all connected with The Progressive Thinker."

THE CAUSE GAINING.

Under the Efficient Services of Alice C. Barry.

To the Editor:—The local society is still hammering away at the old stand. Its meetings have been held continuously during nine months of the year for the last three years, and as Brother Peck expressed it at the Clinton Camp, the past summer, "It would be impossible to estimate the good accomplished through the efforts of this society."

The meetings opened shortly after the close of camp, and we are looking forward to a successful season's work.

We have lately formed a Sunflower Social Club, whoch, for the coming year, will be under the efficient management of Mrs. William Smith, for many years an ardent Spiritualist, and and one ever ready to lend her good right hand and bright intellect for the advancement of truth.

Mrs. Stockwell, our organist, and a fine pianist as well, is highly appreciated by our people.

I will soon begin my fourth year's work with this society as speaker and message bearer, and have gone with them heart and love, and given all I possessed of intellect and spiritual gifts, to spread the light of truth in this conservvative church-ridden city of Clinton, and we know that a lasting impression for good has been made.

Three years ago the gatherings usually numbered about fifteen. Our notice in the local papers advertising Sunday meetings, were nearly always to be found wedged in between the advertisements of beer-saloons or rooms to let (the latter rather suggestive), while at the present time the meetings are well attended, and our notices placed along with those of other religious denominations.

So we realize we are gaining the respectful hearing of the thinking people, and are moving onward and upward, most of us trying to exemplify in our lives the truths we are so earnestly seeking to promulgate.

Let me say in closing, that I will answer calls for funerals within reasonable distance of Clinton. Address me at 233 First Avenue, Clinton, Ia.

ALICE C. BARRY.

A Wave From Oklahoma.

I trust there may be space in the columns of your valuable paper for a notice of the work in our little city of Blackwell, I submit a brief report of the Psychic Research Society, which, as an organization has a record of nearly two years' standing, although, as yet a small membership. Nevertheless we are holding fast to that which is good, knowing we must work if we would win a firmer foundation in the time to come. Through the kindly interest of one of our leading merchants, Mr. Fred Hoppe, a little hall is furnished "without money or price" for weekly meetings, under the leadership of Mrs. Edna Bacon, who by precept and example, has helped to bring the knowledge of spirit return to many.

On September 20, 21 and 22, we were especially favored by the ministrations of Mr. Will J. Erwood. As an advocate of the Christ principle, his forceful reasoning and sound logic he received the undivided attention of all his hearers. With surprise and delight many listened who came to ask, and received the understanding of what true Spiritualism stands for.

In numbers the attendance increased at each successive lecture. Mr. Erwood also gave some fine tests as proof of spirit return, and left us with the only regret that he had not made a week's date in Blackwell, but promises in the near future to return for another series of lectures, which we hope will give added strength and honor to the cause in this part of Oklahoma.

Mrs. Josephine Bruer, secretary of the Kansas State Association, was present, also voicing some beautiful thoughts in an earnest, impressive manner.

Mrs. Bessie Bellman of Winfield, Kan., who has served our society as speaker a number of times during the year past, will again be with us the second Sunday in October. With her rare gift of inspiration and charming personality, Mrs. Bellman is listened to with the utmost pleasure and satisfaction by all who come into her presence. We hail her coming with glad welcome for the feast of good things she has to offer.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About 7 words constitute a line.]

Passed to spirit life from Lyndon, Vt., September 19, 1907, Helen Chamberlain Way, aged seventy-one years. To a naturally intelligent and refined mind were added sterling virtues and a genial disposition. She had been for many years a consistent and earnest Spiritualist and was a good medium. Both Mr. and Mrs. Way seized every opportunity which presented itself to aid in the dissemination of the Cause so dear to their hearts. The funeral transpired at the home Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Emma Paul, a friend of many years, officiated; a male quartet discoursed choice music. The profusion of beautiful floral tributes soothed the solemn hour and inspired the bereaved hearts with the exalted hope she would have wished. The husband with whom she had passed fifty years, and the beloved children and grandchildren keenly feel their earthly loss, but are sustained by the sweet assurance of her spirit ministration and a happy rehappy reunion. G.

Mrs. Abbie Roy passed to the higher life September 19, at Jackson, Mich., Aged 25 years. She was a devout Spiritualist. She received many messages that were consoling to hearts that had grown weary. She longed to go, having an assurance her loved ones would meet her in the land of the Lehli Service was conducted by Laura L. Crawford, of Detroit, Mich.

W. D. Moore passed to spirit life, September 25, at his daughter's, Mrs. F. C. Peck, in Osceola, Iowa. Funeral was held in the M. E. Chruch, September 26, at Decatur, the remains were taken charge of by the I. O. O. F., and laid to rest in the Decatur Cemetery. Rev. Lockwood preached the funeral sermon to a large concourse of friends. He was a veteran Spiritualist, born December 25, 1827. G. M. PAUL.

Omaha, Neb.—The eyes of the scientific world are fastened upon the little town of Ashland, Neb., where Dr. S. von Mansfelde is bringing to a close experiments with a new cure for tuberculosis—experiments which promise great things to those who suffer with consumption. The doctor is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and holds membership in various medical associations, both state and national.

Dr. Mansfelde has discovered a plant having properties for which he has been searching many years—in which search he has been assisted by the department of agriculture at Washington and by Dr. David Fairchild, the eminent botanist and agricultural explorer. This plant is fenugreek, and its home is in the arid portions of Tunis and other north African countries. The property for which Dr. Mansfelde has been searching so long and which is possessed by fenugreek, is that its fattening powers are so great that even under the ravages of consumption the patient puts on flesh and gains strength steadily while taking it. Remaining strong, the patient then has an opportunity of throwing off the germs of consumption and becoming entirely well.

"I believe fenugreek is what I have been searching for for thirty years," says von Mansfelde.

While reading an article by Dr. David Fairchild of Washington, who had been traveling in Africa and had written about fenugreek, Dr. Mansfelde was struck by the following paragraph:

"The seed of the plant (fenugreek) curiously enough is eaten by the Jewish women of Tunis in order to make them fat, and no young Jew of that region will think of marrying a girl until the use of the grain had increased her weight to the fashionable figure of 250 to 300 pounds."

That was what Mansfelde wanted—something of great fattening power. So he wrote Dr. Fairchild, asking about fenugreek. Fairchild had a few grains of the seed with him and immediately sent them to the Nebraska doctor. Then Mansfelde went to far-away Tunis for still more of the grain, and also to inquire how the women ate it.

Instead of being eaten in great quantities, Mansfelde was surprised to discover that the grain was taken very sparingly and its fattening properties were not in the amount eaten, but in a certain element or chemical which it contained and which forced the assimilation of fats taken into the stomach by the patient.

The difficulty which physicians in the past have tried in vain to overcome in a consumptive is that the fats are not assimilated and the patient loses flesh rapidly and practically dies of exhaustion and weakness.

But von Mansfelde found great difficulty in securing enough fenugreek with which to carry on his experiments. He had the grain sent him in large quantities, but found it so badly adulterated as to be of little use. To meet this difficulty, he planted some of the seed in sandy soil on his ranch near Ashland, and to-day is raising a first-class crop of the plant, which never grew outside of the desert before. The doctor hopes that when his crop is harvested, he will have enough fenugreek to carry his experiments to a successful end.

Fenugreek belongs to the pea or alfalfa family, the leaves looking not unlike the ordinary garden pea and the grain growing in pods like a bean. In taste, it is very bitter. An analysis shows the bean to contain only 7.12 per cent fat oil; and this fat has little or nothing to do with the efficacy of fenugreek in forcing the patient to take on flesh.

As soon as the year's crop of fenugreek is harvested, it is Mansfelde's intention to take several tubercular patients in various stages of the disease, and treat them together, in order that he may observe the effect. These cases will come from different portions of the country, if possible.

Although he is very enthusiastic about the effects of fenugreek on tuberculosis patients, Dr. Mansfelde does not claim he has discovered a cure for consumption. He only says "wait." M. D.

LOVE IS LOVE.

Love is love, the round world over,
And hearts the same in every clime,
In those of noble birth or the worldly rover,
Love builds within a holy shrine;
And starry worlds gleam on above
On mountain heights of splendor,
To tell the old, old tale of love
In words sweet and tender.

In mart of trade, in selfish greed,
In business and in pleasure,
Love's gentle voice comes oft to plead
For profit and for treasure;
For that which makes for real gladness,
Is not of selfish, sordid power,
But that which soothes the heart of sadness
In life's trial hour.

As long as stars shine out above,
And rivers seek the sea,
Fond hearts will tell their tale of love,
Wherever they may be.
The world's brave hearts have ever been
Inspired by love and beauty,
And woman's truest sphere is when
Leading mankind to duty.

THE PATHWAY of the Human Spirit, or the Pathway of the Spirit Traced, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Price 75 cents; postage 12 cents.

WARNED IN A VISION CAPTAIN GIVES UP SEA.

August Richter Surrenders Command of the Liner Kronprinz Wilhelm After Receiving a Message by an Unearthly Visitor.

To the Editor:—I am glad that I can find outside the ranks of Spiritualism as much to sustain Spirit Return as I can find inside of our ranks. The following from the Record Herald of Chicago speaks for itself, setting forth that, warned by heavenly powers, as he declares, to give up seafaring, Captain August Richter, known to thousands of Americans as the commander of the North German Lloyd steamship Kronzprinz Wilhelm, has retired from the service. It was after the great ocean greyhound's collision with an iceberg early this summer that Captain Richter received his supernatural visitation.

The Kronzprinz Wilhelm came into this port Tuesday under the command of Captain R. Nierich, and comment upon the absence of Captain Richter, who had been with the Kronzprinz since her maiden voyage, elicited this amazing explanation.

It is a curious coincidence that Captain Richter's brother Herman abandoned the business twenty years ago for the same reason. His ship, the Saale, struck an iceberg in a fog on the Grand Banks, and upon reaching port he resigned, declaring that he had received an uncanny message compelling him to this step.

Captain Richter's warning came upon him on a voyage that began at Bremen July 2. Four days later, while the Kronzprinz was steaming through a dense fog on the Grand Banks, she crashed into an iceberg. Only the fact that the berg, having reached the southern limit, was crumbling and that the steamer struck it a glancing blow prevented a terrible disaster. While Captain Richter was resting in his state room that night, sleepless and under a great nervous strain, the supernatural warning to give up the sea came upon him.

Under the command of Captain Richter the Kronzprinz Wilhelm, which is one of the great North German ocean flyers, has established several records for trans-Atlantic travel. His retirement has caused several shifts in the captains of the line. Captain Polack has gone to the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, relieving Captain P. Wetten, and Captain H. Bleeker of the Frederick der Grosse has gone to the Koenigin Luise, relieving Captain O. Volger, who takes command of the Prinzess Alice.

"WHERE SPIRITUALISTS ERR."

The Writer Wants the Beautiful Truths of Spiritualism Impregnated in the Lives of Each One.

Where we Spiritualists as a whole err, is in that we all want to do too much for the Cause of Truth. How often do we hear individuals say, "Well, I am doing all I can for the Cause," and still another will say, "O, I have worked for the Cause so many years, and I am going to continue to do all I can for it the rest of my life."

Now, what a sad mistake we are making in trying to do so much for the Cause, and not let the Cause do more for us.

Spiritualism is based on actual knowledge, but most of us Spiritualists are living in ignorance, simply because we want to do too much for the Cause, instead of applying the Cause of Truth in our every-day lives.

While Spiritualism has brought a great number of people into its ranks as believers, in the last fifty years, yet how few are there among this great number who actually apply the beautiful philosophy to their every-day lives? I am sure that if we had let the Cause do more for us in our individual lives the number of Spiritualists would have been far greater than it is, and there would be less fakers in the ranks than there are now.

Are not many so-called Spiritualists only pretenders, and but little in advance of the fakers?

Even among certain workers in the field, there exists the greatest jealousy, envy, pride.

Now, I will not say that Spiritualism is not respectable, but I will ask this question of each one individually: Are we as Spiritualists respectable in the sight of the public, when we claim to be what we are not? By their fruits ye shall know them. Now, then, let us reverse our sentiment, instead of us trying to do so much for the Cause, let us apply the beautiful philosophy and teaching of Spiritualism in our own lives from day to day, and we will all become glittering stars of truth, and as the stars at night shine forth into the darkness and illuminate the blue sky, so will we shine forth into the darkness of other lives, if we will but let the Cause do more for us with the beautiful principles of truth.

Then we will become a force, and not until then.

To-day, as a whole, we can only see the splinter in the other fellow's eyes; never stop to look at the great beam in our own eyes. Now, let us change things and all look within our own homes, the Temple of the Spirit, and apply in good strong doses the beautiful Cause of Truth, and I assure you, sisters and brothers, that we Spiritualists will make such a great stride in advance that the eyes of the world will be turned upon us, and in the next ten years we will grow in greater numbers than we have in the last fifty-eight years.

Let us become practical Spiritualists, pure and simple, and we will make this old world a real sweet place here and now.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead."

These words stand out on the cover of Edward C. Randall's new book. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet Mr. Randall believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

Oliver Proctor.—Q. What constitutes "personality"?

A.—In everything which is written by my pen, words are given with strictly the meaning assigned by the dictionary. The meaning given to personality is the individual, as a whole, and conscious being, distinct from a thing or animal. It is the same of everything which goes to make the distinctive character of man or woman.

What it is may be arrived at by elimination. Take a man of fine mental and moral endowments, and possessed of large means. Strike off his fine equipage, his house and lands, his bonds and stocks; everything he possesses, yet his personality remains unchanged. How much of his physical body might be spared without interrupting or modifying his personality, has not been determined. If life is continuous, then the entire physical body may be discarded, and by that means a higher and more absolute personality attained.

The personality is the conscious self, and the word should be given no other meaning. But in philosophical treatises the writers usually start with a stock of words to which they give new meanings, and without a full acquaintance with their vocabulary, their writings are not understandable. As each of these writers makes definitions to please himself, I have no disposition nor desire to repeat or discuss the merits or truthfulness of the various systems. Each must answer for itself.

I have often questioned, when attempting to read the various metaphysical treatises, whether the writers had any clearly defined and definite ideas, or were they just juggling with words, making them so befog the reader that he abjectly bowed before the fog-bank of profundity.

Leroy Jones.—Q. I am greatly perplexed by the conflicting and imperfect communications and answers I have received. How can they be explained?

A.—Our correspondent is not alone in his trouble. At some time in the investigations this experience has come to nearly everyone. Yet it really has little weight when a full knowledge of spiritual law is gained.

A few evenings ago an old-time friend came in and began, in half-earnest, half-joking tone, to combat the belief that spirits could return and communicate. He is one of those who are by organization agnostics, and become vain of their unbelief. They "do not know," and are proud that they do not know.

"Have you studied and investigated the subject?" I asked.

"Oh, yes, until disgusted with the contradictions and lies I received. Plainly there is nothing back of these so-called manifestations."

"I have, on the contrary, found that there is unfathomable intelligence," I replied.

"Did you ever identify this intelligence?" he asked.

"I think I have, many times."

"It is a mistake. I do not doubt your sincerity, but you are mistaken. Once a medium told me that my father was present. I asked him to give his name. He wrote 'J-o-n.' My father not being able to spell his own name correctly! And when I asked him about things he ought to know, he blundered a while and then was silent. Not a word could I get! What am I to conclude? What can anyone conclude, otherwise than that the whole thing is a delusion and there is nothing beyond the so-called medium?"

"You are one of the unfortunates, and the conditions have been against you."

"Oh, ho!" he laughed; "Conditions! That's a baby refuge. When you are driven to the limits and have no other excuse, the "conditions" are evoked as cause of failure! Did you ever hear a scientist complain of conditions? — an astronomer, chemist, electrician? They are above and beyond such petty subterfuge."

"I think I have heard them make just such complaints. I have heard of astronomers going to the other side of the globe to take observations on the sun during an eclipse of that luminary, and returning with the complaint that the conditions of the clouds made it impossible for them to catch a glimpse of the sun, to say nothing about observing the eclipse. I have heard of chemists having the most elaborate experiments fail because of some unknown impurity in the reagents employed. I have heard of electricians—. Just then the telephone bell rang, and on taking the receiver, there came an indistinct muttering, with the first syllable of a name, and then silence. I endeavored to call up Central, without response. It proved afterward that the wire had broken at the very moment the message began.

I turned to my agnostic friend and said, in dictatorial tones, "This telephone is a fraud. We have been deluded into the belief that our acquaintances and neighbors talk with us over the wire; I have found many times contradictions, and received falsehoods and fake news; now there is a complete breakdown, all of which points conclusively to me that there is no one at the other end of the line, and if not now, there never has been."

He sprang to his feet in astonishment. "Have you gone daft?" he cried. "Why, some little thing is the matter with the line—a broken wire, or branch of a tree touching it. It will soon be repaired."

"Out with your broken wire!" I replied, "and the idiotic remark that the touch of a branch of a tree can prevent communication."

"Why, my dear sir," he said, in a tone as though talking to a child, "electricity is a mysteriously delicate thing to handle. We may know very little of the conditions which control it. It looks to me as though your mind is giving way when you jump to such conclusions."

"Conditions," I retorted, "that is the subterfuge of fraud. I tell you it will not go down with me. You said, not a minute ago, that 'conditions, are 'baby refuge,' and that, too, when dealing with phenomena far more subtle than electrical. I did not see anyone at the other end of the line. I heard an indistinct muttering and one syllable of a name, and then came blank failure. The spirit was more successful with you, for he succeeded in giving his name, though spelled wrongly, and continued talking, though not as you think your father would. If I am daft in my conclusions, you must be quite demented, for they have the stronger support. The medium may be only partially controlled—we will say a poor conductor—or by surroundings like a broken wire, or the spirit unversed in the methods of dictation."

"I beg your pardon," he said, "I really thought you were in earnest in condemning the telephone."

"And if you freely expressed your mind, my conclusion was very silly?"

"To be candid and outspoken—was it not?"

"It was very silly, as the conclusion that because there are conflicting, untruthful and vapid communications, there is nothing back of the manifestation, or that they are the work of evil and obsessing spirits."

THOUGHTS BEAUTIFUL.

Beautiful thoughts; fair and bright in the morning,
Sung by the voices of angels anear,
Beautiful gems of the soul's pure adorning,
Bring ye to bless, to enlighten and cheer.

Beautiful thoughts, as ye come in the even,
When the soft light lulls to silence and rest,
Bring ye a message of gladness from heaven,
Calming our spirits with balm of the blest.

Beautiful thoughts in the still hours of slumber,
Come ye in dreams or in visions of light,
Voices of angels, in sweet tuneful number,
Sing to our souls songs that gladden the night.

Beautiful thoughts in life's bright hours of gladness,
Breathing the incense of sweetness and love—
Angelic goodness dispelling our sadness,
Tuning our hearts for the heaven above.

Beautiful thoughts, in the hour of affliction,
Bring ye a message of peace and of love—
E'en in the hour of the soul's crucifixion,
Angels bring help from the bright home above.

Beautiful thoughts, ye are blessings from heaven,
Winged by the angels of mercy and peace—
Thoughts of the angels to earth's weary given,
Bringing to sorrow a soulful release.

Beautiful thoughts, fairest jewels of morning—
Fairer than all that flecks night's starry scroll—
Purest of gems for the soul's pure adorning,
Robing with beauty the beautiful soul.

Beautiful thoughts, pure and sweet inspiration,
Moulding our soul's to the good and the true—
Ever ascending, a holy oblation,
Ever returning our life to renew.

Come when ye will, heaven's thoughts, angels bringing Fullness of blessing to brighten life's scroll,
E'er as we listen the angels are singing
Beautiful thoughts in the beautiful soul.

"HOW SHALL I BECOME A MEDIUM?"

It is fully answered in "Mediumship, and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio

The Science of Thought Transference.

As Illustrated by the Great Scientist, Sir Oliver Lodge, in the Chicago Sunday American.

The progress of science may be likened to the ascent of a mist-covered mountain of unknown and perhaps infinite height, up the sides of which we are slowly and laboriously groping our way, making our access as secure and permanent as we can; in some parts, indeed, constructing a good broad road. The clouds are very dense ahead of us, though there are legends of their having broken at times and let a nimble-footed traveler rush on far ahead. And such a one has sometimes blazed the trees or painted the rocks as he went, hoping thereby to assist us in following him; but we feel no security as to his destination and distrust his marks. As scientific workers, we know no better nor safer plan, in the long run, than to map out our own slow route, ignoring all previous tracks, and making sure of the ground we have already covered by continually crossing and recrossing it in all directions.

The slope is not always ascending—there may be level tracks occasionally; sometimes we have actually to descend, in order to cross some stream or other depression. Not every knoll, again, lies on the direct route to the summit, but the clouds are so thick that the only way to detect the character of each minor hill-top is to explore it. Some choose one route and some another, and the multifarious cries resounding on all sides as to the most advantageous path are often most perplexing.

Whenever the land in front of us seems to descend, the outcry is especially noisy; and yet such minor descents may be really an effective way of ultimately gaining the summit.

Down such a depression of skepticism we of the middle of the nineteenth century have confessedly gone, though there are not wanting signs that we have touched bottom, and that the ascent on the other side is already beginning—though some there are so pleased with the ease of the descent that they apparently hope it may last.

If this is indeed a real route to some of the higher peaks, a large number of camp-followers must similarly make the descent, and it will probably be for them a far more wholesome discipline, and lead more directly to ultimate progress than standing still on points of vantage already attained, and being therewith content.

The knolls, or minor elevations, are crowded with satisfied people, who glory in the little achievements and perceive not that to make progress they must partially descend. An era of doubt is essential.

Those who have gone groping onward, and apparently downward, are already, it may be, higher than those left on the other knolls; but vision is impossible through the mist, and shouting is very misleading, so they will not believe but that the temporary descent is leading the reckless and advancing spirits into some fearful abyss. The shoutings are called a conflict of science and religion, and are given other sounding titles, but they do not amount to much on either side. The best plan is not to waste breath in shouting, but to forge on ahead, and try to make a decent road, or even a bridge, for the weaker brethren. Not that I would deny the existence of real chasms and crevasses, which some care is needed to avoid. The subject I have chosen is a rugged and difficult cliff, with chasms lying all about its foot, strewed with the bones of explorers, and by many persons thought to lie off the track of profitable advance. By others it is thought to be crowned by a plateau of amazing extent and fertility, richer than anything we have yet attained, and well worth the labor and danger of ascent.

How much truth there is in either of these opinions I have no means of deciding. Every person engaged in the quest of truth must trust his instinct and ascend the elevations that come in his way.

It is unwise to turn your back on any real rise of ground, for you thereby run the risk of wilfully losing your way.

Every path must be explored in the interest of truth.

By thought-transference I mean a possible communication between mind and mind, by means other than any of the known organs of sense; what I may call a sympathetic connection between mind and mind, using the term mind in a vague and popular sense, without strict definition. Now, what do I mean by sympathetic connection? Take some examples:

A pair of iron levers, one on the ground, the other some hundred yards away on a post, are often seen to be sympathetically connected; for when a railway official hauls one of them through a certain angle, the distant lever or semaphore arm revolves through a similar angle. The disturbance has traveled from one to the other through a very obvious medium of communication, viz: an iron wire or rope.

The pulling of a knob, followed by the ringing of a bell, is a similar process, and the transmission of the impulse in either of these cases is commonly considered simple and mechanical. It is not so simple as we think; for concerning cohesion we are exceedingly ignorant; and why one end of a stick moves when the other end is touched no one at present is able clearly to tell us.

Consider, now, a couple of tuning forks, or precisely similar musical instruments, isolated from each other and from other bodies, suspended in air, let us say. Sound one of them and the other responds, i. e., begins to emit the same note. This is known in acoustics as sympathetic resonance; and again a disturbance has traveled through the medium from one to the other. The medium in this case is intangible, but quite familiar, viz., atmospheric air.

Next, suspend a couple of magnets, alike in all respects—pivoted, let us say, on points—at some distance from each other. Touch one of the magnets and set it swinging, the other begins to swing slightly, too. Once more a disturbance has traveled from one to the other, but the medium in this case is by no means obvious: It is nothing solid, liquid, or gaseous; that much is certain. Whether it is material or not depends partly on what we mean by material—partly requires more knowledge before a satisfactory answer can be given. We do, however, know something of the medium operative in this case, and we call it the ether.

In these cases the intensity of the response varies rapidly with distance, and at sufficiently great distance the response would be imperceptible.

This may be hastily set down as a natural consequence of a physical medium of comunication, and a physical or mechanical disturbance; but it is not quite so.

Consider a couple of telephones connected properly by wires. They are sympathetic, and if one is tapped the other receives a shock. Speaking popularly, whatever is said to one is repeated by the other, and distance is practically unimportant; at any rate, there is no simple law or inverse square, or any such kind of law; there is a definite channel for the disturbance between the two.

The real medium of communication, I may say parenthetically, is still the ether.

Once more, take a mirror, pivoted on an axle, and capable of slight motion. At a distance let there be a suitable receiving instrument, say a drum of photographic paper and a lens. If the sun is shining on the mirror, and everything properly arranged, a line may be drawn by it on the paper miles away, and every tilt given to the mirror shall be reproduced as a kink in the line. And this may go on over great distances, no wire or anything else commonly called "material" connecting the two stations—nothing but a beam of sunlight, a peculiar state of the ether.

So far we have been dealing with mere physics. Now poach a little on the ground of physiology.

Take two brains, as like as possible, say belonging to two similar animals; place them a certain distance apart, with no known obvious means of communication, and see if there is any sympathetic link between them. Apply a stimulus to one, and observe whether the other in any way responds. To make the experiment conveniently it is best to avail oneself of the entire animal, and not its brain alone. It is then easy to stimulate one of the brains through any of the creature's peripheral sense organs, and it may be possible to detect whatever effect is excited in the other brain by some motor impulse, some muscular movement of the appropriate animal.

So far as I know, the experiment has hitherto been principally tried on man. This has certain advantages and certain disadvantages. The main advantage is that the motor result if intelligent speech is more definite and instructive than mere pawings or gropings or twitchings. The main disadvantage is that the liability to conscious deception and fraud becomes serious, much more serious than it is with a less cunning animal.

Of course, it by no means follows that the experiment will succeed with a lower animal because it succeeds with man; but I am not aware of its having been tried at present except with man.

A simple mode of trying the experiment would be to pinch or hurt one animal and see if the other can feel any pain. If he does feel anything, he will probably twitch and rub, or he may become vocal with displeasure.

There are two varieties of the experiment: First, with some manifest link or possible channel, as, for instance, where two individuals hold hands through a stuffed-up hole in the wall; and, second, with no such obvious medium, as when they are at a distance from each other.

Instead of simple pain in any part of the skin, one may stimulate the brain otherwise, by exciting some special sense organ, for instance that of taste or smell. Apply nauseous or pleasant materials to the palate of one animal and watch the countenance of the other; or, if human, get the receptive person to describe the substance which the other is tasting.

These experiments have been tried with human subjects, and they have had a full measure of positive result. But I am not concerned with making assertions regarding facts, or expecting credence at present. A serious amount of study is necessary before one is in a position to criticise any statement of fact. What I am concerned to show is that such experiments are not, on the face of them, absurd; that they are experiments which ought to be made; and that any result actually obtained, if definite and clear, ought to be gradually and cautiously accepted, whether it be positive or negative.

It may be objected that my mode of statement involves some hypothesis. The nerves of an individual, A, are stimulated, and the muscles of another individual, B, respond. How do I know that the brain of either A or B has anything to do with it? Why may it not be an immediate connection between the peripheral sense organs themselves?

I think as we go on you will feel that this is impossible, and that we are driven by probability to ascend at least as high as brain in order to explain such facts as I have been postulating as possibly true. But I have not the slightest wish to dogmatize on the matter, and only to save time do I make that much assumption.

So far I have supposed the stimulus to be applied to the nerves of touch, or more generally the skin nerves, and to the taste nerves; but we may apply a stimulus equally well to the nerves of hearing, or smelling, or of seeing. An experiment with a sound or smell stimulus, however, is manifestly not very crucial unless the intervening distance between A and B is excessive; but a slight stimulus can be readily confined within narrow limits of space. Thus, a picture can be held up in front the eyes of A, and B can be asked if he sees anything; and if he does, he can be told either to describe it or to draw it.

If the picture or diagram thus shown to A is one that has only just been drawn by the responsible experimenter himself; if it is one that has no simple name that can be signalled; if A is not allowed to touch B, or to move during the course of the experiment, and has never seen the picture before; if, by precaution or screening, rays from the picture can be positively asserted never to have entered the eyes of B; and if, nevertheless, B describes himself as seeing it, however dimly, and is able to draw it, in dead silence on the part of all concerned; then, I say, the experiment would be a good one.

But not yet would it be conclusive. We must consider who A and B are.

If they are a pair of persons who go about together, and make money out of the exhibition; if they are in any sense a brace of professionals accustomed to act together, I deny that anything is solidly proved by such an experiment, for cunning is by no means an improbable hypothesis.

Cunning takes such a variety of forms that it is tedious to discuss them; it is best to eliminate it altogether. That can be done by using unassorted individuals in unaccustomed rooms. True, the experiment may thus become much more difficult, if not indeed quite impossible. Two entirely different tuning forks will not respond. Two strangers are not usually sympathetic, in the ordinary sense of this word; perhaps we ought not to expect a response. Nevertheless, the experiment must be made, and if B is found able to respond, not only to A1, but also to A2, A3, and other complete strangers, under the conditions already briefly mentioned, then the experiment may be regarded as satisfactory. I am prepared to assert that such satisfactory experiments have been made.

SIR OLIVER LODGE.

THESE AWFUL PARTINGS.

It is sad that trusting friends must sometime go apart
And rend the very life-chords of each aching, bursting heart,
And yet, down in the silent psychic life there are those sacred ties
Of love that tighten with the tread of time and have no sad good-byes.

The forms may part, the earth roll in between, and yet,
When all the harshness of the shock is past and Nature's sun has set,
Down in the calm, sweet silence, 'mid the angels' voices ring
The whispering tones of love that vibrate on each tightened string.

Nor time, nor death, nor space can break the vibrant chords ingrown
In hearts enwrapt in perfect bond; they ever grasp their own.
No day so bright, no night so dark that soul cannot find soul
In Life's eternal flowing, boundless fountain bowl.

No mountain peak so high that souls once linked shall break
In climbing—lose each other's trail—when they from woe awake.
There is no death to friendship true, though age on age roll by
And friends pass on apart from view; aye! sweet friendship cannot die.

Awake! oh, souls bowed down in woe! there is no place for grief,
And soon in Time's embrace the busy mind will find relief.
A mother loses from her breast a babe and weeps a year,
And Time, the healer, touches her and dries the burning tear.

'Tis sad to part when love enchains, for love its sacred part
Must act in time and space upon the human heart,
In crushed ambitions and dead hopes, that are but higher lights
To beacon on to goals beyond, and lead to higher heights.

At times the soul may fill the eyes with floods of scalding tears,
And anguish rack the form and mind, but in the coming years,
When ev'ry echoing sob has ceased to rend the peacefulness,
Our trials, woes and pains will seem like things that came to bless.

Immortal live our loves, but woe and pain we think so great,
Will paint our futures clear and bright if we can only wait,
And days that seem so dark and drear at noon-time or at dawn,
Will be forgotten as a curse, when they are past and gone.

The Ring-Chism Debate to be Published in Book Form.

To the Editor:—Regarding the Ring-Chism debate, which took place at Headrick, Okla., commencing August 20 and lasting six days, I wish to say that in my opinion it was a victory for our cause, as the calm, gentle and cultured disposition of our good brother John W. Ring won respect for the cause of Spiritualism from day to day; while, on the other hand, the spirit of bluff, braggadocio and clumsy attempt to strut in the garb of the learned, as manifested by his opponent, made the more refined element feel a remorse that any religious sect should be represented by such coarseness.

This debate will be published at once in book form and advertised in all the publications of both sides, and anyone desiring a copy can secure the same. I feel that no Spiritualist need be afraid to help circulate this book, as Mr. Ring, from a standpoint of argument, oratory, and everything that makes man feel and think, was far above his opponent, so it is with the utmost confidence that I recommend John W. Ring, the man and the instrument attuned to the hosts of heaven.

The Warfare of Science With Theology.

A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom. By ANDREW D. WHITE, LL.D., late President and Professor of History at Cornell University. In Two Volumes. 8vo. Cloth, Five Dollars. For Sale at This Office.

In these two large volumes are combined information that the reader could not find in the libraries of the world in fifty years. It shows the constant and determined opposition of Theology to the advancement that has been made in every branch of Science. To the Student it is indispensible. Every Free Thought Speaker should have it. It should circulate in every community. It goes into minute details, citing in all cases the authority, showing the persistency of Theology in fighting new and advanced ideas in Science.

"THE WARFARE OF SCIENCE WITH THEOLOGY" is undoubtedly the most complete, careful, conscientious, able and bravely impartial history of the subject ever written. The exactness and reliability of its facts and citations are unquestioned. Its vast scholarly research is amazing. It contains just the information the student and thinker needs, and so indexed and tabulated that it is handy as a dictionary when one wishes to refer to some special point or topic.

These two large volumes, containing about 900 pages, will be sent to any address on receipt of the price, $5.00.

Ingersoll's Lectures.

The book contains an immense amount of matter, and is sold at a mere nominal price.

Price, postpaid, only $1.00.

A Work of Immense Importance.

FUTURE LIFE

In the Light of Ancient Wisdom and Modern Science.

BY LOUIS ELBE.

This is the authorized translation of the famous book which has been creating so wide a stir in scientific and religious circles throughout France, under the title "La Vie Future." It will be received with equal interest here, and will arouse very general discussion, as the subject is one engaging not only scientists but laymen in ever-increasing numbers.

The fundamental question of the "Immortality of the Soul" has disturbed the great thinkers of all ages, and for the solution of this eternal enigma humanity still seeks in vain.

This volume offers for the first time a complete presentation of all the available evidence hitherto to be found only in the most scattered and inaccessible forms. With great care and exactness M. Elbe has arranged a plain statement of the discoveries, theories, and ideas of the greatest investigators together with his own illuminating views and comments, and a mass of authentic information regarding the beliefs of the primitive races.

The book is divided into two parts, the first part being devoted to the Ideas of the Survival as considered by the Primitive races, and the second to Deductions drawn from the Fundamental sciences. With Portrait of the author. Price $1.20; postage 10c.

Right Generation The Key to the Kingdom of Heaven

BY DR. M. E. CONGER.

This valuable little book treats of the relation of life between men and women and strongly emphasizes the fact that for the betterment of humanity children must be well born. This book is printed in large type on good paper, with leatherette cover. Price, 40 cents.

LIGHT OF EGYPT.

A treatise upon Spiritual Astrology, Alchemy, Talismans, the Magic Wand, Symbolism, Correspondence, Penetralia, etc. A masterly work. Vol. I., cloth, $2; paper, $1. Vol. II., cloth only, $2.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as to Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Condition of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

Price, $1.50; postage, 10 cents.

Why It's Hard to Be Good.

Only the big and brawny have a chance among the savages and barbarians [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune]. The rest are neglected or abused or quickly killed off and out of the way. It is only the gentle folk of cultured nations that take pains with their aged and their invalids and weaklings, and build them homes and get them nurses and medicines and curealls, ounces of prevention and pounds of cure and comfort.

The simple barbarian methods are the ways of the selfish and unsympathetic. The elaborate civilized enterprises are the ways of love and kindness. We thoughtlessly may think—and that, perhaps, is the way we do much of our thinking—that it is old-fashioned to be good. But if we only knew it, goodness is the most progressive thing in the world.

It is trite to say that to be good is to go forward; to do evil is to retrograde. We talk of living up to our ideals, of sinking down to lower standards. In living up to our ideals we are putting our best foot forward. In doing evil we are contented with something less than our best. The evil always is the track of the past which properly belongs to the past; to tread it is to retrace our steps. The good is the pathway stretching beyond to our promised land.

Traveling Along Unbeaten Paths.

One reason that it is "hard" to be good is just this, that in being good we are traveling unbeaten paths; we are following roads which are not so familiar as those that have been well worn, not only by all human feet, but as well by the brute and vegetable kingdoms. We can sweep back over our human evolutions as it surges up not only out of the animal kingdom, but the vegetable world too; aye, into the mineral populations themselves, and everywhere we find the same vices—our old foes with other faces.

The sticks and stones themselves have like passions with ourselves. The vegetable people have their murderous instincts, their cannibalisms and rapine, their deceits and cunning. It is only in the animal kingdom that we see the dawning of some such ideals of goodness as we know, signs of tender personal affection as it comes in the gentle bosoms of the monkey mammas, sparks of conscience as intelligent dogs evince. Yet these are only the rudest rudiments of the love and goodness of the saints. Men have traveled far and away from the tendencies they have brought up with them from the beast and plant life when they are good as the human race knows goodness.

Even the Animals Learn Deceit.

Our ideals for truth have evolved by slow degrees into clearer and clearer veracity out of the tangled trickeries that are in vogue all through the brute populations. We can trace our own propensities for deception at least as far back as those early dissemblings of nature where little beasts simulate the appearance of twigs or grass leaves or the soft brown earth so as to elude their cannibal foes. Those little creatures could not live without resorting to deceit. And few are the animals ever since, either great or small, that have survived without some recourse to false pretense. Little wonder that the tendency remains in human beings as they emerge out of the brute realm. Little wonder that many people, most people perhaps, still think it necessary to deceive in order to achieve their ends. They see no other way out than at least to tell white lies, or, if not directly, to falsify them at least to prevaricate or equivocate. Or if they are particular about lip veracity, they allow false impressions to pass. But this is crudity and ignorance—not culture and cleverness. It is the clever thing to be able to tell the truth: to be able to wage our struggle for existence while subscribing to the ancient Indian ideal of truth in deed, in word, in thought, in intent.

A newspaper reporter was telling Mark Twain that it required a deal of skill to place a lie successfully. But Mark Twain answered that it took a deal more to get through the world without having to lie.

Among the primitive peoples it is hard to get any sort of reliable footing for doing business. But the civilized man of affairs at least has got far enough to say that honesty is the best policy. He realizes that he can compass his ends better by honest methods than by treacheries—another illustration of the progressive quality of goodness.

It is the same with all the other virtues. They evolve as the tokens of civilized life. Revenge, retaliation, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth long have passed from the categories of the virtues.

Among the tales of old Japan and her ancient chivalries is the celebrated story of the forty-seven knights who pledged themselves to avenge the death of their chief, and they all laid down their lives in accomplishing this. But nowadays we esteem nobler the man who can forgive his foe and do good to them who despitefully use him.

Law Becomes More Merciful.

Even the public vengeance of the law works more mercifully than of yore. Punishment is being replaced by reform. In antique China criminals are tortured for the pettiest offenses and are inflicted with the death penalty on slightest pretext. But in modern America, as the English girl remarked, we are not only up to date but up to to-morrow. The latest ideas of penal systems attempt to educate the offenders of the law, to reform them, and, far from taking their lives even for the gravest crimes, would do away with capital punishment and save the evildoer to modify his evil proclivities and give him another chance to become a useful citizen.

One ideal succeeds another, and so we pass to loftier and loftier virtues. Just as the latest autumn dress styles of this season will be old-fashioned next year, so the good of one age becomes the evil of the next, which has evolved higher standards. The virtues of civilizations we have outgrown we now call vices. And many of our own present-day ideals will diminish into pettiness by the nobler coming race. It is by these progressive ideals of goodness, by the progressive virtues, we develop, that we are wafted upward out of the animals we are, into the divine men and women we shall be. By them is ushered in the finer humanity with grander powers and larger reaches of usefulness and joy,

It Pays to be Good.

It seems hard to be good, nevertheless it is worth while. It means all that it can mean to be at the van. It is a supreme prize, a bigger self, a bigger power, a brighter world. If it seems hard to be good it will grow easier, pleasanter. As we excite the goodness in us, it waxes stronger by reason of the practice—becomes more and more efficient. It can do more for us. We find that we can use truth where erstwhile we employed falsities; that we can exploit gentleness and sympathy where formerly we had recourse to rivalries.

And now the values of goodness will be genuinely evident. We see that we have taken the better way. We appreciate all the practical power underlying the poetry and beauty and mystic fascinations of goodness. It becomes more than the figment of a dreamer's mind. New worlds have unfolded, larger forces have revealed. We breathe a purer air. We worship a more glorious sun. We do a greater work. It pays.

IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Should Spiritualists be Flesh Eaters? —Answered Impressively by G. Tabor Thompson, Pastor of the First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia.

DANIEL 1:8—"Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank."

We should not be interested simply in spirit communion; we should be interested in making our bodies fit temples for the use of the angels. We should be interested in every reform which is calculated to benefit humanity and put it in the best relation to the angel world.

The temperance societies have been ringing out warnings from the standpoint of "the king's wine." Let me ring out some warnings about the "king's meat." The people who have stood in the foreground as the advance thinkers of the time along the lines which are for the benefit of humanity, should have been the ones who should have introduced this reform.

The time is coming—is coming rapidly—when there will not be any such a thing as cooking in your kitchen, and some of you, perhaps, will like that change. The time is coming when the cooking will be done at wholesale, just the same as the laundry is now. The time is coming when there will be the cooking for a whole town or city outside of the home and the cooking will be by chefs who understand exactly how things should be prepared. We will then have only the things which will be healthful, only the things which will be for our good. Many things which we would like to have are not the best things for us; things which we crave are frequently the very things which we should let alone.

Now let us take up this great subject of flesh-eating for our morning study. We note that when the world was created, according to the account in Genesis (although it is not scientifically true as given there—but there are hidden truths in it), when the world was ready for man and man was ready for the world, we find that this great God, as he is called, or the Overruling Spirit, or Great Absolute, or Father, or the First Cause, looked upon all that was made and declared it was very good, and said: Children of man there are certain things which are good for your physical organisms. He commends the herbs, and vegetables, and fruits; but nowhere does he tell us that we are to eat flesh; and a strange thing, when speaking of animals, or the lower forms of life (as we term them), they are not to be meat eaters, and if you look over the animal kingdom to-day you will observe that where animals eat meat, they are the savage, the ferocious types, while the class of animals which do not eat meat, but live on fruits and grains, are gentle—the ones which can be made pets.

The singing birds do not eat flesh, the highest forms of animal life do not eat flesh, and we will see when we get the nearest to Nature's heart, that the best bipeds and quadrupeds are not flesh-eaters.

Another reason we should not be flesh-eaters is, it forces us into a position where we do not value life as we ought to; its sacredness is sacrificed to appetite. Most boys seem to think they are men when they can put a gun over the shoulder and go out into the woods and shoot something. That spirit which is born in our American boys to take life for sport is to be deprecated. We should not be eaters of flesh because we should place too high a value on life to take it needlessly. We ought, as Spiritualists who are thinking people, and as those who are in advance of the common people, to prize life at least as highly as the people who live in India. They are not flesh-eating people; they will not take life.

When we had the great congress of religions in Chicago, and the Hindoo teachers came over from India to this country and saw the slaughter-houses of Chicago, and the poor innocent animals killed under the hand of a brute, and saw the great streams of blood and our people laughing at the animals' fate, they went back to their people and told them that the Christian nations needed to be evangelized, and ever since they have been sending us missionaries trying to civilize us; such rebuke is needed and we should profit by it.

There is one other reason we should not be meat-eaters, of which I would speak. You know very well that the spirit in you is giving you a new body constantly, and there is life and death going on in your organism all the time. What becomes of the bodies in which the spirit materializes? Why they drop off and drop out—they decompose—they go to their grave in little particles, as the body renews. Have you ever thought that the cow which was killed last week, and which you will help eat to-day, had the same change taking place in its organism that we have in ours; that its spirit was dematerializing certain parts of that organism all the time? When this beef is killed and prepared and comes on your table and you think you are eating good meat, remember you are eating the death, the dematerialization, the decomposition, the decay which that spirit was working in that creature, and you can't eat the meat without eating the death which the spirit of that creature was casting off! Terrible to contemplate! If there were no other argument in the universe, that would be sufficient to condemn its use.

Can we longer eat that which the spirit of an animal has condemned to dead death? This is eating a double corpse. It may taste good fixed up with all kinds of condiments, but can it be good? Whiskey tastes good to some, tobacco to others; are these good? May not taste be perverted? Should it not be better educated? Surely we cannot expect the best health, the best mind, and the best spirit so long as we live on such diet. We ought not to eat of these things because the Gods cannot bless death; they cannot bless decomposition; they cannot bless decay; they cannot bless that which should never be used.

In order that we may help humanity we ought to have the cleanest, the most healthful, the most wholesome body of any class of religionists in the world. We ought to have a spirit which can come in touch with the angel world and be used by that world for the helpfulness of humanity. Any first-class medium will tell you that the very best results will come to those abstaining from the eating of flesh.

I hope the time will soon come when our cult will not defile themselves with the "king's meat," as well as with his wine. If we want to be like Daniel, "fairer and fatter" than others, if we want to "interpret dreams," if we want to read the "handwriting on the wall," if we want to be advanced in the kingdom, let us live on fruits, vegetables, etc., and our cause will prosper and we live well and live long.

AUTOMATIC WRITING.

A Spirit Wants to Reach His Friends.

To the Editor:—I received the inclosed communication through automatic writing, and the writer requested me to send it to The Progressive Thinker for publication, hoping by this means to reach his friends in the material.

LOA N. RECK.
414 13th street, Toledo, Ohio.

The Message.

I am so glad to get this opportunity to write to the dear friends who are still on the earth plane. My name is Dan Van Kuren, and I passed to spirit life about twenty-four years ago, as you count time, at my brother's home in Whitehall, Mich. They were very kind and good, and I wish to thank them for all they did for me. I want them all to know that I am happy, and would not return to earth life if I could; and I wish to thank this medium for giving me this opportunity, and also all the mediums who so unselfishly give themselves and their time to spiritual work. I was tall and slender, with fair hair and blue eyes, and I hope some dear friend will recognize me.

DAN VAN KUREN.

"BLESSED ARE THEY WHO MOURN."

The religion which the poets teach is a most glorious and rational one. It is the religion of love, and not of hate; of hope, and not of fear. It breathes the ennobling inspiration of truth. It is the divine whisperings of Infinite Power, through its interpreters, to the children of men. The following poem by William Cullen Bryant will be appreciated by all those who have mourned the death of a loved friend:

O, deem not they are blest alone
Whose lives a peaceful tenor keep;
The Power who pities man has shown
A blessing for the eyes that weep.

The light of smiles shall fill again
The lids that overflow with tears;
And weary hours of woe and pain
And promises of happier years.

There is a day of sunny rest
For every dark and troubled night,
And grief may bide an evening guest,
But joy shall come with early light.

And thou who, o'er thy friend's low bier,
Sheddest the bitter drops like rain;
Hope that a brighter, happier sphere
Will give him to thy arms again.

Nor let the good man's trust depart,
Though life its common gifts deny,
Though with a pierced and bleeding heart,
And spurned of men, he goes to die.

For God hath marked each sorrowing day
And numbered every secret tear,
And heaven's long age of bliss shall pay
For all his children suffer here.

SOMETHING ABOUT MIND.

Vibration and Its Potent Influence in the Universe.

To the Editor:—A recent writer in yor valuable paper says: "Without mind matter could not exist. Mind moves the universe. It is the power which creates form, colors, all that exists, and moves them."

Another states that Prof. McIntosh, an "advanced" English scientist, published a book in which he maintained the electrical theory of motion.

Still another writer says: "Matter in time becomes mind."

Occasionally a writer asserts that in all the universe there is nothing but vibration.

Now, among students of physical science there is a practical agreement as to all the phenomena pertaining to matter and its motion. A plain statement of the accepted theories will evidently serve to clear thinking about some of the points above touched upon.

All scientists agree that vibration is universal. Evidently if there is vibration there must be something that vibrates. The thing that vibrates we call matter.

In all the millions of ages before and since the morning stars sang together, every particle of matter and every body of matter has been in motion. All the phenomena of the physical universe are manifestations of motion of matter.

The human mind has no means of receiving communications from the outside world except through vibration.

The science of acoustics treats of the vibrations necessary to produce sound in all its varying force, pitch, etc. The science of optics treats of those necessary to produce all the beautiful phenomena of light.

Force has been defined as anything that produces motion. The effect is always exactly equal to the cause, else something would come from nothing. Hence nothing but motion can produce motion, and force is but another name for motion. Every increase in the size of a moving body is really an increase in the amount of motion, as it is an increase in the amount of force. Every increase in the velocity of motion represents an increase in the amount of force.

Energy is but another name for force; hence energy, power, force and motion are in reality but different names for the same thing.

When men talk learnedly of eternal energy, they can mean nothing more than eternal motion.

Heat has been defined as a mode of motion. Light, electricity, magnetism and every other force in the universe might be defined in the same way. They are all modes of motion, and for that reason are mutually convertible. Heat produces electricity and electricity produces heat, and both produce light, motion or force, because they are both modes of motion.

The so-called electrical theory of the universe is but another name for the same old theory. Whenever there is a manifestation of force not easily understood, some men imagine that they have explained it by calling it electricity.

We know that mind exists, yet if there were no mind in the universe there is no reason to believe that the great law of inertia would not be just as true as it is now. This being the case, the planets with their satellites would revolve in their orbits about the sun, the winds would blow, the storms rage, the rainbow appear in all its beautiful colors, and all the principal phenomena of the physical universe would continue just as they do to-day. All these things would continue because they are results of the motion of matter that has continued through all eternity.

But mind is something more than the mere motion of matter. All the motion, all the heat, all the electricity and all the matter in the universe are not sufficient to produce a single thought.

Mind exists, therefore it has always existed, else something could come from nothing.

Mind exists, therefore it always will exist, else something can become nothing.

If matter is not mind, it cannot become mind. If it could, some new element would be introduced from nothing, which is impossible.

"There is nothing new under the sun." The universe is a vast kaleidoscope in which new forms are constantly appearing, but always made up of the same old parts.

The Best English.

It is not very well known, says a noted author, that in the hall of one of the greatest colleges of England there hangs a frame inclosing a few sentences of which Abraham Lincoln is the author. They are considered the best English that was ever written. You or I might read them over and call them very simple indeed. And they are so simple that any child who reads at all can read and understand them. That is one thing that makes them great. It was his being simple and plain that made Lincoln himself great.

Now here is a little paragraph by Lincoln which he made a rule of his conduct. Suppose you try to write it over and see how much you can improve it. See if each word is the right one and try to find a better word for the place. Notice how simple this is, all but two are words of a single syllable:

"I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to the light I have. I must stand with anybody that stands right, stand with him while he is right, and part with him when he goes wrong."

"A DWELLER ON TWO PLANETS."

THE STORY OF THE GREAT ATLANTIS, and the accompanying map and description thereof, its wonderful and advanced civilization of 12,000 years ago, and the light and lesson it gives forth upon the problems of to-day is worth more to the historian, the statesman, the student, and even the general reader, than many times the price of the book—to say nothing on the many topics of which it treats, sufficient to interest deeply every school of thought in this momentous time of the world's history. This book is endorsed by Prof. Larkin, the great Astronomer and scientist; he regards it as one of the greatest Books of the present age. Address MRS. M. E. M. OLIVER, No. 415 North Fremont avenue, Los Angeles, Cal. Price $2.00.

MASTERSHIP IS THE RIGHT WAY.

THE GREAT WORK is Vol. III., MASTERSHIP, and not Mediumship, of the "Harmonic Series." It makes clear the Way of Mastership. This is the Way that leads to Individual Liberty here and hereafter.

Every intelligent man and woman who is seeking for Spiritual Truth should read THE GREAT WORK. Why? Because:

1. It teaches the Constructive Process of Spiritual Development whereby we may communicate with our spirit friends without becoming Mediums.

2. It explains the most mysterious and fascinating phenomena of human life simply and clearly.

3. It presents a new array of demonstrated facts which prove that MASTERSHIP, and not Mediumship, is the Constructive Road to Spiritual Unfoldment, and that it is open to all who elect to travel it.

4. Its author speaks from the standpoint of one who has "had the personal experience and made the demonstration."

5. It presents to the world a Moral Philosophy so simple and exact that it may be understood by a child, and yet so profound as to meet the deepest and most exalted demands of the human soul.

It will be sent post-paid to any address on receipt of $2.00. Address, Department P. T.

Science and a Future Life

By Prof. James H. Hyslop. Price $1.50; Postage 10 cents.

This work is one of the most valuable acquisitions to the literature of Modern Spiritualism that has appeared of late years. From Dream to Vision of Life

By Lilian Whiting, Author of "The World Beautiful," "The Spiritual Significance," "The Outlook Beautiful," etc.

This book finds its keynote in the question asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury—"The Life Beyond.—what it is? What is its bearing on these present working years?" To the discussion of this vital problem Miss Whiting brings the results of modern scientific research and that peculiar spiritual clairvoyance which has been remarked in "The Life Radiant" and some of her other books. It is written with a certain joyous vitality that communicates itself to the reader in a certain radiance and liberation of new energies. Price $1.00 net.

VOL. 36 CHICAGO, ILL., OCT. 26, 1907 NO. 935

CAN WE JUSTLY BLAME?

All Are Victims of Prenatal Organization and of Surrounding Environments.

"As is the organization of each human being at birth, and as are the good or bad, inferior or superior, circumstances in which the being shall be placed from birth, so will be the character and conduct of the individual whom they compel to become what he is at every moment of his existence. As sure as this knowledge shall be sufficiently made known to the public, so sure is there a good time coming."—Robert Owen.

This inspired thought was written by our arisen friend and brother when he was upon the earth bodily, and it should form the subject of our careful study. Is this proposition true? To me it seems almost self-evident. But to others of a different education and organization it may need investigation—it may require careful analysis. No one can pretend to think that a child is to be blamed or praised for being born of either sex, or for being born black or white, or for having its birthplace in this goodly land, or in the Fiji Islands. Neither will anyone think the fault or praise is due to the babe who shall be born of noble and refined or ignoble and base parentage. And yet people of thought and culture are coming to know that all these and many more conditions do affect or form the real organization, and with the after influences such as surround the plastic mind of the child through every stage of its development, from birth until it closes its earthly career, form the character of the human being. Now these statements to my mind are so clear, so true, that the common habit of blaming or praising individuals seems to me wrong; that is, they seem to show a lack of intelligence on this all-important subject.

The poor murderer is most surely a sad victim of antenatal conditions, with the added disastrous circumstances of his home and surroundings. To a person of a better parentage, with more native resistance to evil, or a higher moral tone, the same circumstances of life would not have developed the murderer; though they could not have failed in their effect upon him, they would surely have, with his organization, formed his life and character; would have made him what he was, or is, every moment of his life, just as we each are what we are to-day because of the antenatal conditions of our progenitors from the dawn of human life on the earth, and even from the very constitution of our physical world, as well as our own physical, mental and moral status at birth, and its natural unfoldment under the conditions that have surrounded each of us during every moment of our lives. This, my friends, this manner of development, this action and reaction of each upon all, and all upon each, is God's method of human progress. It is the way the infinite originator of the universe has instituted in the very nature of things for the progress of the race, for the uplifting of humanity into the angelic spheres. When we find fault with these things, we ignorantly, perhaps, find fault with the inevitable, unchangeable, inherent laws of growth which Deity itself has instituted.

Once, while listening to glowing words of inspiration from a most angelic spirit through a refined and lovely medium, I could not repress the exclamation of how much we were blessed, that so exalted, so pure, so holy a presence should come to us, when in sweetest humility the spirit gave answer, "No merit in us; we only began first." Then to my mind came the thought that the last rose which bloomed on the bush was as sweet, was as lovely, as the first one that graced its branches, and were not we just as true to our conditions as were the angels to theirs? Were we not really progressing in all goodness, nobleness and loveliness, as fast as they, according to our organization and environment? If this be so, if we may not praise the good and the noble for being what they are, certainly we ought to withhold our blame from those who through dark conditions and unhappy organizations raise hopeless hands to God and heaven, or if hopeful, hope only of God. They are our friends, our brothers and sisters, our fellow travelers. They affect us, and we may influence them for good. Dare we blame them?

Can we say that we are not, as they are, made what we are by our organization, over which we had no control, and by our surroundings, which affect us only through that organization?

This is not saying that people are not responsible in a degree, because experience is necessary for growth, and the sufferings which must come to all wrongdoers is a means by which they gain a knowledge of life, and knowledge is truly the lever by which human animal life raises itself into the divine or spiritual. The Christian world has been telling us that charity is the greatest of Christian virtues; that if one possessed all other qualifications of a true life and had not charity, they were as naught. Now this knowledge scientifically understood, and lived, will give to us all this greatest of virtues—will, as the writer I have quoted said, bring to us the "good time coming."

IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Is Death the End of Life?—The Great French Philosopher, Camille Flammarion, Answers the Question.

To be or not to be! Such is the great eternal question posed by the philosophers, the thinkers, the investigators of all times and of all beliefs. Is death an end or a transformation? Do there exist proofs, testimonies of the survival of the human being after the destruction of the living organism? Hitherto the subject has remained beyond the category of scientific observations. Is it possible to approach it by the principles of the experimental method to which humanity owes all the progress realized by science? Is the effort logical? Have we not here to deal with the arcana of an invisible world, different from that which falls under our senses and impenetrable to our positive methods of investigation? Can we not try to learn if certain facts, correctly and scrupulously observed, are susceptible of being analyzed scientifically and accepted as real by the severest critics?

Some months ago, having published some fragments of a work which has long occupied me concerning this vast subject, I received from a large number of readers documents of a certain value concerning presentiments realized, accurate premonitory dreams, manifestations of the dying, facts seen at a distance, haunted houses, and divers psychic phenomena worthy of being studied with care. In connection with these there are naturally many illusions, uncertainties and hallucinations. But the ensemble is interesting, and by eliminating all doubtful cases we have before us a choice of sincere, honest, attentive observations made by people in a perfectly sound state. Who can bring a new light to the question placed at the head of this article?

Taking some of the letters I have received, although coming from people whom I do not personally know, they seem to me in general sincere and in good faith.

A certain number of facts can be due to hallucinations, but not all. When, for example, an apparition manifests in a costume unknown to the observer, and which the dead person nevertheless wears, hallucination or auto-suggestion cannot explain it. When a dead person comes begging you to pay a debt of which you do not know the same explanations must be ruled out of court. When a phantom reflects itself in a mirror or leaves an impress on a piece of furniture, its real existence cannot be contested. When many people are witnesses, see or hear, it is difficult to have recourse to hallucination. Photographs of phantoms would be precious documents if they were scrupulously verified and confirmed. A child of 3, 4, or 5 years old who sees an apparition cannot be accused of being the dupe of his imagination. A phantom that leads a person to the site of a crime cannot be placed under the category of hallucinations. A person who, lying in a room, sees and describes a being exactly conforming to an ancient inhabitant unknown to her who had died in that room, would be served by a strange chance indeed if it were only an illusion.

Beyond doubt these observations have not the rigor of mathematical demonstrations, nor of experiments in physics or chemistry. They have human elements more or less impact, to be weighed and compared. But to declare that there is nothing there but imaginary sensations of diseased brains would evidently be an error, the more so because in general they do not follow the preoccupations of the mind, but spontaneously present themselves to the vast astonishment of the observer.

THE WATER WITCH.

The Writer Thinks There is Great Virtue in It.

In The Progressive Thinker I have noticed a number of articles upon the "water witch," some of the writers attempting to give a solution for the movement of the limb.

I have in past years located many living veins of water by the use of the crotched limb, generally cut from the peach tree. I was so expert, and had so much faith in my ability, that I sunk wells for a stated price, guaranteeing water or no pay.

I never failed but in one instance, and this proved a costly job for me, as I sunk the well to a depth of 96 feet and got no water, but at the indicated depth—33 feet—I struck a stratum of cement rock.

For years afterward I pondered over that failure, and, in fact, never dropped the matter until I found, to me, a satisfactory solution. About fifteen years afterward I helped sink a well and found the same formation, and through experiments I found it to hold nearly as strong an affinity or influence upon the limb as water.

It is an established fact that electricity will leave a wire and follow a stream of water coming in contact with it. Is it unreasonable to believe that the current from the living battery is governed by the same law? I have been led blindfolded, and have had a party on each side of me hold the ends of the limbs, and in passing over a vein of water, had the limb twist in two. I have seen followed a pipe conducting water that was buried in the ground.

Mesmeric subjects claim to feel the current from my hands when at a distance of four to six feet, and have counted every pass when their backs were turned. V. L. CAPWELL.

We have, in fact, to make our choice between science and suffering. It is only by wisely utilizing the gifts of science that we have any hope of maintaining our population in plenty and comfort. Science, however, will do this for us if we will only let her.—Sir John Lubbock.

A Message from Mckinley.

President Is Anxious to Reveal Some National Laws Which He Has Studied, and Tells of Trip to Syracuse University.

Alfred Underhill, president of the Temple of Soul Culture, a Spiritualistic society of Syracuse, N. Y., announced, October 8, that through his organism the martyred president, William McKinley, visited Syracuse Sunday evening and was at the Temple of Soul Culture, which has headquarters in The Florence Flats.

Mr. Underhill says President McKinley's communication, which Mr. Underhill makes public, came through automatic writing. The letter tells of President McKinley having visited Syracuse University and stadium with his professor of the university he attends in Spirit Land. The letter, in addition to this, says a reform club in Spirit Land is trying to impress upon President Roosevelt that he should not be a candidate for a third term, and of the discovery of an electric vibration which will revolutionize the world.

The temple of Soul Culture was organized a year ago last winter. A. Robert Cooper is vice-president and Mrs. Cooper secretary. The organization does not hold meetings, but may begin them this winter. Mr. Underhill said last night that it is the ultimate purpose of the society to erect a temple in Syracuse. He says that there is no place in Syracuse suitable for holding meetings of the society.

Last night Mr. Underhill said that he did not know that he was an automatic writer until impressed by his wife, who has been in Spirit Land since a year ago last December.

The letter follows:

My dear friend and brother: This is a wonderful experience to me to know and feel my thoughts vibrating through your soul so gently and easily. I am amazed at the rapidity you receive my thoughts. My teacher and professor in spirit life had promised me he would go with me to earth life when I decided to go.

Last evening when Dr. Richard Hodgson was voicing his thoughts, we entered this peaceful abode of the Temple of Soul Culture prepared by this kind brother and his devoted wife for the purpose of giving celestial angels a trysting place to meet earth's mortals and tell them of the beautiful homes they have in an ethereal paradise that words cannot convey the splendor and harmony that prevails there.

For His Friends in Canton.

I have come at this particular time to give a few thoughts to my friends in Canton who have reared and dedicated to my remembrance a beautiful monument as a reminder of the works that I have done in earth life, which I feel I am unworthy of receiving. But it is created and I must thank you in soul life for this tribute of love to me.

When I passed out of earth so suddenly I did not realize that death was so peaceful, and to me I felt that the individual that caused it, had he known what a blessing he conferred on me, he would not have committed this act, and now he is reaping the tares he sowed in early life.

I have formed a different opinion of spirit life since I entered it, and if all the individuals in earth knew the laws that govern this spirit life they would make a heaven of earth.

Now that I have found the way to earth and an organism that I can send my thoughts back to humanity, I feel it my duty to send my thoughts back to you in a manner that will teach you to enact national laws that will be copied from the laws created here and working so harmoniously that every individual in this celestial realm is continuing the same desires that he created in earth life. Would to God I could persuade every human being to look into this Temple of Soul Culture and see the happiness they enjoy and the thoughts they are trying to impress upon mortal man, and each one trying to reach loved ones in earth life. How happy you would be if you would try to receive the thoughts they are sending to you.

Lessons in Natural Law.

Since I have been in spirit life I have taken lessons in national laws, and I am anxious to reveal those laws to you. In fact I see, since I came into this home, and can look into national affairs, I see a disposition among our great leaders to improve in the carrying out the laws that were in vogue when I was in earth life. Now that I have learned the way to return, I shall come often to impress upon you the higher laws that I found in spirit land.

I have seen many new inventions created here and impressed upon individuals in earth life, and our colleges and universities are studying up and looking up new improvements on the old.

Our professor in the university that I am in was an old friend of Brother Underhill's, and has impressed on his mind an invention that will revolutionize the world.

I am in touch of your past presidents that are here and are meeting each other and discussing on the present laws, and how to impress them on your leaders at the present time of the necessity of improving upon them.

To-day I see the rapid growth and wealth of your government in the short time I have been in spirit life. I have also seen the rapid increase of selfishness and greed and crime in our national affairs, and we feel we must impress upon your leaders the importance of calling a halt. We see the vast amount of graft and the appropriating of the national funds and its products, and individuals betraying trusts have been placed in their hands. This must be stopped or the grand old word America will be tarnished and a by-word among nations. Beware! Beware! To-day you stand at the apex in power and the leader of nations. Look back on the nations that have risen to the zenith that are now disgraced and fallen and will never rise again.

Do not urge President Roosevelt to take another term. He is impressed by a reform club in spirit life, and they say he can do more good in another department of the government.

Visit to Syracuse.

To-day I have been taken around the city of Syracuse by the band of angels that compose the Temple of Soul Culture, and I was delighted with the view of the city as I looked from the altitude of your university. I have seen what I have never seen before: a university equipped with such grand and stately buildings, and a stadium that will compare with any other in the world.

I have been taken through your many large factories that are sending their products all over the world. I have lived many years within a day's ride of this city, and to-day I realize its greatness and its future possibilities.

From now on I shall come from my celestial home to be a student in this Soul Culture Temple where I will learn the laws of the soul and will endeavor to impress their value and benefit to mortals in earth life.

Never while in earth or since I passed into spirit life have I been electrified and impressed with the power I can get here to benefit the world. Here is the electric vibration that will be felt all over this world, which I to-day have learned. I have been in the same sphere as my friend and Prof. Bartholomu is, and to-day he has revealed to me the power he has found here that will electrify the world. I have right here in this sacred temple promised him my determination to help him to carry it out.

Never in the earth life or my celestial home have I been electrified by the vibration that he has harnessed and will send broadcast from this city, virtually set upon a hill.

As I have passed over this city to-day I have seen the need of this electrical vibration here that will create more harmony and more happiness and peace to all its inhabitants.

I wish to say to this kind brother that I have never felt this quiet and peaceful feeling run through my entire soul as I have felt it in this home. May he be spared many years in earth life to reveal his happy thoughts to mankind.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY.

What Happened when We were Young

[From the Burlington Hawkeye.]

I heard the bob-white whistle in the
dewy breath of morn;
The bloom was on the alder and the tassel on the corn.
I stood with beating heart beside the babbling Mac-o-chee,
To see my love come down the glen to keep the tryst with me.

I saw her pace, with quiet grace, the shaded path along,
And pause to pluck a flower, or hear
a thrush's song.
Denied by her proud father as a suitor
to be seen,
She came to me with loving trust, my gracious little queen.

Above my station, heaven knows, that gentle maiden shone;
For she was belle and wide beloved,
and I a cub unknown;
The rich and great about her throng'd, and sought on bended knee
For love this gracious princess gave with all her heart to me.

So like a startled fawn before my longing eyes she stood,
With all the freshness of a girl in flush of womanhood.
I trembled as I put my arm about her form divine,
And stammered as in awkward speech
I begged her to be mine.

'Tis sweet to hear the pattering rain that lulls a dim-lit dream;
'Tis sweet to hear the song of birds,
and sweet the rippling stream;
'Tis sweet amid the mountain pines to hear the south wind sigh,
More sweet than these and all besides was the loving, low reply.

The little hand I held in mine, I did all
I had of life,
To mould its better destiny and soothe to sleep its strife.
'Tis said that angels watch o'er men,
commissioned from above;
My angel walked with me on earth and gave to me her love.

Ah! dearest wife, my heart is stirred,
my eyes are dim with tears—
I think upon the loving faith of all those bygone years,
For now we stand upon the spot, as in that dewy morn,
With the bloom upon the alder and the tassel on the corn.

ON PRAYER.

Earnest Desire Brings Bountiful Spiritual Returns.

On the subject of "prayer" a spirit wrote:

"When prayer is sincere and earnest, it is an outflow of the soul—an exhalation that is met by Divine grace and truth and is helpful. It invigorates the soul forces and gives strength for those duties, or to accomplish the object for which petition was sent forth. Behold the processes in Nature's realms. The general rule is, that in accordance with the quantity of vapors drawn by the sun from sea and land, the rain-showers are returned to refresh the earth. So it is in the mind realm. Earnest desire sent out in the silent or open prayer never fails to bring goodly and bountiful returns of needed strength. It is a wonderful process to behold, viz., how souls are nurtured to unfold and grow strong in their attainments of higher and higher consciousness of all that is beneath, about and above them, and the grand parts they are permitted to perform in the whole process of all that is. Beholding this we cry out, 'How wonderful are thy works, O God! Tho didst create nothing without purpose!'

"The more we comprehend of universal operations, the clearer the wise designs impress us with their contained benevolence toward all things, and especially toward man for whom all things beneath and about him are but serve creations and serve supplies.

"But service has its rewards in improvements. All of Nature's products serve wise purposes in Creation's order. All forms, from the least to the greatest, are related in the vibratory network that links all life together and makes the externalization of the contained wisdom possible through thought and speech; then as consciousness is acquired through sense activities, these grand works of God, through Nature and man, are comprehended.

"From the blade of grass to the giant trees, all is needed in Nature's workshop, to serve the earth and elements by their own peculiar magnetisms and graded electricities. They meet and temper each other. Earth's many products—tree's, shrub's, vegetation's and beast's great variety of magnetisms and electricities, become apart from other services they render, conductors for the downward rush of our quantities of elemental electricities and ward off much destruction. There is a space between the earth and elements where electric and magnetic currents meet, these rising and those descending, to supplement each other; but when qualities or grades of magnetisms and electricities are missing, because trees, shrubs, etc., are missing in their parts, there are often injurious discharges which could be prevented by a knowledge of how to prepare equalizing portions where they are missing.

"Thunderstorms or atmospheric convulsions clear the impurities which threaten life of man and beast, and are a blessing, for it is a mode of force regulations necessary to further progress by the removal of objectionable gases, etc. Now, in the mind realm these convulsions are just as much needed to stir human nature from center to circumference and dislodge wrongly conceived and nurtured ideas, so that heart and brain can receive the wholesome mental and spiritual nutriments, thus to become nobler in thought and conduct, and every thought become a prayer and every act its fulfillment."

THE ATOM.

It Consists of a Whorl of Electricity.

The whole atom squirms with electricity, proclaims Sir Oliver Lodge in the battle royal waged between chemists and electricians. And when the electricity escapes, as in radium, the atom at a certain point will change into something else. There is a scientific party which has come to believe that there is no such thing as matter, that matter is a shape assumed by electricity; that an atom is not a permanent thing, but a sphere enmeshing little units of electricity now called electrons. Helium first was discovered in the sun by the spectroscope. Thanks to this hint from the sun, the Hon. R. J. Strutt and others discovered quite recently that helium is an emanation given off by radium and two other substances. That is said to prove what the old alchemists believed—that a change of matter into another form is possible. Sir Wm. Ramsay made a sensation which it is almost impossible to exaggerate at the British association when he announced the results of his recent experiments with radium emanations. Experiments are now in progress with gold and other substances and may furnish proof of Sir William's belief in the transmutation of elements and of the theory of decomposition.

Blamed With Evil Eye.

Sig. Giavanni Giolitti, the Italian prime minister, suffers from a popular superstition that he has the evil eye. Recently Sig. Majorana, minister of the treasury, retired from the cabinet because he had been seized with a serious illness. He is the sixteenth statesman associated with Sig. Giolitti to have been stricken down, if not by death, at least by some serious ailment, since the premier's rise to power. In Giolitti's first cabinet four of his ministers died in office. In his second two died and four others were brought near death's door. In his third administration one minister committed suicide, another died, and Sig. Tittoni was prostrated by cerebral congestion. In the present cabinet disease and death still pursue Giolitti's colleagues.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

An Impressive Letter From a Prominent Worker in Reform.

To the Editor:—Your kind words, although few, are like a cool wind blown across the hot desert. Some time ago, someone writing from San Francisco, noted the adverse psychic conditions still existing here, which, then as now, I can most certainly endorse. Several times I have started to write you, but waited, hoping to be soon able to write in a more cheerful and spiritual atmosphere. Alas! I will confess to individual inability at all times to create heaven out of the fruits of the other place, no matter what the effort.

When calamity, the most appalling to be conceived of, overtook us, there was the most wonderful display of the courageous and sublime fortitude and self-abnegation on the part of the stricken people, together with such generosity as the world has never yet experienced on the part of the great hearts of human kind elsewhere on our behalf. It was a revelation on the part of humanity.

Then followed the reaction. Men seemed to forget all that is or ever has been sacred to tradition or to human life. You have heard enough about our corrupt city officials, and are not ignorant as to the general trend of events in our city since our great calamity, but to be fully cognizant of the stress of conditions, would require a residence here during these troublesome months, and particularly since the street car strike the first of May last. Once before since the fire had they struck, and people endured the discomfort good naturedly for two weeks, and no one seemed aggressive, but at this time there has been a most bitter feeling of antagonism that has expressed itself not alone in vituperation and enmity, but in bloodshed and loss of life, nor is there safety from harm for the general public assured as yet, nor immediate promise of it.

As you know, I passed a portion of the time in the south during the civil war, but never met with the same degree of threat and insult then that I have received in my own home, and in a time of supposed peace. The distance between my office and my home is between three and four miles, and I generally took a wagon down as far as they would convey me or the nearest point to my office and walk back. One unfortunate day I succeeded in the uneven streets, and as soon as possible to do so I took the street car line home. This was my crime. I was followed and called the vilest of names for blocks and threatened with violence, by not only men, but women. All sorts of intimidation were tried; my neighbors belonging to the Carmen's Union followed me into grocers' places and forbade them to sell me food, and I was told that if I persisted in riding on the cars I would be hurt.

I presume you can imagine me either fearing or trembling? I set them, as becomes a good American citizen and ex-soldier, at defiance, and told them I should continue in my free-born American rights just the same, and there was not a man among them that could touch me, or harm a hair of my head, and that I would prefer to die if necessary in defense of such rights, rather than live a coward and conform to the dictation of cowards, and I should not starve, or go hungry either. And I have not.

From an individual point of view I do not mind an encounter once in a while, but it shatters the spiritual side immensely, yet with the old Quaker, I am generally so well defended as to be able to say to the enemy, "Friend, if thee will fight, thee must expect to be whipped."

But you can see that life here in the once fair and beautiful city by the sunset sea is not all that could be desired in spiritual atmosphere and development of the spiritual unfoldment of our natures. And if I can make out to sing or compose some songs that will be sung by others during the commotion of spirit that is going on about me, I am sure it will pass as a sort of missionary work I am doing for my own reputation.

Our good Sister York, from the Ladies' Aid Society, called upon me, and stated that they were making an effort to resume the regular meetings of the society which they will no doubt be able to do before the winter months. There is, as you may infer, a dearth of the spiritual here at present, and our souls are hungering for that heavenly manna, yet none are forgotten.

NEVER WAS THERE A FAITH SO SATISFYING, SO BEAUTIFUL, SO SUSTAINING IN HOURS OF TROUBLE OR GRIEF AS OUR DEAR FAITH IN THE SHELTERING ARMS THAT HOLD US FAST TO THE INFINITE BOSOM OF THE GREAT FATHERHOOD AND MOTHERHOOD OF THE IMPERISHABLE LIFE OF WHICH WE ARE A PART.

What a wonderful work you have done, and are doing. Brother Francis. As your years increase so may your blessings, and in the unselfish devotion of your past, I am sure your reward is not delayed till the call to the faithful shall deprive the world of your still needed labors of devotion to truth and the world's advancement.

If angels in mortal guise could lighten your labors with swift prayers for your happiness and successes, your life would be one glorious morning of benediction and blessings, among which and the least of whom yet with most bountiful in tribute would be—your most sincere and appreciative friend,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Anniversary of the People's Psychic Society.

The first Anniversary of the People's Psychic Society was held in the Burbank Hall, Saturday evening, September 28, and Sunday morning and afternoon, 29th.

Never has it been my pleasure to attend a more perfect combination of educational and psychical demonstration than was at that time placed before the people who filled the large hall at each session.

The success of this society is due to unceasing effort of a number of people. The first to head the list is our dearly beloved sister, Mrs. Nettie Howell, a noble woman, who has devoted her life to the betterment of this spiritual movement, fearless, trustful, clearsighted, open-hearted, true—all the ever-demonstrated points of character that make her what she is, a wonderful woman in many ways.

When this sister looked over the field of workers in search of a man for chairman and director, of the People's Psychic Society, she was most fortunate in securing Mr. A. F. Prentice, a man who at all times, is looking for the good in people. He has proved himself to be a blessing, from the moment his frank, open face greeted us, the great unexplored future of this society looked full of good things.

Right here there comes before me as I write, a face strong, tender and true, one you will be sure to see when you step into the hall. His name is Mr. George Silver. But few people know this man, his great loving heart is full of sympathy and tenderness for all, expressions of animal life, he is a true friend at all times and under all conditions. "He that hath gained a friend hath given hostages to fortune."

I speak of these people because they are the foundation upon which The People's Psychic Society rests, as they reach out for timely assistance in conjunction with the activities surrounding this progressive movement, we find brilliant minds along the philosophical in our most worthy Sister, Mrs. Dr. G. Briggs, Mrs. Lettie Allen, Mr. J. C. Craig—all shining lights—unselfishly doing all they can in behalf of the Spiritual philosophy; Mrs. Grace Aitken of Chicago, Ill., Mrs. Sanford Johnson, Miss Greta Geetzer, Mrs. Grant, Mrs. Goces, Mrs. Hutchinson and Mr. J. C. Craig, were the spirit messengers.

We enjoyed a musical treat given by Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Sullivan, Mrs. Lettie Allen, Mrs. Sanford; I think I am justified in stating the most pleasing to us all was the very sweet songs sung by Mr. Holbrook's son and daughter; the young lad and his little sister took the house, so to speak. We hope we may have the pleasure of hearing from them again.

At the close of the afternoon program all message mediums formed groups about them to satisfy the wants of the people along that line and when I saw the large number waiting to receive just one word, my very soul cried out for more workers in that field.

At the close of the circle work, ice cream and cake were served. In the evening, Mrs. Sanford Johnson held christening services, at which time Mrs. Dr. Briggs gave a most instructive talk upon "Motherhood."

Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan favored the occasion with one of their expressive songs, soon followed with the very convincing test work of Mrs. Sanford Johnson, making a most appropriate closing for this our first Anniversary of the People's Psychic Society.

We as a society, extend to all our friends a most cordial welcome; come let us from all parts of our glorious country meet often, learn more of the great art of loving and serving the highest and the best, through thus uniting we become a greater power for good. I wish we could have a congress of Spiritualists each month, all societies uniting as one, at that time. I have every reason to believe it would result in a greater strength, a clearer understanding of the inner spirit that prompts our every act. I believe a great, true, unselfish love—would spring forth into a more perfect expression than we have ever known in our Spiritualistic movement. ADELAIDE K. BROOKS.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

Read to The Golden Rule Society by by the Author, at Its opening Meeting of the Season.

This world would be a better place to live in for awhile
If everyone would think aright and always wear a smile;
If each would keep the body clean,
the mental free and cool,
And bear in mind for all mankind the forceful Golden Rule.

If man could keep his anger down and kindness up above,
There'd be no need for cramping
creed, and plenty of use for love;
If man could keep his soul in tune and smother down the mule,
The only guide he e'er would need would be the Golden Rule.

If man to man were always just, were always kind and true,
Each one right here upon the earth would sometime get his due.
If Love and Wisdom always ruled in
Life's great common school,
Mankind would need no stronger law than the dear old Golden Rule.

The Golden Rule has won great fame,
As quoted o'er the world,
And every Savior has the name of having it unfurled,
And yet, were it but lived to-day, no wars would ever be,
And peace and plenty on the earth would reign eternally.

How to Keep Always Young.

Secret Explained by a Chicago Woman Who Has Been a Social Favorite in Six Cities, and Preserves Her Youthful Spirits though Nearly Ninety Years of Age.—She Has Had Experiences That Teach Her that the Spirit World Is Very Close.

Would you like to keep young, gay and charming? It can be done and here's the way a lovely Chicago woman—Madame Lucie D'Episy of the Old People's home and the most exclusive social and intellectual sets of half a dozen large American cities—has accomplished the feat [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune].

A preliminary word about the history of this popular belle, "eighty-five and a half" years old, according to her own statement, vivacious, as a young girl in heart, mind, conversation, and spirit, may not come amiss.

Madame D'Episy was born in Paris. She still is "vraie Parisienne" in all essential matters—and manners—though she left "cher Paris" for good fifty years ago and has never returned, even for a visit. After a happy girlhood, filled with varied good works and devoted to study of the divers great religious and philosophies of the world, the pretty mademoiselle married Dr. Gilbert D'Episy, writer of many scientific volumes, tutor to a number of royal children, among them the boy who afterwards became the Emperor Frederick of Germany, and with him journeyed to America. A Louisiana plantation constituted the first American home of the woman who even then was beginning to formulate and follow the cheery philosophy that has happily carried her through so many changing years and vicissitudes of fortune; when the war had swept away the D'Episy slaves—some of whom, for love of their merry young "Mistis" scornfully refused to consider themselves emancipated, and insisted upon accompanying her "up north"—and a generous share of the D'Episy fortune, a new home was made in Arkansas, the family later moving again to St. Louis, thence to southern Illinois, where Dr. D'Episy died, suddenly and under distressing circumstances. Then MadameD'Episy came, with her children, to Chicago, where she has resided for thirty years, and which city she loves dearly.

From a rich woman she now became poor, finding it necessary to eke out her slender financial support by teaching French and pastel painting, in which she still is efficient. Previous to these trials her two oldest children had died within the space of four days, being slain by "black diphtheria" while the distracted young mother lay helpless with the "bone fever" of the early south, now more precisely diagnosed as inflammatory rheumatism. So it will be seen that the indomitable and brave spirit that always has supported and upheld this gay-hearted young-old beauty has has not remained untested. In later years ill health and a painful accident have contributed their quota of suffering, but "la philosophie" that has proved so potent shows no diminution of comfort or luster.

Troubles Do Not Daunt.

"It is all well," says Madame D'Episy. "It is all well with us always, whether we can see this or not. I have had troubles; I have suffered; I have seen those I love suffer, which is harder to bear than personal distress or sorrow. But I never have been discontented or unhappy, and I never shall be. Life or death, it is all well for me, and I feel that I always shall be young in spirit. To die that would be easy. To grow old in heart—that would be very hard."

Madame D'Episy, who, some years ago entered the Old People's home, because the son and daughter still living quarreled continually over her place of residence, each ardently desiring that she make her home with his or her family, is popular alike with officials, residents, employes, and visitors of the institution. She has hosts of "outside" friends and goes out no little, despite the fall that not long ago resulted in lameness. The circus she invariably attends with her well-loved grandchild and namesake, and a French play—especially when Bernhardt is acting—finds her a delighted, enthusiastic attendant. A daily English and weekly French paper she reads religiously, together with many books of fiction, poetry, philosophy, and science.

In earlier years she has written much, and still works occasionally upon the book of poems her friends are anxious that she should publish. Her little garden is well tended and the joy of her summertime existence, French lessons still are given when opportunity offers and the gentle, clever, aristocratic optimist never lacks time for receiving visitors or for bright conversation. Fifty years easily might be dropped from her apparent age when the sparkling eyes flash over some intellectual problem or play of wit.

Gives Secret for Retaining Youth.

Asked for the secret of her unchanging youth, Madame D'Episy smiled and expressed herself willing to give it for the sake of "les autres" with less experience in the way of keeping young and happy under trying and sometimes distinctly adverse conditions.

"Preserve a good conscience, do all the good you can for and to others, keep occupied, be content, always, and take always in good spirit whatever fate may send."

These she declares infallible rules for maintaining perpetual youth, and she insists, moreover, that the suggested life attitude may be acquired at will. Looking at and listening to her, this is easy to believe.

"Can you change fate or circumstances by complaining?" she asks, earnestly. "No? Then why repine? It will but make the real trouble worse, add unnecessary others, render you unpopular, and push away all chance of happiness.

"It is cowardly and selfish to fret or grumble. Be sure whatever comes is best for us, though this may not seem at the time, possible. Make up your mind to be happy, no matter what happens, and this will become less and less difficult—always supposing your conscience is easy, and this condition each may regulate for him or herself. There always are opportunities of doing good to others, if it is only to be kind to a little child or speak cheery words to the sorrowful. Think of others and you will forget yourself—and keep happy and young.

Sad for Others, Not for Yourself.

"I am sad for others, sometimes, but I have no personal troubles. I have had wealth and youth and social standing. These I have not now, but no matter! I was happy with them, trying to do what little good I might in the world; I am happy now, without them, still trying. Religion? Yes, it is a great comfort. I was born and reared a Catholic, I have been an Episcopalean many years, though I love and respect them all for the sake of the help they give others. For me God is too big for any creed, but I can see his finger in many matters. To be truly religious is of great benefit, a great help if one would keep happy and youthful. There is great and revivifying power in faith and love and charity. I have lived so long and had so much experience that I now judge no one harshly. Who knows how far each of us is responsible for his faults?

Bitterness and Hardness Bring Old Age.

"DEATH? I DO NOT FEAR IT. WHY SHOULD I? IT IS NATURAL AS BIRTH, AND, WHILE I AM NO SPIRITUALIST, I HAVE HAD EXPERIENCES THAT TEACH ME THAT THE OTHER WORLD IS VERY, VERY CLOSE, AND BEAUTIFUL. SOMETIMES, WHEN I AM TIRED OR SPIRITUALLY UPLIFTED, I THINK I WOULD LOVE TO BE DEAD, BUT I LOVE ALSO LIFE AND MY CHILDREN. THEN, TOO, I LOVE THIS COUNTRY SO MUCH THAT I WOULD STAY IN IT AS LONG AS I CAN.

"It is bitterness and unkindness and pessimism and hardness of heart that bring on old age of soul and body, and these are never worth while under any circumstances or conditions. Love, forgive, be cheerful, this is the way to be young and happy, and I wish I could make all the people in the world, especially all the young people, hear and pay attention. I never, never have been bored; I never shall be, while the world is so full of lovely things and nice people, of beauty and music and laughter and little children, or remarkable change and progress.

The True Secret of Happiness.

"I love all the world and have many people to love me, and every moment of life is full of ever fresh interest. Beside such joys, what matter increasing years, failing health, loss of financial good fortune? We always should remain in soul and heart but little children. With the child's eager interest and good will and habit of happiness, we must be always and forever young!"

Madame D'Episy has lived her own philosophy, and offers herself as proof of its soundness. She is young in spirit, young in soul, gay in manner, happy in disposition, and charming. To chat with her is to forget that she is nearly 86 years old, and the gentle charm of her manner the sweetness of her smile and the grace with which she says and does everything leave an impression of youth—and happiness.

STRANGE EXPERIENCE.

He Took the Works of Two Old Clocks, Made a New Brass Frame, and Mixed the Wheels of Both Clocks, not by Calculation, but by Inspiration, and Completed One Set of Works that Kept Exact Time.

Dear Mr. Bicknell:—I received your two cards and thank you very much. I am glad you liked the photo. As soon as I get them I will send you a picture of "The Spirit Clock."

I now sit here and admire my work just as you would, because it seems new to me.

It seems like a dream as I think it over and find how all the material and everything was placed in my way. It is well to believe that I did the work, but it was under the control of an unseen force, known as "spirit." The following will prove what I write.

One day something seemed to tell me that I should make a clock. I did not stop to figure on any material, but went up stairs and brought down some lumber and started the case. I did not figure on what the size of the case should be to fit the works, or anything; I just worked on.

I knew not where to find the next material, the works or any part; I never gave it a thought. Just as I needed anything, I knew where to go and what to do. The result is a clock that runs with the best. It is perfect in design, and in every way is what others would plan and figure out in order to get it, perfect in every way. Mr. Bicknell, you can see that I had unseen expert help. It is just as plain as darkness and sunlight, for it would be impossible for me to put up such a piece of work in any other way, when I knew nothing about clocks and their principles. It is just like a dream. I could sell the clock, but I do not like the idea of parting with it. It seems to be a part of me. I started a letter, but it is nothing but clock talk.

Very truly yours,
MELVIN E. BUCKOUTZ.

PERSONAL AND IMPERSONAL GODS.

Faith Has No Use for Reason.

Through the knowledge and influence of Modern Spiritualism millions of people have dropped or made radical changes in their faith in dogmas pertaining to a god, a devil, a hell, damnation and salvation by blood atonement. We hail with delight all such changes in the minds of men; yet some cling fondly to their god idea, the most absurd of all.

"The universal fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man," we hear so much about is simply a rhetorical flourish of fiction.

Many people have repudiated the Jewish Jehovah, fair and square, and declare they do not believe in a personal God.

That is good, and we rejoice to learn it; nevertheless they constantly make use of bible ideas, phrases, quotations to vindicate Theism. If they do not believe in Jehovah, why use bible texts to sustain faith in a God? They should, to be consistent, discard the Bible as a source of evidence; because it is called "The Word of God"—one and the same God in Old and New Testament, from Genesis to Revelations. It is Jehovah, the personal god of both Jews and Christians. If they do not recognize a peronal God, they should not use scripture to prove their impersonal God.

If "God is a principle and not a persons," as Theists affirm, why do they always call it "He—Him—Father," thus giving it a personal appearance? It seems to be a principle of male gender; however, men do not worship an abstract principle; their conception of a God is a being possessing human attributes.

They have got a new name for the old God—call it "Infinite Intelligence." However, intelligence implies mind, will, memory, knowledge to manifest it; all attributes of a person. If they want it understood they do not believe in a personal god, the "Intelligence" must be lopped off. It is a personal god in spite of their denial, and only an imaginary being, either way.

If "Men are made in the image and likeness of God," as alleged, there ought to be black, white and yellow gods corresponding to the men. If the men are the image and likeness of the god, it must be a personal god, because men are persons.

The stupid devotees claim to be "children of God," and call it "our Father God;" but no one can prove his or her relationship to any god, either personal or impersonal. Men who saddle their parentage on a god are divine scamps.

The believers in the impersonal god often talk and write about "Jesus Christ the Son of God;" but if he had no personality he could have no son. Every son has a personal father.

Faith has no use for reason. There is no argument too absurd for a Theist.

It takes one false assertion to prove another all the way through Theism; which is the fundamental basis of religious error; devoid of fact; maintained by faith, fallacy, assumption and vehement assertion. The origin of religious ideas is ignorance.

SUGGESTIVE THOUGHTS.

By That Veteran Lecturer, N. F. Ravlin.

Cheer up,
Though sorrow's night o'ercast the sky,
And all thy sweetest flowers die,
Cheer up.

Faint not,
Although the way be rough and drear,
And friends prove false you once held dear,
Faint not,

Stand firm,
Though tempests wild sweep o'er thy soul,
And angry billows o'er thee roll,
Stand firm.

Be true.
Though all around you, falsehood reigns,
While truth is sold for sordid gains,
Be true.

Be a man.
Though many sell themselves for naught,
And in the end are snared and caught,
Be a man.

Push on.
Should mountain heights impede thy way,
And inclination bid thee stay,
Push on.

Be free.
While slaves to sin at every turn,
Are spending nightly all they earn,
Be free.

Oh! stop and think what price you pay
For sordid pleasures of the day.
Manhood with its endowment vast,
Down at the shrine of Death is cast.

But clothed as with the sun in glory,
You will oft rehearse the story
Of how you triumphed over sin,
That you the victor's crown might win.

Now Earth, and all that you held fast,
Is gone, forever gone at last,
While with the glad victorious throng
You chant the everlasting song.

Immortal youth you'll hence enjoy,
And pleasures sweet, without alloy,
And while eternal ages roll,
Shall Wisdom guide your mighty soul.

Oh! grand, beyond conception grand,
Are forces now at your command,
Move on, in paths the ages trod,
And search the universe of God.

The mysteries of being solve,
As primal cause, effects evolve;
Whence came the tiny grain of sand,
And whence the Universe so grand?

What finite mind can grasp the whole
Or read as from a book, the scroll
On which is writ great Nature's laws,
From outer to most hidden cause.

Enter the realm where Wisdom reigns;
Where Love strikes off the galling chains,
And thou shalt be forever blest,
Finding in work eternal rest.

An Interesting Sketch.

The Past and Present of the First Spiritual Union, Norwich, Conn.

As secretary of the First Spiritual Union, I have been requested to write a short history of the affairs of this society from its inception twenty-five years ago, up to the present time, and in looking over the records of the past and considering the affection and devotion of those earnest souls who toiled unceasingly and sacrificed much that we of to-day might enjoy the place in the esteem and respect of the people that we do, it sems but fitting that we should pause in our hurried lives and pay this tribute of respect to their memory.

Twenty-five years ago, by invitation of Byron Boardman and Guilford Parker, Mrs. Abby N. Burnham delivered a lecture on Spiritualism in this city, and such was the interest aroused by the work, that on May 27, 1882, the First Spiritual Union of Norwich, Conn., was organized, with Byron Boardman and his brother James, Guilford Parker, E. W. Dean, R. M. Hubbell, George Miller, Edwin Allen, John P. Avery and George Tufts as its officers, the object of the society, according to the preamble, being to maintain liberal meetings and lectures on Spiritual and other kindred subjects of reform."

As is the case in all movements of a progressive nature along religious lines, more or less antagonism to the society was aroused, and one of the ministers of the city, of the Methodist faith, made it a subject of caustic comment from his pulpit. But these unpleasant experiences are mostly of the past, our elders have fought the battle of prejudice and oppression that we might be free, and to-day, even in this conservative New England town, we command such a measure of respect as must be very gratifying to them.

Twenty-five names were appended to the subscription list of that first year, all but four or five of whom have joined the vast multitude of the unseen, and their earnest, self-sacrificing labors in this cause of religious truth have been taken up by the younger but, we hope, no less earnest generation.

Twelve lectures were given that first year under their auspices, and these have gradually increased in number until now, and for many seasons past, regular Sunday services are held eight months in the year.

In 1889 the Children's Progressive Lyceum was established in connection with the work of the Union, that our children and young people should have the privileges of education and growth in the same line of thought as their elders, and this continues to the present day, their meetings being held each Sunday at the close of the morning service.

On June 5, 1885, the ladies organized an auxiliary society under the name of the Helping Hands, the object being to assist in the support of the Union both socially and financially, and most nobly have they filled their mission. It now admits to its ranks members of both sexes, numbers 62 in membership, and each season makes a generous contribution to the finances of the society. The fortnightly suppers given by them throughout the season, as well as their semi-annual fairs, have earned a reputation for their excellence.

Purchase of Building.

Like most of the Spiritualist societies throughout the country, the Spiritual Union at first held meetings in a hall, Steiner's hall and Grand Army hall having both been occupied by it. But ten years ago the Union purchased and renovated this building in which we now stand, which was erected in 1885 and used exclusively for Scottish Rite Masonry, now fitted up as you see it and dedicated to the use of the higher powers for our betterment and enlightenment. Comparatively few of the Spiritualist societies own their own church home, and we are pleased and proud of ours, simple and unpretentious as it is, our Spiritual Academy, where we hope to learn much, and to teach much of the highest truth.

The building was dedicated with appropriate services ten years ago this week, on October 6th and 7th, 1887, and Mrs. Carrie Loring, Miss Elizabeth Harlow, J. C. F. Grumbine, Mrs. Jennie Hagan-Jackson, J. Clegg Wright and Mrs. May S. Pepper were speakers for the occasion. To Mrs. Chapman, whose interest was so deeply concerned in this society, and who was instrumental in securing the large array of talent present, we are largely indebted for the successful event.

And as we consider all these things and realize the progress that we have made in material success, in spiritual growth, and also in the opinion of the outside world, do we feel to pay a word of earnest tribute to those whose courage, devotion and generosity in the years that have gone, have made this gathering to-night possible. Byron Boardman, through whose instrumentality this society was inaugurated, who served as its secretary until his transition in December, 1885, and who, with his brother James, left a substantial fund for the support of these meetings.

Guilford Parker, treasurer of the Union from its inception until his death in May, 1899, and who was ever earnest and loyal to all the needs of the society.

Mrs. J. Adelaide Chapman, who took the secretaryship as Mr. Boardman left it, holding it for sixteen years, and doing most efficient work in that and every department of interest in the Union. As president of the Helping Hands society she labored untiringly for the support of the Union; and together with her husband, Mr. Sanford A. Chapman, and her mother, Mrs. Julia Houghton, an old-time Spiritualist, were leaders in the cause for many years, until their transition to spirit life a few months apart took an entire family of liberal thinking people from our midst.

But in the last week of her life, with sorrow and all material affairs weighing heavily upon her, Mrs. Chapman arranged the affairs of the Union for the immediate future so far as possible and left a fund of $2,000 for its benefit.

To William F. Bogue, a close friend and intimate adviser, were these interests confided, and with earnest and sincere effort has he followed out these desires; and we as a society feel that with his strong personality and steady judgment at the helm, we may breast the waters unafraid.

Mrs. Nathan A. Brewster has assumed the interests of the Helping Hands as its president, and with a corps of able helpers is a large power in the affairs of the Union.

Many others could be mentioned who have labored untiringly to sustain the cause which means so much to them, and have fought the battles of the past that we of to-day might enjoy our liberty, among the older ones, of whom but few are left are Mrs. Fannie Marcy, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. W. Spalding, Dr. W. W. Clapp, N. Duchette, J. D. Crocker, Dr. S. B. Bulkley, Frank White, T. Y. Winship, Mrs. Almira Schofield, Mrs. R. A. Jennings, and Mr. Robert Parker.

These devoted ones, with the assistance of many others no less faithful, but whom time forbids my mentioning, have supported in the past course after course of lectures composed of the very best talent available on the platform of progressive thought, including J. Frank Baxter, Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther—great and glorious soul, whose spirit in the beyond must still be working for our spiritual freedom; Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, who, with her sweet-voiced husband, gave us many mouths of her inspired teachings, living as well as preaching the highest good; Hon. A. B. Richmond, Dr. George A. Fuller—sincere and fearless, H. D. Barrett, president of the National Spiritualists' Association, and Mrs. Mary T. Longley, their worthy and efficient secretary; Mrs. Isabella Beecher Hooker, Hon. Sidney Dean, W. J. Colville, A. E. Tisdale, Mrs. Clara Banks—true-hearted and much interested in our success, and her protege, who, so far as another may, took up the mantle as she dropped it in the mortal, Miss Elizabeth Harlow; Joseph Stiles, J. Clegg Wright, Mrs. A. J. Pettengill, and others.

These and many others have given us of their best thought and endeavor, and have helped open the way for the place we occupy to-day.

Two years ago the management decided that a resident speaker might better serve the interests of the society, and Mr. Albert P. Blinn of Boston was called to fill the position. Fully has the judgment of the society been vindicated, and under the ministrations of Mr. Blinn, ably assisted by those of Mrs. Blinn, his helpmeet in all good works, our society has attained a large degree of success, and harmony and co-operation prevail in our midst.

During the first year with us Mr. Blinn was ordained as a minister of the gospel of Spiritualism, with all the legal rights and privileges belonging to ministers of any denomination.

Last December we were greatly enriched by the presentation of this beautiful pipe organ, which greatly enhances our pleasure and our power for good, and which was given in memory of one of our young and loyal members, Lloyd M. Cobb, Junior, by his mother, Mrs. Annie M. Cobb, a permanent and lasting tribute of love and appreciation of the truth to him so dear, and highly prized by us for many associations connected with it.

Charles A. Dowsett, Mr. Cobb's brother-in-law, has long been our organist, and under his loving touch the instrument often speaks to us of one just beyond, whose work in the mortal still goes on in this subtle way.

The workers of the present we do not refer to individually. Their history is still making; but well do we know it will be a noble one of sacrifice and endeavor, and those who are acquainted with us and this home can see their work, as they gather here day after day, and appreciate it.

And now as we have glanced over the records of the past, have gleaned its lessons, and noted any errors, what have we learned? and what has it all meant to us?

In the early days of our history our workers and mediums sacrificed much as they traveled the country o'er, meeting with many hardships in their wandering life, as well as odium and reproach for the cause they were upholding. But, brave and fearless, this meant but naught to them, as, filled with the fervor of of the spirit, they dauntlessly voiced their highest conviction, advocating noble measures of reform, freedom for all, the upliftment of the masses, the recognition of the equal rights of woman with man, protection for our children, and the right of each and every one to be the master and dictator of his own fate, in so far as mortal may.

These earnest souls fearlessly hurling the truth from their inspired lips, heedless of criticism or reproach, were eagerly listened to, attracted the masses, and held the people—and why?

Were they not teaching the highest and best in the world of truth that it was theirs to receive. Did they stop to consider the policy of this or that, or where it would hit?

Nobly and bravely they advanced the highest revelation of truth as they perceived it, and did it run counter to some of their ancient truths of centuries ago, it was none the less given to the people as a newer and later revelation of Truth, than which there is nothing higher.

We, with our knowledge and the power we recognize of appropriating to ourselves somewhat from the great reservoir of unlimited wisdom, have no need to turn to the teachings of the past, no matter how large a part these teachings have played in the upliftment of mankind in the history of the world.

This belongs to the past; and while we recognize the truth wherever we find it, what need to utilize old and half-formed truths when grander and fuller revealments of Nature's symphony lie about us on every hand.

Let us learn a lesson from these early workers in our ranks—they who so boldly uttered new truths, preached unheard-of reforms, and many times shocked by their progressive utterances the minds of their hearers, but who nevertheless spoke to full seats and to enthusiastic audiences.

People are ready for the best and highest, if given boldly and confidently.

Oh! let us with our knowledge, with the growing development of our powers through an understanding of this knowledge, so draw unto ourselves and utilize the noblest, the farthest advanced thought on all subjects of social and altruistic reform, that we shall be a greater power for good, a stronger force in the world, and that these progressive thoughts which are permeating the minds of man everywhere, shall find in us a worthy center, and shall radiate from us as a bright and shining light.

OUTGROWN CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

He Quits that Church for Something Higher and Better, and Thereby Exhibits a Good Degree of Common Sense. He says that Spiritualism in Its Purity is the Highest Form of Religious Belief.

Mrs. L. E. Fish went to Los Angeles, October 7, and Mr. Fish followed the next day. On leaving Redlands (Cal.) Mr. and Mrs. Fish, who have been the readers in the Christian Science church in this city for many years, also leave the Christian Science organization.

Mr. Fish has not always been connected with the Church of Christ, Scientist, as the denomination is officially designated. He was for fifteen years a member of the Baptist denomination. "But," as he often expressed himself to friends in talking over the church and his affiliations therewith, "I outgrew that as I progressed with my studies and investigations, and now, after twelve years in the Christian Science church, I have simply outgrown this also. All thinking men and women are outgrowing Christianit. By Christianity," continued Mr. Fish, "I do not mean the teachings of Jesus. The lofty verities He taught can never be outgrown. So, when I mention Christianity I mean the Christian religions as we find them, and Christianity as it is taught among the leaders of the dominant creeds. We take it not as we conceive it should be and as we find it in its origin and first promulgation, but as men have now come to teach it in the great orthodox churches. It is now so grossly materialistic that no reasoning, thinking man, no earnest student and philosopher can possibly accept it and not be a hypocrite. I hold the teachings of Jesus to be the highest of any philosopher and leader of men that the world has ever seen, with one exception. Buddha was a greater, or equally great as a teacher. But this is not the Christianity as it is now taught, or the Buddhism of to-day. These are both corrupted by the grossness of men and some of the doctrines now placed at the pinnacle of faith are the most pernicious that the world has ever seen. Take the two chief supports of most of the Christian churches of to-day, that of "original sin" and the accompanying one of "vicarious atonement" and you will see, on viewing them truthfully, that their office is to lead men from the true religious life and away from the best possible development of the individual. To characterize man as a worm crawling in the dust and dependent upon forces outside the power of man to lift him from his degradation is a base slander upon man and God. To hold up before him the belief that another has expiated his crime is to withhold from him the power which he himself should have and has, if permitted to develop, for growth and for doing good.

"I wish no evil to the churches, the orthodox body or the Christian Science. All are more or less permeated with grossness and materialism. But I cannot remain in them and be conscious, as I am, of insincerity, so long as I do so. Through the earnest study of the leaders in all the great religions I have come to a faith that is for me, and is not confined to any one of the others. Of course I will be called an atheist. Buddha never taught anything regarding God. He did not refer at any time to God, or teach that there was such a being as a God. In so far as I accept the teachings of Buddha I may be called an atheist.

AGAIN I MAY BE TERMED BY SOME A SPIRITUALIST. SPIRITUALISM, IN ITS PURITY, IS THE HIGHEST FORM OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF. STRIPPED OF ITS EXCRESCENCES THERE IS NOTHING BETTER, SO FAR AS IT TEACHES. BUT IT, TOO, IS HONEYCOMBED WITH MATERIALISM AND FRAUD IN THE PRESENT DAY, SO IT IS DIFFICULT TO DEFINE MY POSITION. I ONLY SAY THAT I BELIEVE IN THE UNTRAMMELED AND UNRESTRICTED GROWTH OF THE BEING WE CALL MAN TO THE HIGHEST AS IT UNFOLDS BEFORE HIM."

The above, from a Redlands paper, contains a valuable assertion: "Spiritualism, in its purity, is the highest form of religious belief." Read that over and over, and then see what follows it, and then retire, if you choose, to some secluded place and blush with shame. There is a large measure of truth in what he says, as to fraud in our ranks.

YOUR REAL LIFE TOLD AT LAST!

Startling Predictions for Everybody, Almost Beyond Belief!

REMARKABLE PSYCHIC ASTROLOGER TELLS PAST AND FUTURE WITH AMAZING ACCURACY TO ALL WHO WRITE, ABSOLUTELY FREE.

HE TOLD MISS T. ST. CLAIRE.

Would you like to know, for the asking what the future has in store for you? Would it be any advantage to you to know how your health will be; how your business will go; whether you will be happy or unhappy; what your weak points and strong characteristics are, and how to improve your condition, financially, socially and physically? If so, here is an opportunity you should grasp at once. It will cost you nothing. If you are pleased, tell your friends. That's all. You will be doing them a favor. Who knows what this will do for you?

Professor H. Spencer Lewis seems to have lifted the veil of mystery that has enveloped the science of Astrology for centuries past. Combining his knowledge of Psychic Force with his wonderful system of Astrology, he has brought his method down to an absolutely scientific basis, reading the strange workings of the planets under whose sign one is born with amazing accuracy. So startling are his predictions that those who receive them are almost carried back to the days of great miracles and forced to believe that Professor Lewis must be possessed of a strange but wonderful power. Even astrologers stand amazed at the accuracy with which he foretells the future.

"I followed your advice and succeeded," writes Miss T. St. Claire. "All of your predictions came true. I wish I had sent for the wonderful free reading you gave me before I did."

If you wish a free reading of your life, on a beautiful Astral-Psychic Chart; if you wish to know your lucky and unlucky periods; what pitfalls to avoid; what opportunities to grasp; suggestions on business, friends, enemies, love, marriage ties, travels, sickness, deaths, etc., write a short letter to Prof. H. Spencer Lewis, Room 77, No. 43 West 27th street, New York City, and you will receive it by mail without delay and absolutely free. Be sure to give date of birth and age, and spell out your first name and last name, and write your address plainly. Kindly send ten cents in silver or stamps to cover cost of mailing and chart, and Prof. Lewis will send your reading and a free copy of his new and finely illustrated book, entitled, "Your Past, Present and Future Revealed," without any charge whatever. Be sure to tell your friends to send also.

Scenes In Spirit Life.

As Witnessed by Abby A. Judson and Carlyle Petersilea. Given Through the Mediumship of Amelia Petersilea.

Much has been, and is, said about the hells existing within the Spiritual spheres; but I have not, as yet, become cognizant of these hells. They may exist; very likely there is much unhappiness within the lowest condition of spirit life, but it cannot necessarily last very long; for no matter how benighted a soul may be, that soul has some near or dear friend who will feel interested in carrying to that soul light, love, and strength.

Even if that soul has no near and dear friend, there are bands of bright spirits who make it their business to carry light, love and wisdom into dark places, and very few souls will remain in unhappiness, or wicked, dark and revengeful, when they can grasp at a ray of truth and light to save themselves, for the one great aim of all life is to be bright and happy. Ignorance is the cause of all unhappiness, and the breaking of natural laws. But, as I said before, I have not as yet witnessed, and therefore could not give evidence, that such hells exist.

My object in writing this present series of letters is to give evidence of that which I have seen, for even in your courts of justice none are allowed to give evidence unless they know positively and within their own personality of that to which they are called upon to testify. Abby Judson and I both wish to write a series of letters, giving evidence of that which we have seen, and also taken part in, within the spiritual spheres, and we desire to call these communications "Scenes in Spirit Life, as witnessed by Abby A. Judson and Carlyle Petersilea. Given Through the Mediumship of Amelia Petersilea."

Now I wish to say that thought photography is about to become an established fact in the earthly life. It has always been a fact in Nature, and is a great universal truth.

Every thought and thing are distinctly photographed within the ether, and the brain is a mass of convolutions or natural sensitive plates that received the impressions, thoughts and scenes that exist both in the natural and spiritual worlds; and this is called memory; but no photographic plate can receive and register anything that does not have an existence. There must be something to photograph, or it cannot be impressed upon a sensitive plate. Therefore when we impress these scenes upon the brain of our sensitive, they actually have an existence or we could not thus impress them.

Some talk of imagination, but nothing can be imagined that does not have existence somewhere within the great universe of Nature; consequently all these scenes, which we shall picture upon the brain of our sensitive, exist, and we have witnessed them and can give evidence to the truth of that which we have seen; but, together with our scenes we shall give acts, and many of the people who are acting their parts in these heavenly scenes are well known to the present generation of mankind on the earth.

Now, our gifts in spirit life differ one from another, just as the gifts of those of earth do. For instance, although Abby Judson and I were both teachers when in the earthly life, and employed other teachers to instruct pupils in the different branches of education, yet, after all is said, our gifts are different, together with our methods, but we are congenial souls and find our happiness very nearly on the same plane of existence. We are both still teachers — I having founded, together with my earthly co-adjutor, Dr. Eben Tourgee, a grand conservatory of music, elocution, and art. Abby has, together with her beloved soul-mate, or husband, as you of earth call it, a grand school for the young of both sexes, wherein everything is taught that is grand, good, and noble. Not only music, elocution, languages, and art, but morality of the highest order. Not only this, but home life, and the rearing of little children who have come to the spirit life in infancy, and all the way up to manhood and womanhood.

I am well aware that there are some in the earthly life who object to the term "soul-mates," under the plea that soul-mating leads to immorality. If it leads to immorality in the earth life, it certainly does not in the spirit life; and how one of the grandest truths in Nature can lead to immorality, I fail to see. All truths can be twisted, and given a different meaning, just as your fakes pretend they are mediums and twist and distort grand truths into filthy, vulgar shapes. So the minds of many can twist and distort grand truths into filthy, vulgar shapes. So the minds of many can twist and distort the great truth of eternal soul-mates into all kinds of imaginable, filthy ideas; but all these ideas are in the minds of the persons themselves, and they clothe them up in their own filthy, artificial and disgusting toggery; but the great laws of Nature are not contravened thereby of Nature are not contravened thereby.

The earthly life is too crude and ignorant yet to accept in all its immaculate purity the great truth of eternal soul-mates. But here in the spiritual spheres the highest angels know it to be true.

There is a great universal law of strict justice, and if a soul does not find it in the earthly life—and very few do—it will surely find it in the spiritual life, sooner or later. Would it be a just and equitable law that some should be happily united to husbands and wives while others go through eternity all alone, or united to those who inspire nothing but the utmost loathing and disgust? Is it highly moral for a grand, good, noble, affectionate and tender woman to be united for all eternity to a man who in the earthly life abuses her in every conceivable way; who does nothing but abuse her every hour of his life; who is false to her in every way; who provides nothing for his home—if they have a home at all she must provide it; a man who is drunken and villainous in every way, who beats his wife; who tries in many ways to secretly murder her?

Many times wives are not at all what they should be. There are many so-called homes on earth that are nothing but hells. Can anyone wish to carry all such miseries into the spiritual spheres and make hells of them also? O, no; the great universal law of strict justice will not allow of this, consequently they meet with the great law of eternal soul-mates, else all things would be incomplete.

I advise everybody to buy the book, "Oceanides," and read it. Nearly every word in it is true. All pertaining to Rombus and Oceanides is strictly true, but Ernst von Himmel did not exist as a person. The word simply means earnest of heaven, and is allegorical. Yet there really was an Ernst von Himmel, but Oceanides met him years afterward, and he really and truly was her soul-mate. They were united, and Oceanides was as happy with him as she had been miserable with Rombus.

No greater happiness can come to the soul of man or woman than to be truly united—in other words, soul-mated. It is the spirit and soul that must be mated, but the earthly plane is not ready for it yet; but none can rob the spiritual life of this great law of justice, consequently Abby Judson is united to her own, and no one can rob her of that which belongs to her, or to the other half of herself; and no one can rob me of my own other self—my own dear wife who is still left, for a little while, below, that more work through her may be accomplished.

Now the first scene that we shall impress on the sensitive plate, or convolutions of the brain of the medium, is the vast spiritual zone. I say "we," for much of the present work will be done by Abby Judson and myself joining our forces together, for we have more power by working together than singly. There are others, too, who will aid, but these it will not be necessary to mention at present. The first picture, then, is that of a vast, spiritual zone, surrounding your earth, attached to it, and moving with it.

Now the topography of this spiritual zone is exactly like that of its nucleus, the solid, material globe. The seas, the lakes, and oceans, lie exactly above the earthly seas, oceans, rivers, lakes, ponds, and so forth. The spiritual seas and oceans are really emanations from the corresponding ones of earth—the fine, ethereal, attenuated portions.

Some may object and say that the waters, after rising in the form of vapor, condense and return to the earth in the form of rain or snow, dew, and so forth. Yes, a very large proportion of it does, but not all; there is a residue that never returns at all, and this finer substance, which is really in the form of two gases, rises up until it reaches the spiritual zone; it is now beyond the attractive force of the earth, and is held by the great law of attraction to the spiritual zone; this, as all must know, is lighter than the atmosphere of the earth and rises above it.

Now, we cannot give you the exact number of miles, but as soon as it gets beyond the earth's atmosphere, the earth can attract it no longer; and now the great law of spiritual attraction is in force; it is now attracted and held to the spiritual sphere. The great law of attraction, or like attracting like, is operative throughout al the universes of nature; but, as before stated, this spiritual zone is held to the earth, or around it, by this same law of attraction. The spiritual zone attracts to itself all that belongs to it. The material earth attracts to itself all that is heavier or grosser.

Now, as all must see, our zone is many, many millions of miles larger in circumference than the earth, the earth being merely a small nucleus or core, so that, for instance, above your American continent lies another spiritual American continent, many, very many, thousands of miles larger than the material continent, and above all other continents and islands the same, and our oceans, seas, lakes, and rivers, are correspondingly much larger, or in exact ratio corresponding with those of earth, so that we really have everything that you have on the earth, in a fine, attenuated, sublimated condition, with all ugliness, grossness, coarseness and death dropped out; all the heavy grossness falls back to earth to be there worked over until it becomes fine enough to take its place in the spiritual sphere. The earth is the kindergarten wherein all things are prepared for the higher spiritual realms.

There is another great truth that we wish to force home to you of earth, and that is, our spiritual bodies never leave the spiritual zone and visit earth no more than your earthly bodies leave the earth to visit the spiritual realms. The law is as stringent here as there, but the spirit, the soul, the thought, the telegraphy, the phonography, the electrical powers, the photographic power, and many other powers that as yet you do not know about, are all operative, and are the connective links between our zone and your globe. We are not as intangible as you suppose, but are as tangible as you are, and even more so, for we are brighter, more luminous, and far more powerful. Our forms are like your own, or, rather, are duplicates of the earthly forms which we bore on earth, and are as real and tangible as they can well be.

Some seem to think that a spirit is an intangible nothing; but the spiritual form is not, for all spirit must be clothed with matter, and that brings us to the subject of maerialization, or etherealization, which is a universal fact in Nature. Just as we attract and clothe ourselves here with a fine, material substance, so, when the spirit leaves the spiritual zone, for a while, to visit earth, it must leave its body behind. It can there, occasionally, take on another substance for a short time—an ethereal substance which it attracts from the air and other substances, and clothe itself for a short time for some purpose or wish that it has and desires to accomplish.

Some may ask at this point "Why we of earth cannot cannot see these zones or spheres as we look upward?" The reason is this: The human eye is not adapted to see so far away. We cannot tell you just how many miles the first sphere is away from the earth, but too far away for the human eye to see; moreover, the atmosphere of the earth conceals it from the eye, for the eyes of mankind are fixed to the atmosphere of the earth and cannot see beyond it. If Boston and New York were exactly on a level, and one should strain one's eyes all that was possible, one could not, in Boston, see New York, yet New York would be there just the same. There is a limit to the natural sight of the earthly eye.

But, you say, we can see the stars, the moon, the sun, the clouds, and so forth. Yes, you can; but only those whose light penetrates through the atmosphere of earth and reaches the eyes; but when the light of the sun overpowers the lesser lights, one cannot see them. The clouds do not rise above the altitude which the eye can reach, or if some do, they cannot be seen; and then, just think, when there is a fog one cannot see one's nearest neighbor, and vessels at sea often collide because they cannot be seen, by those on board, through a fog, and not even a light can penetrate a heavy fog—not even the light of the sun.

In London, often at midday it is as dark as the darkest night, on account of a heavy fog, and the streets have to be lighted, and even those lights are visible but a very short distance.

Others may ask, at this juncture, why the spirits that materialize or etherealize here on the earth cannot retain that ethereal form or clothing, if they are so clothed in the spiritual spheres, and our reply is, that the light and heat of the sun draws all things upward, and this clothing being very ethereal, is very soon dissipated by the sun's rays and drawn upward; but in the ethereal realms the law of spiritual gravity holds good, just as the law of earthly gravity does; yet even in the spiritual realms all things are tending upward. The spiritual zone is made up entirely of the emanations from the earthly globe. These fine, ethereal emanations are constantly rising to form our spheres; but, like water, you do not see them rise, and when they reach a certain altitude, then the spiritual attraction of gravitation commences, also condensation. Each thing attracts to itself that which belongs to it, otherwise we could not have beautiful flowers, neither trees; in fact, not anything; all would be promiscuity; but, as all ethereal germs gravitate to the earthly globe, there to make their first growth and development by a natural law of like attracting like, so here it is the same, except that these spheres only attract and hold that which has had a start in the heavier matter of earth, for nothing here is propagated from the germ or seed—everything from earthly emanations, for the soul, the spirit, the ego, the identity, rises up to the spheres and then through a great law each attracts that which belongs to itself.

Now there are a great many questions that may be asked: "Do you build houses there of wood?" No; that belongs to the first stages of life on the earthly plane of existence; yet we have homes and houses more beautiful than you have ever dreamed could be possible; but our houses are also built from emanations and put together and adjusted by our thoughts. Thoughts will clothe themselves with these emanations, for thoughts are attractive and attract the proper spiritual clothing.

"We think, after all, that things must be very intangible."

Not so, however. If you look at Jupiter through a telescope you will see it surrounded by a number of belts, but if you were on the planet itself, and looking upward, you could not see these belts; yet they are real and tangible as can be. One looking at the earth from other planets can see our spiritual zones as plainly as we can see the rings of Saturn and the belts of Jupiter. Intangible things strive for tangibility, or to clothe themselves with matter and spirit must forever clothe itself with matter.

Now, one can readily see, from the foregoing, that we here are able to have all that you on earth have; and exceedingly much more; that is, we can have houses, homes, and elegant buildings of all kinds, and as our world is made up from the emanations of the earthly world, we have oceans, seas, lakes, rivers, ponds, rivulets, exquisite gardens filled with all manner of choice and beautiful flowers, trees, shrubbery, forests, hills and dales, mountains and meadows; we also have light, fleecy clouds, dew and occasionally a gentle rain; also an overarching sky, blue as the ether is blue; we have an ethereal atmosphere, soft breezes, and occasionally quite a wind; we surely have lightning, and reverberating thunder in consequence. No one can contradict this, for electricity exists throughout all the universes, and throughout all space—or rather, ether; for there is no such thing as void or nothing. Of course, all things are in an ethereal or sublimated condition, refined and most exquisitely beautiful.

Now we want to tell you about the sun, moon and stars. We can see the sun—or your sun, rather, but it does not look to us just as it does to you of the earth. It looks exceedingly larger, and instead of one golden-colored light, we see that light expressed in all the exquisite colors of the rainbow, the seven primitive rays with all their intermediate shadings, but, as we often told you before, the sun is not a single globe, but there are two globes, one magnetic, the other carbonic, whose forces play back and forth, which causes the blazing light called the sun, and that sun which you of earth see is the focus, or point where these forces meet, which causes it to appear as one body; the real globes, which throw out these forces which you see, and someday science will prove what we say to be true; scientific men and women will begin to see this, at least.

Franz Petersilea, and other spiritual beings, wrote this long ago in the book called "The Disvovered Country," and other writings; but all things must bide their time, yet try to get ahead as fast as you can, so that the people of earth may be happier in consequence.

Now we here can see all the stars, and many more than you of earth can. They also look much larger to us, and, like the sun, shine upon us with all their beautiful coloring. The moon is as near to us as the earth is, and looks to us like a small earth, which it really is; and instead of an old earth, it is a young one—a child of the earth, thrown off from it. It was a ring, at first, around the earth, like Saturn's ring; after breaking away from the earth it resolved itself into a small globe, and is now the satellite of the earth, and where the earth has but one, Jupiter has many, for Jupiter is an older planet than the earth, and exceedingly beautiful the great panorama of the heavens is to us; but as we have now shown what and how it is possible for us to have all that you have on earth, and very much more, we shall commence to enter into the details of our lives, and the beautiful scenes that transpire here.

Some may object and say that the spots on the sun, or "sun spots," prove that the sun is an earthly globe. They prove nothing of the kind, for those supposedly sun spots are really invisible planets, or objects, or material substance that lies between you and the sun, which causes them to appear like spots on the sun.

There are millions of globes in ethereal space that none on the earth can see, for all the stars that are visible to earth, except the planets, are suns to thousands of other planets belonging to them, that are never visible to the people of earth; only the planets belonging to your own system, and the suns of other worlds, are visible to you. Neither Abby Judson nor myself have as yet visited other worlds, so we shall confine our descriptions to the sphere that we inhabit.

I promised my dear wife that when we both should be in spirit life we would take our first trip to the moon. I intend to keep my promise, and not visit any of the planets until she comes here to go with me; but I converse with those who have visited them, and thus learn all I can about them. We have enough to do, at present, to carry on our schools, pay visits to other institutions of learning, and to visit all the renowned and learned ones we have ever heard of. If we did not have eternity before us we should feel hurried, as though we could not do all that we desired to do.

And, right here, I would like to say: Do not add grief to the hearts of those who have lost by so-called death their nearest and dearest friends and relatives, by telling them they must not think too much about their lost ones; for, if they do, it will keep their spirits earth-bound, so that they cannot rise into higher spheres.

To talk thus to those who grieve is adding sorrow to their already overburdened hearts. It makes them feel that their dead are indeed lost to them, somewhat as it does to tell them of the old heaven and hell.

No, no; to know that our friends love and think of us is a joy, and an incentive to greater and grander works on our part.

Now, try to look on our side of the question; suppose a husband and wife have been united for years; they have been inseparable companions; they have filled each other's cup of happiness to the brim—even the separation of a few hours would cause them to be restless; and, at length, one or the other is compelled by so-called death to depart to the spirit world, and the one left on earth tries immediately to forget the one who has departed, putting such one afar off in heaven, or in some very high sphere, and then look about to form other earthly ties. Now, how does the one who has departed into the spirit world feel? If you were here with me, and could see, you would understand.

I am continually meeting with lonely, sorrowful, wandering, restless, spirits, whose husbands or wives have already forgotten, or are trying to forget them, putting them afar off, as though they were really dead, or annihilated, and forming other earthly ties. And why is it thus? It all comes from the old, false teaching. The far-off heaven, and that spirits never return; or the false notion that you must not grieve for the lost one, otherwise you will keep that loved one earth-bound. You must let it soar into heights of bliss.

It would be a supremely selfish soul that could soar into heights of bliss, and leave the sorrowful, helpless one of earth alone; but, where the bliss? What would constitute that bliss? You of earth ought to know.

I hear many talk of the blissful abodes of the spirits, of their ecstatic joys, and so forth. It is high time that the world understood more about these things, and I shall constitute myself one of its teachers. I was a teacher all my life on earth—yes, even from my ninth year, or, at nine years of age I received my first pupil in music, that one being a young lady of nearly twenty years of age. I also played in grand symphony at that early age; so you all see it is impossible for me to be anything but a teacher.

Now I, together with a number of others, have formed here within this conservatory a large class of the previously-mentioned restless, lonely, wandering spirits, whose loved ones of earth have already forgotten, or are struggling hard to forget them; putting them afar off; fearing to hold them down from the seventh sphere, or thinking the dead never return.

Yes, we are forming a large class of these poor souls, and after we have given this class a lesson in harmony, and some of our more advanced pupils have played some ovation to and for them, then we interview them; and from this on will really commence "Scenes in Spirit Life."

(To be continued.)

ILLINOIS STATE ASSOCIATION.

What Has It Done, and What Is It Now Doing?

The above questions often confront the members of the official board of the State Spiritualists' Association, and it is time they were answered.

In the first place, the State Association has organized Spiritualism so far as it IS organized in the State, and with the proper co-operation of the Spiritualists of the State, it will continue so doing until it need not be asked, "What is the numerical standing of Spiritualism in Illinois?"

If those who believe in spirit return and communication will unite in every county and town in the state and become auxiliary to the State Association, as they should, the general cause will be advanced, and the value and standing of Spiritualism enhanced bountifully thereby.

Words are all right in a suggestive way, and in promulgating plans, but work and financial aid mean something, and accomplish much. Our cause is poor, financially. It is better off in this respect in Illinois and in the National Association, and perhaps in many other State Associations, than it was a year ago. But more money is needed to push forward the work in sections where the Cause is still, comparatively, a stranger. We do not advocate making it a business organization, but religious bodies, to be solid, must be well founded financially.

The Illinois State Association has done all and everything that has been done to weed out the false from the true, and to protect the true against the enactment of prejudicial laws that have been proposed. Its President and other officers have been in their places when there was need of action.

Even those who ask such questions could do themselves greater justice by joining the State Association, and helping it to find something more to do. Of course this has no reference to the busy field workers who are subject to calls from every quarter of the globe, but it does refer pointedly to every Spiritualist and every local worker in the State. We cannot compel anyone to work, even inside the Association, but we most cardially invite them to do their duty as they can see it in this connection.

If the State Association lacks the facilities for doing missionary work, it is the fault of the apathetical, so-called Spiritualists who only have words, and usually, words of criticism and contumely, rather than enthusiasm for the success of the cause in all its phases of manifestation and parts of manipulation and propaganda.

No one knows better what is needed to advance, or what tends more to retard the progress of Spiritualism than the officers of the State Associations, the National Association, and the hard-working "infielders."

No one knows what there is to contend with in trying to make a success of such an institution in this enlightened, reasoning, weighing age, better than said officers.

Keep your eye on your State Association, and keep in touch with the whole Cause. You can't do this by kicking in the ranks, kicking in the traces, and kicking over the "dashboard." But you can and will do it if you go into the silence with your own soul, with your own conscience; by looking backward and forward into what has been, what is, and the infinite possibilities of the future.

Reach out in mind and do something; reach out your hand and do something, reach down into your pocket and do something. Help the cause now. Do not wait till you are dead and cremated. Do your duty; do your best now. Don't depend upon the uncertainty of a will. Make out a deed. Draw on your bank account now, lest in some unforeseen fatal moment you suddenly expire unprepared so far as your business and business adjustments are concerned, and you leave for the higher life with a replete treasury—of regrets.

It seems a little singular how some people can love a cause so deeply and do nothing for it. There is plenty of wealth among the people who call themselves Spiritualists, if we can only induce them to be REAL Spiritualists. Just how a true Spiritualist can be grasping and harmonize his own acts with the deepest and sweetest principles of Spiritualism, and the teachings of his spirit friends from the wisdom spheres; how he can harmonize greed and selfishness with charity and benevolence, with reason and conscience, is past all conception of human comparison.

Realize that you are a spirit now, and that your neighbor, your brother, your sister is a spirit now as much as you or they will ever be, and figure out if you can how to make the best use of your faculties and the possibilities lying all around you; whether to hoard and keep it just out of reach of your fellow-man, and with the surplus locked in the vaults of some bank; figure out how you can get free from the earth conditions with greed and avarice, with selfishness and a perverted spiritual nature as a millstone about your neck in the deep, deep sea of life and justice, equality and progress, or even evolution confronting you.

We are not authorized to say what the State Board is planning to do this winter, but venture the assertion that everyone interested in it will be enthused into unusual activity, and while watching The Progressive Thinker for its everlasting fountain of good things, watch for announcements from the Illinois State Association.

We wish to kindly ask each living auxiliary to send in some kind of report to your State Secretary, even if it be but a grievance. We may be able to lift you up if you are down; we may be able, with your own effort, to send you a hustler who can hustle; we may be able to give you some good advice—which is about the cheapest thing in the market.

Let us get a united hustle on us for the next six months and see how we can boom Spiritualism—the emancipator of human souls.

It is not the purpose of this article to "pull the leg" of the Spiritualists who are wealthy, but to arouse each one to the feeling that it is a duty to do all possible for a cause that promises and deals out so much good to the world; that comforts the mourner by restoring a long lost loved one, and giving hope to struggling souls, and souls in darkness.

Is it not worth your effort?

We court the investigation of men of wealth, and invite them to come among us and see and know for themselves just what there is to live by and for, and what there is sacred and holy in Spiritualism. And we do not consider it "impossible for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven," if he only possesses the right kind of riches. No harder indeed than for a camel to go through the eye of a needle. But we do contend that material wealth must be properly utilized this side of the grave to be of benefit to the spirit in a future life.

We need the assistance of people financially able and willing to do, and truly solicit their investigation and respectful patronage.

THE RING-CHISM DEBATE.

As Depicted by One Who Heard It.

At the close of a sunny summer's day, August 19, 1907, as the eastbound passenger train pulled up at Hedrick, Okla., John W. Ring, with buoyant step and expectant face, ended his long journey from San Diego, Cal., for the purpose of meeting J. W. Chism (Christian) in debate. His opponent had not yet arrived. But at 10 a. m. the following day was the time set for the beginning. This debate had been well advertised and all was expectation, so the news that the Spiritualist had come spread like wild-fire.

The next train from the west brought his opponent, who was met by both Christians and Spiritualists, and soon for the first time the contestants met, whom the close observer might discern inadvertently observing each other.

But the thoughts of each must of necessity be omitted, however interesting they might be.

But their thoughts on the question to be discussed were expressed so that all present could hear, and recorded, that all who desire may read. (The book will be advertised in The Progressive Thinker; look out for it.)

But of all the things that surprised Mr. Ring in the debate was the vague understanding of his opponent as to what the principles of Spiritualism were.

He knew absolutely nothing of our "Declaration of Principles," and after Mr. Ring had taken them up seriatim and shown by passages of scripture attributed to Jesus that he (Jesus) held to principles identical with ours, would, in his dense ignorance and coarse manner call out, "Evidence, please."

"Demonstrate your religion, for if it is true, it is demonstrable, and a thing demonstrable is not debatable."

Now just think of the clouded and undeveloped state of a man's reasoning powers that would ask for a demonstration of the "belief in an Infinite Intelligence," the first principle in our declaration of principles—one of the six principles which Mr. Ring was offering to be identical with the basis of the religion of Jesus.

It would show the same lack of discrimination as it would to ask the Democrat who claims his "declaration of principles" (his "platform") to be identical with those of Thomas Jefferson to demonstrate his politics on the stage. Having never come in contact with a class of people who vibrated on such a low plane of existence, Mr. Ring seemed dumfounded, dazed, and at a loss how to proceed to make himself understood, and, as I thought, cast a side glance of criticism at me, thinking, "What is this you have got me into?" (For I was the one who arranged the debate.)

This is an object lesson to those whose envjronments are that of enlightenment, of the great need of teachers understanding the ignorance of the vast majority of mankind.

Now just think of the benighted state of a people whose leader posing as a shining light among them can not distinguish between the phenomena of Spiritualism and its formal declaration of principles.

The question at issue was not the correctness or trueness of either the teachings of Jesus nor the principles of Modern Spiritualism, but the similarity of the two.

But to see clearly the point at issue and meet it fairly was beyond Mr. Chism, and to one who could understand the environments under which the poor man had grown up, and see with what impudent confidence and tenacity he groaned and labored to bring forth all the vile things with which he had burdened his soul, thinking them to be Spiritualism, was truly pathetic.

The storm of Mr. Chism's spirit might rage in its vehemence till the eyes had all the gleaming of a demon, and the arms and fists might rend the air, and the body contort itself as one obsessed, and vile personalities be poured forth, and yet through it all Mr. Ring kept an even mind.

With a soft answer he turned away wrath. In the gentleness of the Christ spirit as he stood up to speak he seemed to calm the raging psychic storm as Christ on Galilee stilled the wind and wave. So from day to day, for six days, his influence increased, while that of his opponent decreased.

About the first thing Mr. Chism did was to make his boast that he was fully prepared at any time to duplicate anything any Spiritualist might do as a "spiritual gift."

While the question under consideration called for no demonstration on our part, yet Mr. Ring allowed the audience to suggest subjects from which he did some improvisional work, which Mr. Chism at his earliest opportunity pronounced very poor doggerel, and told just how it was done, giving that old auto-suggestion theory, and telling how he could hypnotize people and make them think they were horses, dogs, etc.

So, after this talk of Mr. Chism's, Mr. Ring placed his improvised composition and its method of production as evidence and defied Mr. Chism to duplicate it, which, contrary to his boast, he failed to do.

We thought that perhaps Mr. Chism told the truth when he said he could make his subject act a dog, etc., and so excused him, inasmuch as he did not say he could make him act a poet, for the subject can only think as does the operator, and as Mr. Chism could not think as a poet, of course he could give no poetic inspiration or suggestion but only of that other class which he mentioned.

Surely any sincere man would feel the sting of conscience to boast as did Mr. Chism, and then fail as absolutely as he did.

He that boasteth much doeth little.

Now, anyone knowing of this debate should call the attention of it to his neighbor and let him spend his dollar for it, as he might be benefited and the cause advanced.

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEAL.

The POSTAGE on papers has been increased to all the British possessions on this continent. On a single paper we are compelled to pay ONE CENT each week, amounting to 52 cents a year, whereas previously we only paid the pound rates—a mere trifle. Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

Back to the Elements.

"Religion has no scientific basis; it is merely a belief." Thus said Dr. Page, and truthfully, in our issue of October 5.

Churchmen are not satisfied with the true and original meaning of this word religion. As with many other terms they labor to change the meaning to meet their needs. The word came direct from the Latin religare, to rebind, to bind back, to bind fast. It was the intention of the priesthood to force on the people their own creed, pretending it had its origin with the Christian fathers. In furtherance of their vile purpose they prohibited the reading of such books as would expose their frauds. The "Holy Bible," now received by Protestants as the "Word of God," was formerly among the prohibited books. The reason given for its exclusion, they claimed it was too sacred to be placed in vulgar hands. They finally brought it out as a necessity. Franklin, in his autobiography, says:

"Our forefathers during the reign of Queen Mary, had an English Bible. To conceal it, and place it in safety, it was fastened open with tapes under and within the cover of a joint-stool. When my great-grandfather wished to read it to his family, he placed the stool on his knees, then turned over the leaves under the tapes. One of the children stood at the door to give notice if he saw the apparitor coming, who was an officer of a spiritual court. In that case the stool was turned down again upon its feet, when the Bible remained concealed as before."

There was not only a church penalty at that time—about 1580—against reading the Bible by others than a priest, but there was a civil penalty against having a copy in possession. Martin Luther, educated for the priesthood, never saw a copy of the Bible till he was more than 21 years of age. It was those early restrictions against the book which made it holy to Protestants.

When the truth shall be learned the collection known as the Bible, had comparatively but recently come from the hands of its sacerdotal authors, and its concealment from the hands of critics was necessary to prevent an exposure of its fraudulent authorship. And then there was the dungeon, the torture-chamber, the stake and the fire-brand to silence the critics of those ages, as a Bruno and a Servetus could attest.

Instead of tracing the derivation of the word religion to its truthful source the priesthood, aided by some of the lexicographers, writing in their interest, have dug up the Latin RELIGENS—revering the gods, pious, religious; and some non-critical, classical scholars have aided in popularizing this false derivation.

Still Coming to the Front.

The French authorities of France, on October 1, issued a decree separating church and state in their colony of Algeria, to take effect and be in force from and after January 1, 1907.

France and Spain, in the past, were the main support of Roman Catholicism. Spain, stripped of her restraining colonies, is now but little behind France in its determination not to be subjected to outside control.

The Terrible Crime Wave Does Not Involve Spiritualists.

Turn which way we may, and consult the news columns of the public press with critical care, and it does seem if an orthodox devil has an existence he is loose at this time. There is no one class of offences that seem paramount, but they range from capital down to misdemeanors of a minor sort. With a very large exchange list embracing the great metropolitan dailies and down to the humble weekly country organ, and the same startling facts greet us. One paper, which is a fair sample of many, says:

"There appears to be no limit to the crime wave which is sweeping over this section, and will result in the October grand jury being confronted with the most sickening grist of criminal cases in history."

We have been told time and again that these moral delinquencies are the product of growing skepticism; but the truth is, the criminal classes are almost invariably churchmen, or indorsers of the orthodox faith. And the numbers of clerical offenders are so great the conclusion would be that the entire fraternity is on the verge of infidelity.

But, observe, it is not the thoughtful, studious preacher, whose laborious researches have made him a doubter, or an open agnostic, who is guilty of crime. Consult the records, and these bold thinkers are our most exemplary citizens.

Look out upon the long list of so-called infidels in all the ages, and we find them without in exception, models of manly virtues.

Omit the frauds, churchmen in belief, in disguise, who have intruded themselves into the spiritual ranks, and are imposing on the world as mediums, fakirs in fact, and there is no class of people of equal numbers in all the wide world, who are stricter observers of moral, social, municipal and statutory law than the Spiritualists. Churchmen may claim they are blasphemers; but when investigation is made, the believers in spirit communion have the most exalted conception of divinity of any people on the globe. Their God is not he who ate and talked, and wrestled with men, and would tolerate no rival; but is the spirit of a boundless universe, that knows no change, cessation or decay.

We glory in the character, the exemption from crime, and from wrongdoing of every sort of Spiritualists; and we pray all to hold their standard high, as they have ever done, and the time will come when our bitterest opponents will concede we have been more faithful to ourselves, to humanity in general, and to natural right, than any other people. Consult the long array of offenders, and note their professed belief, and all will be astonished at the absence of Spiritualists from the long blotted and blackened calendar.

More About the Gods.

In a volume of Hibbert Lectures, published twenty years ago, the learned author discussed the pretended Hebrew Scriptures and their authors. In all the ancient writings prior to the addition of diacritical points, claimed to have been introduced in the 6th century, but which some good scholars insist did not appear until the 16th century, there were no vowels, nothing but consonants, and the words were run together, with no spaces between. The correct rending of the early manuscript by modern scholars is a simple impossibility. Each reader will add vowels to suit his own caprice. The effect was illustrated several years ago by the translation of a passage in Hebrew by two eminent scholars. No person would have suspicioned the two renderings were from the same text, they were so varied in every feature. They neither agreed in language nor ideas. This the secret why translations of the Bible follow each other so closely, and agree so well. The authorized King James' version, appeared two years later than the Douay, or Catholic Bible, and yet, very generally, they agree in language. This came from both having copied from an earlier rendering. The late revisers were cautioned not to interfere with the older renderings. They merely tried to adapt the book to modern knowledge.

If the old Greek and Latin Scriptures had never been translated to guide modern linguists and each scholar had acted on his own knowledge of those languages independent of each and all others, we should have had a very different Bible from that we now possess. Our best ecclesiastical scholars now concede the Hebrew letters J-h-v-h, translated Jehovah, should have been rendered Jahveh. See Kitto's Biblical Literature, article "God." Jehovah was the tribal god of the Jews, and not one remove for the better from the tribal gods of surrounding pagan nations.

And the Elohim of the Old Testament, everywhere rendered God, was a plural noun, and really was the collective name of all the Hebrew gods; yet the translators exerted all their skill to disguise that fact. They wanted the Jews, whose religion they claim to have adopted, to appear as monotheists; whereas they were in truth polytheists. For a time they even sacrificed to the Devil. See Deut. 32:17. And even Solomon, "the wisest of men," as we were taught in our Sunday School days, who has the credit of building the first temple, was a polytheist, "for Solomon went after Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Zionites, and after Malcom, the abomination of the Ammonites;" and he built "a high place for Chemosh, the abomination of Moab, in the hill before Jerusalem; and for Molech the abomination of Ammon." See I Kings 11:5, 6, 7.

The most stupendous fraud of all the ages is the Christian attempt to make the Jews appear the worshipers of but one God.

FROM WASHINGTON.

A TELEGRAM FROM THE N. S. A. CONVENTION AT WASHINGTON, LAST WEEK, GIVES THE FOLLOWING: "DR. GEO. B. WARNE, PRESIDENT; THE HON. CHARLES R. SCHIRM, VICE-PRESIDENT; GEO. W. KATES, SECRETARY; MR. STEVENS, TREASURER. THE SELECTION OF OFFICERS IS A GOOD ONE. ESPECIALLY DO THE SPIRITUALISTS OF ILLINOIS FEEL GRATIFIED AT THE ELECTION OF DR. WARNE. NEXT WEEK'S PAPER WILL BE DEVOTED TO THE CONVENTION REPORTS WITH FULL PARTICULARS.

A Practical Application of the Golden Rule Demonstrated.

Late advices from China indicate a renewal of the Boxer war, which caused so much trouble a few years ago. A cablegram from Shanghai, on the 29th of September tells of the killing of an Italian priest and several converts by the Boxers, in the village of Tawouli. The Lazarist Father's mission, at Manchowfu, has been burned. The missionaries escaped, and telegraphed for aid.

Is it not time this infernal waste of life and treasure, to force an undesirable religion on opposing nations shall cease, in the interest of humanity? China is the oldest, and many times the most populous nation on the globe. It has a system of religion which has made her people the least war-like. Education, adapted to the needs of the people, is widely diffused and the higher classes show a scholarship which will compare favorably with those of the West.

Why not apply the Golden Rule to this matter of forcing a religion on China, or any other nation which has no use for Christianity? Should missionaries representing Buddhism come among us, and threaten our people with eternal torture if they refuse to accept Buddha as a Messiah, and seek every opportunity to assail the dominant religion in the severest terms possible, how long before their temple would be destroyed, and their missionaries lynched?

Even to-day there are localities in the United States where American citizens, educated and refined, dare not openly express their honest opinions of the nunneries, their inmates, and their priestly visitors. They dare not express their convictions in regard to the early founders of Christianity. Should they do so and relate historical facts, the fate of unwise Christian missionaries to China would be theirs.

Instead of asking China to recompense for property destroyed and missionary lives sacrificed by mobs, or compel her by threatening war ships and an overwhelming array of bristling bayonets, let our authorities tell the intermeddlers in the affairs of other nations to stay at home, and mind their own business, else take such consequences as usually follow, and keep silent.

The people of China do not interfere with the natural rights of Europeans, or Americans, who visit them on business or in social interests. And they would be equally tolerant of opposing religions, if its advocates did not appear among them acting the part of dictators, and claiming to voice the will of God.

A SPRINGTIME LOVE.

Oh, morning skies were fair and blue in spring's sweet singing season,
And happiness we idly sought with all youth's fond unreason;
In gardens gay our joy we met, and found in flowerful closes
The love that came with the daffodils
  —and went away with the roses.

For soon the joyous springtime passed
  And left our dream Elysian
Only a fancy unfulfilled, only a fleeting vision;
And dead beneath the immortelles of Memory reposes
The love that came with the daffodils
  —and went away with the roses.

Another Object Lesson.

Here is another object lesson for Spiritualists to consider. Another materializing medium, who has been puffed in Spiritualist papers by misguided correspondents, has, like Maybe, Wyman, and others too numerous to mention, been grabbed, and as usual the medium's methods were exposed—no spirit from the celestial regions had anything to do with the manifestations. They were all fraudulent. Grab the "Spirit" that comes out of the cabinet and you will 999 times out of 1000 have in your hands the "medium." Read the following from the Daily News, of Clevelaud, O.

A "manifestation of physical phenonemy," by D. B. Jimerson, described by himself as the "noted Seneca Indian Spiritualistic medium," was brought to a sudden end Tuesday night at the home of Samuel Boyd, 3419 Marvin avenue S. W., when the "spirit" was seized by ruthless hands, lights flashed, and the occult force was found to be no other than the "noted Seneca Indian, etc.," himself.

Threatened with exposure and arrest Jimerson broke down and confessed that the spiritualistic seances in Cleveland for three weeks were fakes and that he did all the writing and picture drawing himself. Jimerson and his wife, who was with her husband and who also broke down and confessed the fraud, promised to leave town within 24 hours. They were allowed to go.

"Within the Influence."

Boyd had attended two of Jimerson's seances. At the first performance at Jimerson's boarding place, 1325 Prospect avenue S. E. Boyd had sat "within the influence," and a mystic hand had thrust within his bosom a message from his dead wife. Boyd tried again at another demonstration last Wednesday, and drew a tender note from a deceased daughter. However, Boyd declares that on the second occasion the medium's hand lost its cunning, and he discovered how the trick was turned.

So certain was Boyd that he knew how the stunt was done that he arranged for Jimerson to give a seance in his own house. Boyd invited in about 25 neighbors and newspaper men. Several of the women there were believers in Spiritualism. Jimerson was to receive $15 for engineering the "manifestation."

Hides Behind Curtain.

Across a corner of the room the medium stretched a black curtain about four feet high. This curtain was double thickness and open at the bottom. There were slits large enough to admit one's head through the outer fold, but the inner curtain was, presumably, without opening of any kind. A strip of cloth, a foot wide, stretched above the curtain, and lapped over it a few inches. This paraphernalia, with a card table inside, on which was a tablet, a pencil and a small silver call bell, comprised the "cabinet."

Three chairs facing the audience, were placed at the front of the cabinet. The medium asked two persons to come "within the influence," seating themselves in front of the cabnet. Dr. M. H. Held and wife ventured "within," Dr. Held on the right, Mrs. Held in the middle and the medium on the left. The outer curtain was drawn down over them, their heads emerging through the slits in the curtain like the black man at the country fair at whom you are entitled to throw three decayed eggs for a nickel.

Cautions Perfect Quiet.

Before going into semi-seclusion, Jimerson made a touching speech in which he asked that no one whisper, or cross his hands or feet, as it might make him lose the "control." He warned them that it depended on the audience to make the seance a success. Later, the audience rose nobly to the occasion. Also before covering himself and the two subjects, Jimerson showed how he grasped Mrs. Held's bare left arm with his two hands. He asked that Mrs. Held announce it, if at any time he removed either hand.

The lights turned low cast ghostly shadows on the dusky medium and the expectant subjects. The medium started a low, crooning song in which the elect joined. Suddenly the scratching of a pencil on paper could be heard behind the curtain. A tearing, crumpling sound was heard. Between the curtain and the cloth above a sheet of paper shot forth, and fluttered to the floor. The spectators gasped. Mrs. Jimerson recovered the sheet and in awe-struck tones read:

"Good evening, all. I am Fay." Fay, the medium explained, was the Indian writing control, own brother to Jimerson himself.

Fay Worked Hard.

Fay turned out copy fast. The papers came fluttering over, under and through the curtain. Then "Fay" rested and the picture control, "Ida B.," took up the task. At longer intervals sketches, some of them remarkable likenesses of those present, came pouring out. They were all picked up by Mrs. Jimerson and passed among the wondering spectators. Then "Fay" came back on the job.

"Send me a message, Fay," murmured Mrs. Held.

The scratching of pencil was heard, there was a noise of crumpling paper, like a butcher boy tying up a pound of steak, and the paper emerged from the curtain over Mrs. Held's shoulder and between herself and her husband,

Seized Spirit Arm.

Like a flash Dr. Held seized the arm over his wife's shoulder. A. H. Pendleton, a special policeman, and W. H. Strong, rushed in as the lights were turned on. Women screamed, tables and chairs were overturned, the Indian struggled desperately, but he was overpowered. It was his arm which Held had seized and which he now held up for all to see with the paper still crumpled in his palm.

Mrs. Jimerson, who had fought like a tigress to free her husband, broke down when threatened with arrest. She confessed the whole performance a fraud. Later Jimerson also confessed. Both signed the following statement:

Confesses to Fraud.

We make this statement of our own free will. D. B. Jimerson wrote the messages to-night with his own hand. He has written all the messages since he has been in Cleveland. The pictures were drawn by Jimerson at our rooms and brought here. Both the messages and pictures were put out from behind the curtain by my own husband's own hand.

(Signed)
D. B. JIMERSON,
MRS. D. B. JIMERSON.
(Witnessed)
W. H. Strong,
SAMUEL BOYD.

Mrs. Held explained why she could not tell when the Indian took one of his hands away from her arm, by showing how her forearm had been crushed in the vise-like grasp of the medium until it had lost all feeling. While he was singing before he "got power over the control" he was pinching her arm until she could not tell whether two hands or none at all was holding her. Her arm was black and blue when she was finally released.

Puts on "Psychometry."

Jimerson had been giving seances and demonstration in "psychometry." every day since he came to Cleveland from Salem, Ohio, three weeks ago. He declares he is a Seneca Indian from Salamanca, N. Y.

A pathetic feature of the exposure was the grief and humiliation of those who had believed in Jimerson's powers. One woman, a widow, who had attended many of Jimerson's seances, and who fought for him when the exposure came, cried bitterly when she heard from Jimerson himself that all he had done was a mere trick to obtain money.

"My faith in everything is gone," she sobbed. "You have ruined everything for me."

Jimerson did not get the $15 for the "manifestation."

THE TIME FOR ACTION.

It has arrived. THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, the largest Spiritualist paper now published in the world, will continue on its good work in its efforts to ELEVATE THE STANDARD of Spiritualism as a cult, as a sect, as a religion, if you so especially desire, or as a grand uplifting and soul-inspiring SCIENTIFIC TRUTH. Notwithstanding the fact that paper has arisen greatly in price, especially book paper, yet The Progressive Thinker will continue to be printed for the present at One Dollar per year, and the premiums sent out as formerly.

It is a fact that no paper the size of The Progressive Thinker can now be started in the United States, and be sustained at $1.00 per year. To endeavor to accomplish that feat now would prove ruinous to the one who undertook it.

The Progressive Thinker stands PRACTICALLY ALONE in this country in size, in circulation and influence, and to-day it is received by the great mass of intelligent Spiritualists with greater favor than ever.

Now we wish to extend its influence, to enlarge its scope of action, and thus be of greater value to the great SCIENTIFIC TRUTH, which those possess who believe in SPIRIT-RETURN. YOU can help us on in the great work we have undertaken by sending in your own subscription, and also by sending in an additional subscriber. The time for action has now arrived.

Quotation from the Word Painter.

Said the great word painter, Col. Ingersoll:

"The idea of immortality, that like a sea has ebbed and flowed in the human heart, with its countless waves of hope and fear beating against the shores and rocks of time and fate, was not born of any creed nor any religion. It was born of human affection, and it will continue to ebb and flow beneath the mists and clouds of doubt and darkness so long as Love kisses the lips of death."

Such was philosophy, as rendered by one of its ablest votaries. But a voice has reached us from the other shore, that has banished "darkness and death," and we now know immortality is an inheritance of all life.

Remarkable Narrative.

Mrs. Pepper-Vanderbilt Tells Her Own Love Story; "Bright Eyes" Made Her Wed, She Says.

"MR. VANDERBILT MY SOUL MATE TO THE END OF TIME," SHE DECLARES.—FOR THE FIRST TIME MRS. MAY PEPPER-VANDERBILT TELLS HER OWN LOVE STORY AND GIVES HER REASONS WHY SHE HAS BEEN SO BITTERLY ASSAILED.—IN THE INTERVIEW, GIVEN EXCLUSIVELY TO THE EVENING JOURNAL, SHE TELLS A REMARKABLE STORY OF A REMARKABLE WOMAN'S LOVE IN AN EARNEST, STRAIGHTFORWARD MANNER.

Mr. Vanderbilt is the mate of my soul. Bright Eyes, the influence that controls me, brought us together. I fell in love with his pure, beautiful soul. Our higher selves are mated to the end of time. No sacrifice that I could make would be too great for me to make for him. I am a woman and a wife, and my love is the deepest love because it is the love of soul for soul.

It is not an easy thing for a woman to tell you her own story. She can tell you the story of her wrongs. Most women will do that if you will listen, but her love story is different. She does not know whether you will understand. And mine is not easy, perhaps, for the ordinary person to understand.

There is so much love in the world. It is everywhere. We hear about it constantly, but what is it? It is common, carnal love. That is not love. That is lust. Our love, Mr. Vanderbilt's and mine, is different. Ours is the love of the soul.

To me he is the noblest man in the world, and I will bear anything for him. I will go to jail for him if necessary—why not? If you are not guilty you are free, no matter what you may be. But if you are guilty you are in jail, no matter how free your body may seem. That is my belief.

When She Met Vanderbilt.

I met Mr. Vanderbilt while his first wife was yet alive. His mother had been a Spiritualist. His wife was a Spiritualist. He for years had been a searcher into psychic matters. He believed in the theory of Vedanti. When he came with his wife to hear me at the church Mrs. Vanderbilt introduced us. We talked and I began to realize that I had met an unusual man. Then we began to study together. He led me along lines of thought that I had never traveled and my admiration for him grew. I became interested in the man; not in his physical or mental side, but in the spiritual being I had met. Then his wife died and we studied on together.

There had been no thought of our physical marriage until the idea came from without me. It was practically a command from the power that controls me, Bright Eyes. That is the name the papers have flaunted. She is my control.

Who Is "Bright Eyes?"

Who is "Bright Eyes?" I do not know. "Bright Eyes" is an influence. It may be a sixth sense. It may be sub-consciousness. I don't know. The influence was there long before I believed in Spiritualism. This influence says "I am Bright Eyes." The influence has never lied to me about anything else, why should I not believe it when it says "I am a spirit?" At least a real "You" in us should be able to do much as Marconi has done. It seems no more wonderful to me than that.

At any rate "Bright Eyes," this influence had never failed me. We both believed in it. If I had been able to control it I might not have allowed it to speak. But whatever this power is I do not possess it; it possesses me. I cannot compel it; it compels me. And then, too, I had come to love this man's soul. No one had loved him as I loved him. He is sixty-five years old; I wanted to make the rest of life here happy. And so when this influence told us to marry we obeyed and we were very happy. We are happy.

Persecuted for Her Religion.

The persecution this love has brought me is my religion. I might be the worst woman that walks Broadway, New York, and probably they would have done nothing; but I am a Spiritualist. I am influencing him because I am a Spiritualist. He is insane because he is in love with a Spiritualist. "Oh, he is insane—this man, who has business sense to make a fine living and a soul able to appreciate higher things than his trick accusers can even dream of!

For Minerva Vanderbilt I have no feeling of hatred. I have pity for a daughter who can so forget her duty to her father. She is the victim of bad advisers, while he, because he married me and treated me as he treated his first wife, is insane.

Mr. Vanderbilt has always had ideas regarding his property that might seem original. While the first Mrs. Vanderbilt was alive he made over everything to her, while she, in her turn, made a will leaving everything to him. It was all his, but it was in her name. After her death certain friends of Minerva Vanderbilt had her bring suit for one-third of this property.

Justice Jaycox threw the suit out of court. It had been brought by the same attorneys who are still in the fight against Mr. Vanderbilt. Minerva Vanderbilt had no money for such a suit. Her sister had refused to join with her in it. Mr. Vanderbilt had offered to do anything in his power for his daughter but he refused to divide his property during his lifetime. That was what her advisers wished to bring about. It was a speculation with the advisers, and as soon as they found the court would not consider the claim they took the only revenge—the mean, pitiable revenge—in their power. They brought this action to have Mr. Vanderbilt declared insane.

Wanted to Give Minerva All.

He had given all his property to his first wife and she willed it back to him. It was his and could belong to no one else. But when the trouble arose I begged him to settle. "Give her what she wants," I begged him. "Give her everything if she wants it. I have plenty for us two."

But it was a matter of principle with him. He refused and this suit followed. Now they have arrested me on the charge of stealing this house and lot. The house cost $10,500. Mr. Vanderbilt put up $4,000 and gave a mortgage for $6,500 for the remainder. I am responsible for that mortgage and I spent $2,000 of my own money in improvements, but I am arrested for stealing it.

It was all Mr. Vanderbilt's idea that we should have a home that would be safe, no matter what business reverses might come to him. In order to make it sure he also deeded me the house on Eightieth street with the idea that we could sell that house for enough to pay out the mortgage on this one, and so we would always have a home. Then, just as his first wife had done, I made my will, leaving to Mr. Vanderbilt not only these two houses, but everything I own and made him executor without bonds Could anyone do more than that?

But for "Bright Eyes," this influence, I would have been arrested last Sunday at Lynn. To create a scandal these gentlemanly advisers sent that warrant to Lynn in the hope that I might be arrested before my people, and put to shame.

It might not have been so pleasant arresting me there. But "Bright Eyes" warned me not to go to Lynn. I was here in my house all the time waiting, but they did not come for me.

Religion Based on Faith.

What proofs have I of my religion? Has anyone any proof of anyone's religion? No proof. No one has any proof. My belief in Spiritualism is based upon faith, just as the belief in Christianity is based on faith in Christ, and the belief of the Jews is based on faith in the existence of God.

Moses was a Spiritualist. Every prophet in the Old Testament was a medium. They must have been, though they were not high in the order of Spiritualism. There must be things spiritual as well as things temporal. When you die the real "You" is gone. There must be some abiding place for it.

If there are sound waves, why should there not be spirit waves? The time is coming when all of us will be able to communicate more or less with the other side.

All this is what I believe. Nothing can be accurately proved. I cannot prove this control which holds me. Did I tell you about the pictures of the control of "Bright Eyes?"

She came to me first when I was fourteen. I have always supposed it was because we were about the same age. I did not know what it was at first. I thought the whole matter a joke. You see my father was a Roman Catholic and my mother a Methodist, and that made me rather a queer mixture from a religious point of view. I was examined and re-examined, and for six years I did not know what it was. Then I came to believe in Spiritualism.

The power, control, subconsciousness, or what you will, told me she was the spirit of an Indian girl of the Kickapoo tribe, and that a Mr. Eldridge, in New Bedford, had made her picture while she was alive. I did not know of Mr. Eldridge, but we investigated, and sure enough he had the picture of a little Indian girl of the Kickapoo tribe, who had been known as "Bright Eyes." That picture is the one that has been used in the church ever since as my control.

Her "Free Love" Belief.

"I am a believer in free love. But I am not a believer in free lust. That is the difference. Jesus Christ commanded the people of the earth to love one another. They should do so. It is free lust that is sinful. And now, about Miss Darrow. It is right that I should say something about her, since she said so much about me.

Miss Darrow went on the stand because she was jealous of Mr. Vanderbilt. I think the woman is insane. For a year I could not get rid of her. She is a Theosophist and believes that she is the reincarnation of Napoleon Bonaparte. I did not mind that until she came to believe that I was the reincarnation of Josephine, and she had to treat me well, because she had been so unkind to me in the previous existence.

You see, I only want the truth to be known. But the truth about this is like the truth about Spiritualism—about anything nowadays—the truth must have barnacles on it before anybody will believe it.—Mrs. Pepper-Vanderbilt in the New York Journal.

The Journey of Life.

We start on the journey of life
  Tiny, and frail, and weak,
Not fully equipped for the strife
  We know not what to seek.

The days pass swiftly by, the child
  Grows with the fleeting years,
In sunshine or storm raging wild,
  Hopes run their race with fears.

The sea at times is rough,
  Wild and high the wave
Our venturesome bark to engulf,
  No one in sight to save.

But taking the years all together,
  Weighing the joy and pain,
We mourn not the turbulent weather,
  There is more sun than rain.

And when at last we reach the gate,
  Never again to roam,
We hear the sweet voice as we wait:
  Welcome! Come rest at home.

Galaxy of Prominent Spiritualists.

Illustrating the Important Fact that Spirit Return Has Taken a Firm Hold of the World, Never to Retrace Its Steps.

We present here a list of prominent modern Spiritualists nearly all of whom, and especially the scientific men, have arrived at their belief by careful and protracted experimental investigation. Can any reasonable and unprejudiced person, in the face of this testimony, deny that Spiritualism has a scientific basis? If so, we should like to know his reasons.

Professor Oliver J. Lodge, F.R.S., Dr. Sc., Prof. Physics, University College, London, author of Modern Views of Electricity," says: "I went into a state of skepticism as to the reality of Psychical Phenomand produced without apparent contact, but this skepticism has been overborne by facts."

Professor W. F. Barrett, F. R. S. E., Professor of Experimental Physics and Dean of the Faculty of the Royal College of Sciences, Ireland, says: "The impressive fact of the phenomena is in the intelligence behind them and the evidence of an unseen individuality as distinct as our own."

Dr. Robert Chambers, F.R.S., LL.D., author of "Vestiges of "Creation," Cyclopedia of English Literature," etc., says: "Already Spiritualism, conducted as it usually is, has had a prodigious effect throughout America, and partly in the old world also, in redeeming multitudes from hardened atheism and materialism, proving to them by the positive demonstration which their positive cast of mind requires, that there is another world, that there is a non-material form of humanity, and that many miraculous things which hitherto they have scoffed at, are true. I have for years known that these phenomena are real, as distinguished from imposture and when fully accepted, revolutionize the whole frame of human opinions on many important matters."

Professor Herbert Mayo, F.R.S., M.D., Professor of Anatomy and Physiology, King's College, London, says: "Twenty-five years ago I was a hard-headed unbeliever. Spiritual phenomena, however, suddenly and quite unexpectedly, were soon after developed in my own family. This led me to inquire and to try numerous experiments in such a way as to preclude the possibility of trickery and self-deception. That the phenomena occur there is overwhelming evidence, and it is too late now to deny their existence."

Dr. Lockhart Robinson, F.R.S., sometime editor of British Journal of Merital Sciences, says: "The writer can now no more doubt the physical manifestations of so-called Spritualism than we could any other fact, as for example, the fall of an apple to the ground, of which the senses informed him."

Alfred Russel Wallace, F.R.S., sometime editor of foremost living European naturalist, says: "My position, therefore, is that the phenomena of Spiritualism in their entirety do not require further confirmation. They are proved quite as well as any facts are proved in other sciences, and it is not denial or quibbling that can disprove any of them, but only fresh facts and accurate deductions from those facts."

Professor James Challis, F.R.S., Plumerian Professor of Astronomy and Experimental Philosophy, Cambridge University, says: "The testimony has been so abundant and consentaneous that either the facts must be admitted to be such as reported, or the possibility of certifying facts by human testimony must be given up."

Professor A. de Morgan, late President of the Mathematical Society, says: "The Spiritualists beyond a doubt are on the track that has led to all advancement in physical science. Their opponents are the representatives of those who have striven against progress."

Professor William Denton, the Eminent lecturer on Geology, author of "Our Planet, Its Past and Future," "Soul of Things," etc., says. "Spiritualism is a belief in the communication of intelligence from the spirits of the departed, commonly obtained through a person of susceptibility, called a 'medium'."

Professor Elliott Coues, M.A., M.D., Ph.D., Professor of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy, Norwich University, etc., Professor of Biology in the Victorian Agricultural College, Member of the National Academy of Sciences, author of "Field Ornithology," "Air Fauna," "Columbeana," etc., writes: "Will you have the opinion of such a person as I have described, who for about ten years has studied, watched and followed the phenomena of so-called Spiritualism, and who speaks from personal experience with almost every one of them? Then let me tell you that I know that the alleged phenomena of Spiritualism are true, substantially as alleged."

Professor Robert Hare Emeritus Professor of Chemistry in the University of Pennsylvania, Graduate of Yale College and Harvard University, Associate of the Smithsonian Institution, inventor of improvements in the Oxy-hydrogen blow-pipe, and member of various learned societies, author of "Spiritualism Scientifically Demonstrated," says: "Far from abating my confidence in the inferences respecting the agencies of the spirits of deceased mortals, in the manifestation of which I have given an account in my work, I have had even more striking evidences of that agency than those given in the work in question."

Professor Tornebom, Sweden, says: "Only those deny the phenomena of Spiritualism who have never examined them, but profound study alone can explain them."

Professor J. C. F. Zollner, Professor of Physical Astronomy at the University of Leipsic, Member of the Royal Saxon Society of Sciences, Foreign Member of the Royal Astronomical Society of London, of the Imperial Academy of Natural Philosophers at Moscow, Honorary Member of the Physical Association, Frankfort, of the Scientific Society of Psychological Studies at Paris, etc., of the British National Association of Spiritualists at London says: "We have acquired proof of the existence of an invisible world which can enter into relations with humanity."

Professor James H. Hyslop writes: "I shall not remain by the Spiritualistic theory if a better one can be obtained to explain the phenomena. I advance it simply as a hypothesis that will explain the facts. * * * There is no other explanation but Spiritualism."

Dr. Ashburner (one of the Queen's physicians), author of "Animal Magnetism and Spiritualism."

Dr. Paul Gibier, Director of the Pasteur Institute, New York, Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, author of "Spiritualism and Fakirism," "Psychism, Analysis of Things Existing," etc. Dr. Paul Gibier, whose recent loss to Science and Spiritualism is deeply to be regretted, contends in his interesting "Analysis of Things," which has for its sub-title, "An Essay Upon the Science of the Future," that the proof of man's possessing a conscience which survives the change called death has been established by the phenomena of Spiritualism.

Dr. J. M. Gully, M.D., Royal College of Surgeons, London and Royal Physical Society, Edinburg, author of "Neuropathy and Nervousness," says "After two years' investigation of the fact and numerous seances, I have not the slightest doubt and have the strongest conviction that such materialization takes place, and that not the slightest attempt at trick or deception is fairly attributable to any one who assisted at Miss Cook's seances."

Dr. J. M. Peebles, M. D., the celebrated traveler, author and speaker, formerly the United States consul at Trebizond, author of the "Seers of the Ages," "Immortality, Our Homes and Employments in the Spirit World," "Three Journeys Around the World," "Death Defied," Christ Question Settled," etc., etc.

Dr. Hallock, New York, says: "Spiritualism is no new problem that ought to have taken the disciples of science by surprise."

Dr. F. L. Nicholls, M.D., F.A.S., author of "Esoteric Anthropology," etc., says: "I have in my possession direct writings and drawings done under absolute test conditions by departed spirits, with whose handwriting I am as familiar as with my own."

Lord Brougham, Statesman, writes: "Even in the most cloudless skies of skepticism I see a rain-cloud, if it be no bigger than a man's hand; it is modern Spiritualism."

Baron Carl du Prel, Munich, states: "One thing is clear: that psychography must be ascribed to a transcendental origin. We shall find: That the hypothesis of prepared slates is inadmissible. The place on which the writing is found is quite inaccessible to the hands of the medium. This intelligence can read, write and understand the language of human beings, frequently such as is unknown to the medium. These beings are, therefore, although invisible, of human nature or species. It is no use whatever to fight against the proposition."

Camille Flammarion, the famous astronomer, author of "The Unknown," remarks that although Spiritualism is not a religion but a sience, yet the day may come when religion and science will be reunited in one single synthesis."

Mr. (and Mrs.) S. C. Hall, F.S.A., editor Art Journal writes: "The mockers and scoffers at Spiritualism are almost exclusively those who have seen nothing of it, know nothing about it, and will not inquire concerning it."

Hudson Tuttle, author of "Arcana of Nature," "Arcana of Spiritualism," "Religion of Man," "Studies in Psychic Science," etc., remarks: "Spiritualism is the knowledge of everything pertaining to the spiritual nature of man; and, as spirit is the moving force of the universe, in its widest scope it grasps the dominion of Nature. It embraces all that is known and all that ever can be known. It is Cosmopolitan Eclecticism, receiving all that is good and rejecting all the bad."

Harriet Beecher Stowe writes: "One of the deepest and most imperative cravings of the human heart as it follows its beloved beyond the veil, is for some assurance that they still love and care for us. * * They have overcome, have risen, are crowned, glorified; but still they remain to us, our assistants, our comforters, and in every hour of darkness their voice speaks to us."

Henry W. Longfellow, poet, says: "The spiritual world lies all about us, and its avenues are open to the unseen feet of phantoms that come and go, and we perceive them not save by their influence, or when at times a most mysterious providence permits them to manifest themselves to mortal eyes."

Dr. Adam Clarke says: "I believe that there is a supernatural and spiritual world in which human spirits, both good and bad, live in a state of consciousness. I believe that any of these spirits may, according to the order of God, in the laws of their place of residence, have intercourse with this world and become visible to mortals."

Robert S. Wyld, LL.D., says: "With regard to spirit writing, there is no order of spiritual phenomena which impresses me more powerfully. * * * The evidence that the writing was produced by a spiritual intelligence, without the intervention of human hands, was overwhelming."

Sir Edwin Arnold writes: "All I can say is this: that I regard many of the manifestations as genuine and undeniable, or inexplicable by any known law, or collusion, arrangement or deception of the senses; and that I conceive it the duty and interest of men of science and sense to examine and prosecute the inquiry, as one which has thoroughly passed from the region of ridicule."

Eugene Nus, poet, philosopher, dramatic author and journalist, declared in his "Things of the Other World," "that he had found Spiritualism everywhere and that is is sowing the seeds of a systematic morality which is greatly preferable to the dreary negations which Materialism offers us."

Victor Hugo writes: "To abandon these spiritual phenomena to incredulity is to commit a treason against human reason."

Lord Tennyson, England's poet of the century.

Nicholas, Duke of Leuchtenberg; Abraham Lincoln; Lord Bulwer Lytton; John Ruskin; Sir W. Trevelyan.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning writes: "For theories we get over no difficulty, it seems to me, by escaping from the obvious inference of an external spiritual agency. When the phenomena was attributed, for instance to a second personality, projected unconsciously and attended by an unconscious exercise of volition and clairvoyance; I see nothing clearly but a convulsive struggle on the part of the theorist to get out of a position he does not like, at whatever expense of kicks at the analogies of God's universe."

L. Figuer, editor L'Anne Scientific et Industrielle, who had done so much to popularize science, and in whose book entitled "The Day After Death," there is such a fund of spiritual knowledge, wrote as follows: "I hold it for a certainty that there exists intermediate beings between God and man. I am absolutely ignorant as to how they can communicate with the earth, but the fact of such communication appears to be positive."

Alexander Dumas, pere, believed in spirits, apparitions and unseen influences. He always believed that his father's spirit came just after it had quitted the body to say farewell to him. He felt warm breath on his face and heard a voice say: "Alexander, I have come to bid you adieu. Be a good boy and love your mother." (Memoir by Mrs. Emil Crawford).

W. M. Thackeray says: "It is all very well for you who have probably never seen any Spiritual Manifestations to talk as you do; but if you had seen what I have witnessed, you would hold a different opinion."

I. H. Fichte, the German philosopher and author, writes: "I feel it my duty to bear testimony to the great fact of Spiritualism. No one should keep silent."

William Lloyd Garrison says: "For the last three years we have kept pace with nearly all that has been published on the subject, and we have witnessed at various times many surprising 'manifestations;' and our conviction is that they cannot be accounted for on any other theory than that of spiritual agency."

Hon. Luther R. Marsh states: "It is not enough to know the fact of immortality. It asserts its value only when it so enters into and controls the life as to make the spirit worthy of this immortal and inestimable boon."

Archbishop Whately: "The Archbishop had long been a believer in mesmerism and latterly in clairvoyance and Spiritualism." (Memoirs of Whately. Fitzpatrick).

Rev. Minot J. Savage, D.D., author of "Psychics, Facts and Theories," "Life Beyond Death," etc.

Canon Wilberforce says: "It is a strengthening, calming consideration that we are in the midst of an invisible world of spiritual beings than whom we have been made a little lower. Blessed be God for the knowledge of a world like this. It is evidently that region or condition of space in which the departed find themselves immediately after death; probably it is nearer than we imagine, for St. Paul speaks of our being surrounded by a cloud of witnesses. There it seems to me they are waiting for us."

Rev. W. E. Channing says: "We have good reason to believe that if we obtain admission into heaven, we shall still have opportunity, not only to return to earth, but to view the operation of God in distant spheres, and be his ministers in other worlds."

Theodore Parker says: "It (Spiritualism) has more evidence for its wonders than any historic form of religion hitherto, it admits all the truths of religion and morality in all the world's sects. * * * * Shall we know our friends again? For my own part, I can not doubt it; least of all, when I drop a tear over the recent dust. Death does not separate them from us here. Can life in heaven do it?"

Rev. Adin Ballou states: "Departed spirits have a higher mesmeric, magnetic or psychologic power than have mortals of a corresponding grade. Facts have proven this in many remarkable cases. It will yet be demonstrated to the conviction of all candid investigators."

Rev. E. R. Sanborn says: "There are sad hearts for whom death has made this world a tomb, which have been cheered and lifted into light and glory by the scintillations of love from an unknown world, which unseen lies all around us all. The gloom has been transformed into shimmering splendor, by processes more marvelous than any physicist has found. And souls to whom this world has been a hell, have been suddenly awakened to find it a heaven, surpassing any tale of seer or fairy."

T. B. Barkas, F.G.S., writes: "I have investigated and experimented under every kind of reasonable test my ingenuity could devise. * * * Notwithstanding all tests and all precautions, phenomena have taken place which are utterly inexplicable by reference to any known physical or psychological law. All this I have done with the cold eye and steady pulse of a chemist."

Philip Pearsall Carpenter, Naturalist, says: "I have left off believing in deaths (so-called)."

F. W. H. Myers, Member of Society for Psychical Research, author of "Phantasms of the Living," states: "Not, then, with tears and lamentations should we think of the blessed dead. Rather we should rejoice with them in their franchisement and know that they are still minded to keep us as sharers in their joy. It is they, not we, who are working now, they are more ready to hear than we to pray; they guide us as with a cloudy pillar, but it is kindling to steadfast fire."

Washington Irving writes: "What could be more consoling than the idea that the souls of those we once loved were permitted to return and watch over our welfare? I see nothing in it (Spiritualism) that is incompatible with the tender and merciful nature of our religion, or revolting to the wishes and affections of the heart."

Charlotte Bronte says: "Besides this earth and besides this race of men, there is an invisible world and a kingdom of spirits: that world is around us, for it is everywhere; and these spirits watch us, for they are commissioned to guard us."

Horace Greeley, editor of the New York Tribune, says: "I have sat with three others around a small table, with every one of our eight hands lying plainly, palpably on the table, and heard writing with a pencil on paper, which perfectly white we had just placed on the table; and we have the next minute picked up the paper with a sensible, straightforward message of twenty to fifty words fairly written thereon. * * Yet I am quite confident that none of the persons present, who were visible to mortal eyes wrote it."

Bellachini, Court Conjurer, states: "I have thoroughly examined with minutest observation and investigation of the surroundings including the table, and have not in the smallest instance found anything to be produced by means of prestidigitative manifestations or by mechanical apparatus."

Thos. Wentworth Higginson says: "If I have not satisfactory evidence of the genuineness of these phenamena which I have just described, then there is no such thing as evidence, and all the fabric of natural science may be a mass of imposture."

M. Auguste Vaquerie, Dramatist, Journalist, and Man of Letters, remarks: "I am happy to be able to say, as regards the existence of what are called spirits, that I have no doubt of it. * * * Why should they not communicate to a man by any means whatsoever; and why should not that means be a table?"

Padre Secchi, an Italian priest of conspicuous ability in the Church of Rome, says: "Spiritualism will be the great event of the present century."

Charles Fauvety, also a distinguished French Philosopher and author of "The New Revelation," declared modern Spiritualism to be the force which will regenerate society.

Colonel Count de Rochas d'Aiglun, who is at the head of the great Polytechnic School in Paris, and author of some highly important works on Psychic Science, accepts Spiritualism as "a great scientific truth, and the action of invisible beings upon incarnate intelligences as a demonstrable fact."

General Pix, a French writer who adopts the nom de plume of "Henri Constant," in a work on "The Religion of the Future," observes: "Spiritualism, a doctrine more powerful than all the combined forces which live in the darkness, has ended by triumphing over all its enemies, and to-day it emerges from its protracted lethargy, more vital, more powerful and more robust than ever it was."

Rene Saillie, son of the celebrated explorer who discovered Timbuctoo, published a work entitled "Christian Spiritualism," has written in eloquent terms of the lofty morality which it inculcates, and terms it "the revelation of revelations."

Edouard Grimard, Professor in the University of Paris, ex-Director of Normal Schools, a valued contributor to the Revue de Deux Mondes, and author of that excellent work, "La Plante Botanique Simplifiee," writes in his beautiful "An Escape Into the Infinite," that Spiritualism "occupies itself with the most serious things of science, philosophy, morality and religion; in a word, with the wonders of the invisible world; that is to say, with the loftiest preoccupations which can haunt the human brain."

Madame Rufina Noeggerath, authoress of that striking work, "The Survival," while declaring the reality of the facts of Spiritualism, reminds us that they have the voice of all antiquity in their favor, and are attested in our times by men of the highest authority in science, whose good faith, integrity, and intelligence are above suspicion.—La Courriere, Dr. Nellie Beighle, Oakland, Cal.

LAKE HELEN, FLA.

Notes of the Southern Cassadaga Camp.

Every week brings more people to this mild and salubrious winter home. Northern people are more than ever fleeing from the ice and snow of colder climes.

Mrs. Kate Lowber, who has remained at camp all summer, writes:

Of late Mrs. J. D. Palmer and Mrs. Kellogg have arrived, as well as the Underhill family.

Mrs. Huff has returned and is renovating Hotel Cassadaga from top to bottom. The upper story rooms have been ceiled and all rooms on the third floor will be as good as those on the lower stories.

The rose garden is blooming and fresh bouquets are given daily from the clipping of buds.

Mrs. Carrie Pratt is expected about October 15, and will occupy, for the coming season, her charming cottage overlooking Lake Huff.

Mr. J. D. White and wife are expected about the 20th of October.

Philip Reich, of New Jersey, has arrived, seeking the climate for his health. May the campers extend to him sympathy and cordial sociality.

Mrs. Elsie Stumpf sailed from New York for Florida, October 22; also N. J. Price and wife for Lake Helen on same date, all by Clyde steamers.

Herbert Spencer has bought out Charles Myers' team and is in readiness for teaming in the future. He will meet the trains at the station.

Dr. Brown has rented the Witters cottage, and Mrs. Witters has engaged a room in Apartment building.

Mrs. Bartholomew, the trumpet medium, is well and busy with seances at her artistic home.

Mrs. Frank Johnson, is recovering from her long sickness.

Mr. A. M. Spencer is convalescent.

Mrs. C. D. Barnum has arrived and feels quite at home again.

Scotch Mary has returned from De Land and Hawk Park, and has regained her health.

Mrs. Hardenburg has returned with Mrs. Palmer and will remain with her during the season.

The early campers are indulging in grape fruit, and the oranges are putting on their golden dresses.

The Slater family will soon occupy their new home on Lake Park, one of the most expensive and elegant cottages on the grounds.

Herbert Hollily has taken excellent care of the grounds, adding much to the beauty of the camp. He has carried the mail all summer.

The weather is delightful. Our usual equinoctial storm passed us, so we are not having quite the amount of rain needed, but we have refreshing cool winds, and after all there is no place like Cassadaga Camp in sunny Florida.

My excursions for November sail on the Apache from New York City, November 8, and on the Arapahoe on November 22. Write me for details, rates, etc., enclosing 4 cents in stamps for postage on Clyde folders, etc.

RELIGION.

How One Devoted Spiritualist Worker Views It.

For some time past your correspondent has been watching the expressions in your columns by those who are looking upon Spiritualism as a science, or a religion, as it seems to suit their fancy.

I have also looked for some of the definitions of religion by Webster, and after all I feel inclined to accept the definition of religion as found in the New Testament.

There is, in my understanding of religion, an action; not simply believing something or thinking something.

I can study the Methodist creed, Baptist creed, Presbyterian creed, or any other creed, but they are not religion. I can believe any one of those creeds, but that does not make that creed, or the belief of it, a religion.

I can live any one of those creeds, but that does not make me religious.

If I live the Methodist creed, it makes me a Methodist. If I live the Baptist creed, it makes me a Baptist. If I live the Presbyterian creed, it makes me a Presbyterian.

But not one of them need make me religious. The New Testament tells us what religion, pure and undefiled religion, is.

It is to "visit the widow and the orphan in distress, and keep yourself spotless before the world."

That means you must DO something. Not BELIEVE something.

All the creeds in the whole world would not make a religion like that mentioned in the New Testament, or make YOU religious unless you DID SOMETHING to prove your religion.

I believe it was Thomas Paine who defined his religion, "TO DO GOOD." He didn't say it was to think good, to believe good, or have any set creed or doctrine, but he made it plain, "To Do Good."

This is almost identical with the New Testament, and means we must do something good.

I wonder if the Spiritualists, or any great portion of them, would object to "visiting the widow and orphan in in distress," as their religion as defined in the New Testament?

I wonder if they, or any portion of them, would object to "doing good" as their religion, as defined by Thomas Paine?

I object to creed, I care not by what denomination it may be offered to me, but it is time we redeemed the word "religion" and show the world that we CAN and WILL "do good," and let creeds go to those who want them.

Perhaps many will still declare that Spiritualism is not a religion, and when they show me that Spiritualism does not mean to "DO GOOD," I will go to and swell their ranks and cry with them that Spiritualism is not religion. REV. G. C. LOVE.

MOURNERS FLED.

Supposed Dead Woman Climbed Out Out of Coffin.

WHEELING, W. Va.—Relatives of Mrs. Fred Hartsell, wife of a farmer of Huntington, were bemoaning her death over the coffin a few minutes before the minister arrived to conduct the last sad rites, when she suddenly sat up and, with a dazed look, climbed out of the coffin. There was a rush of mourners for the open anr, windows being used as exits. They were terror-stricken, and the minister swooned when a pale-faced woman, over whose remains he was called to conduct services, met him at the door. The family were too poor to have a physician, and the woman fell into a swoon, in which she remained three or four days. Her husband thought her dead and sent for the undertaker.

Eyeglasses . . . Not Necessary

Eyesight Can Be Strengthened, and Most Forms of Diseased Eyes Successfully Treated Without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in many cases has been proven beyond a doubt by the testimony of hundreds of people who publicly claim that their eyesight has been restored by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." "Actina" also relieves sore and granulated lids, iritis, etc., and removes cataracts without cutting or drugging. Over 75,000 "Actinas" have been sold, therefore "Actina" is not an experiment, but a reliable method of treatment.

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. It is impossible to do harm with one. Every member of the family can use the one instrument for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, Throat or Head. One will last for years, and is always ready for use. It will be sent on trial, postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 342N, 811 Walnut street, Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely FREE, a valuable book—Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

WEST SIDE SPIRITUALISTS WHO ARE WILLING TO TAKE PART IN ORGANIZING A SOCIETY IN THE DISTRICT OF HUMBOLDT PARK, WILL PLEASE SEND THEIR NAMES AND ADDRESSES TO E. J. CARE OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, 40 Loomis Street.

The Third Annual Harvest Festival and Dance will be given under the auspices of the Golden Rule Pleasure Club, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western ave., Saturday evening, November 2, 1907. Tickets 25 cents, including score card. Music by W. W. Kirkland; Supper extra.

John Q. Adams of 323 Pennsylvania avenue, Wichita, Kan., wishes to correspond with trumpet, slate or materializing mediums who are firm, and would appreciate the effort of a co-worker, TRUTH.

The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society has opened its meetings at 9 Appleton street, Boston; good attendance at each meeting and many of the prominent mediums are present. They are preparing for their Golden Jubilee, which will occur the las Friday in October. This society has stood the gale for all these years, and is in a most prosperous condition at the present time. Meetings are held every Friday night; supper at 6:15. The object of this society is to assist worthy Spiritualists, and its record shows many good deeds all the way along. We hope that the Spiritualists of Boston will continue to aid us, so we can carry on the good work. So writes Carrie L. Hatch, Vice-President.

Miss Ada M. Came writes from Cambridge, Mass: "The Cambridge Spiritual Industrial Society held its first regular meeting for the season in Cambridge Lower Hall, 631 Mass. avenue. A fine supper, open to the public, was served, and later in the evening, ice cream and cake. Mrs. N. J. Willis gave a very fine address, assisted by her daughter, Miss Marietta Willis, the talented poetess and reader. Mrs. Merritt and Mrs. Annie Ackers did some excellent work in their special line, and Mrs. Haidie Hall from Brighton, whose voice was at its best, ably assisted with several vocal solos. A general feeling of enthusiasm seemed to pervade the whole company, which argues well for the coming season. The next meeting will be Friday, October 25; when Mrs. Annie L. Chapman will be the speaker and message bearer. Business meeting at 5 p. m.; public suppers at 6:30 p. m.; evening meetings at 7:45 p. m."

Rosetta Gott writes from Wellington, Ohio: "Mr. and Mrs. Morrell of Grand Rapids, Mich., who are now holding meetings at Elyria, Ohio, gave a parlor meeting at the home of Rosetta Gott, on the afternoon of October 11. A large circle of friends were present, and all enjoyed the fine lecture and messages given through the mediumship of Mrs. Morrell, by her controls. Each one present received a convincing message."

The lecturer, W. V. Nicum, writes from his home, 631 River street, Dayton, O.: "I have the month of October, beginning Sunday, the 8th, open for engagements. Any society so desiring can address me at 631 River street, Dayton, O. The dedication of The First Spiritual Temple, last Sunday at Ashland, was a rousing success."

William Richmond writes: "The Band of Harmony held its usual meeting, afternoon and evening, in Hall 309 Masonic Temple, Thursday, October 10. Let it be known that the days of its sessions are changed to the second and fourth Thursdays of each month, instead of the first and third Thursdays, as formerly. There was a large attendance of members in the afternoon, when it was decided to hold a bazaar for the benefit of the church the Second Thursday in December. Let all interested in the welfare of the Church of the Soul take notice, and do their best to make this Bazaar a success. The evening session was particularly enjoyable, after the answering of a number of very interesting questions; and the giving of many spirit-name poems through the mediumship of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. There were interesting remarks from Mrs. A. H. Bliss, Mrs. J. J. Ashton and Mrs. Mary B. Hill. All present emphasized their appreciation of the harmony."

E. R. Kidd writes: "Charles J. Barnes, the old and reliable trumpet medium of Warsaw, Ind, was in Canton last week, and while here held several very satisfactory and convincing seances; satisfactory because proper conditions were made for the manifestation of spirit friends, and convincing because they proved to a few skeptics who were present, that they could return and make their presence known if proper conditions were made for them to do so. Brother Barnes exected to go from Canton to Erie, Pa., but was called home on account of sickness of his wife. We hope to have Brother Barnes with us again within the near future."

M. L. Atwater, corresponding secretary writes: "The Progressive Spiritualist Society held its first public meeting in the Walsh Block Hall, Sunday Evening, October 13, at 7.30 Mrs. N. D. Challen of Toledo, Ohio, lectured. Tests followed."

BEAR IN MIND that the editor of The Progressive Thinker is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not, agree with their respective views.

The Progressive Thinker goes to press one day earlier this week, in order that the paper may reach Washington at the commencement of the N. S. A. Convention. This accounts for the delay in several items.

W. H. Hunt, a prominent attorney of Denver, Col., and a lecturer on Spiritualistic and Free Thought subjects, will start on October 31, for Oakland, Cal. Until then he can be addressed at No. 241 Cororonado bldg., Denver, Col.

James Perry writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "The Society of Spiritual Progression is nicely settled in its new location in the heart of the city, 337½ S. Hill street. Sunday, October 6 was the opening day. Meetings were conducted all day. Those of the morning were well attended. From 2:45 p. m., until 10'15 p. m., the hall was full, at the evening session two very fine talks were given by attorney J. C. Craig of this city, and Wm. S. Bethel of Hollywood. Our pastor, Mary C. Vlasek, followed with messages in her inimitable, pleasing and convincing manner. We are very grateful for a number of donations to our Temple fund, some coming from as far as Ohio. Those helping in this manner are made honorary members, and will thus find themselves among friends when coming to the City of the Angels. Our bureau of information is proving very helpful. A number who advised us of their coming were informed as to getting rooms, range of price, etc. Address all correspondence to Mary C. Vlasek, 121 East 30th st. Our motto is to grow by helping others."

Correspondent writes: "Mrs. G. A. Cowen, the well known test medium, is now in Hudson, Iowa, from October 15 to October 22, giving lectures and messages. She has fully recovered from her burns in the terrible Lotus Club fire, cured by spirit power, a wonderful living test of invisible help. She is a very busy medium and is deserving of much praise for her honest and conscientious work. Chicago address, 1717 N. Clark street."

Correspondent writes: "The Church of Progressive Spiritualists gave their time mostly to Dr. and Mrs. Beverly, last Sunday. There was a good attendance and all seemed interested in the lecture and other demonstrations. The second Sunday in November Dr. George B. Warne will occupy the pulpit there. There is always great enthusiasm among these people. They seem to realize in the teachings of Spiritualism the voice of the Master, and the eternal fitness is theirs to enjoy His spiritual return."

S. A. Huntington writes from Malden, Mass.: "Our services on Sunday evening, October 13th, proved the most interesting of any since the season opened. Mr. Robbins, of Lynn, Mass., soloist at Unity Camp the past season, was with us and took charge of the praise service, also rendered several solos in a very pleasing manner. He has promised to be with us for some time to come. Mrs. Annie R. Chapman, of Brighton, was the speaker and message bearer. She was more interesting than ever in her lecture. After that she devoted three-fourths of an hour to giving many beautiful messages. Mrs. Alice M. Whall, of Everett, Mass., will be the speaker on the 20th, and Mrs. Ruth A. Swift, of Haverhill, Mass., on the 27th."

G. H. Brooks speaks for the Meadville (Pa.) Society the last two Sundays of October; November and December he speaks for the First Church of Spiritualists of Pittsburg, Pa.; January, February and March for the society of which Mr. Ayers is president, in Columbus, Ohio. He has also been in attendance at the Washington convention as delegate of the Wisconsin State Association, and took an active part in the same.

Hattie F. R. Peet, secretary, writes: "The Ladies of the Illinois Sunflower Club" are busy with preparations for their approaching Bazaar, which is to be held at Jefferson Hall, No. 70 East Adams street, on Saturday afternoon and evening, November 30. The following committee is appointed to serve at the Bazaar, and contributions to the different booths are solicited from our friends and patrons. Mrs. Isa Cross, general manager; Mrs. A. W. Bloom, on supper; Mrs. E. J. Bloom and Mrs. Myer, on aprons; Mrs. Nash, on handkerchiefs; Mrs. Kirchner, on dolls; Mrs. Goodrich, toilet articles and cosmetics; Mrs. Lichtig, psychic readings and mediums; Mrs. Sidell, on candy; other booths will be added. A fine supper will be served at 6 o'clock. Come and bring your friends. Our next tea party will be held at Lincoln Hall, 70 Adams street, Tuesday, October 22d, from 2 till 5 p. m. Mrs. L. Dietz will preside at the urn. Some of our best mediums will be present. Each 10-cent cup of tea served gives you a reading. Join us with your friends on these most enjoyable occasions. Friends will please send their contributions to the approaching Bazaar to No. 40 Loomis street, care of Mrs. J. R. Francis, president."

Lily M. Thiebaud writes from Riverside, Cal.: "Our anniversary meeting at San Bernardino, Cal., last Sunday, was an entire success. I have come to Riverside to open the meetings for the society here, which I organized earlier in the year. The Riverside Psychic Society is indeed a progressive body of people. The hall was well filled to-day with the brightest of people. I have promised to come again next Sunday, a young medium from Los Angeles occupying the rostrum of San Bernardino Society for me. I wish we might ship you some glorious weather such as we enjoy. We find California more delightful every day. Let me congratulate you on the good paper you are giving us. Long may you live to continue the good work."

A. B. Peden writes from New York: "Have been reading The Progressive Thinker now for nearly a year and every issue seems to increase in interest and value. The October 19 issue is exceptionally good. What a splendid thing it would be if we could clean house thoroughly and get rid of that debasing and ruinous element, the "fake". You are certainly on the "main line", and I do hope you will with the assistance of the true and honorable Spiritualists be able to bring our twentieth century unlimited Spiritualism to the Depot of popularity and respect with marvelous speed. With sincere wishes for increasing help and encouragement from the exalted ones there and here, I remain."

Mrs. Hattie F. R. Peet, corresponding secretary of the Sunflower Club, writes: "General Survey" of your paper, you have published a notice that our "Sunflower Club" Bazaar is to be held on Sunday, November 30th; now this is an error, whoever inserted the notice. The Bazaar is to be held on Saturday, November 30th."

Mrs. Dobson-Barker writes from San Jose, Cal.: "A pleasant social was given by the Social Society of Spiritualists Wednesday evening at Hale's Hall. Recitations and music were given by both old and young. Mrs. Evielena P. Bach and Mrs. May Covell, of Lily Dale, N. Y., who were guests of Mesdames Dr. Barker and Ringlep, were present and added to the meeting, Mrs. Covell giving a reading and words of welcome and encouragement by Mrs. Bach. The evening program continued with games, dancing and refreshments, and all expressed themselves as well pleased with the evening and will come again."

Rev. Geo. H. Brooks, president of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, writes from Washington, D. C.: "Mr. J. R. Francis, Chicago, Ill.: Dear Friend,—Enclosed I send you a short article of my whereabouts, which I wish you would publish. I am enjoying my trip very much. I should have come out to see you when I passed through Chicago, but I did not have the time. All is moving on fine at the convention; wish you could be here. Truly your friend, G. H. Brooks."

Jennie DeLong writes from Columbus, Ohio: "The First Spiritualist Society oened October 6, with a very enjoyable re-union in the Church society room; in the afternoon to welcome back their beloved speaker, Miss Elizabeth Harlow, who had just returned from her summer's travels. Everyone seemed glad that the time had come to begin the winter's work. At 5:30 o'clock the ladies served a most bountiful lunch, and all sat around the large table as one family. At 7:30 the regular Sunday evening service was held. Miss Harlow delivered one of the most eloquent lectures, taking for her subject, "The Gospel of Life." This society is progressing, and stepping right over all obstacles they find in their path. This is, most truly speaking, a society run by ladies. Of course there are gentlemen who belong and work with it, but as one of them said: "We could never have gotten along if it had not been for the ladies. They all take hold and work with all their might, and it is wonderful what they have accomplished. The Ladies' Auxiliary give a supper and dance on Halloween night. Also a Bazaar November 21 and 22."

D. G. Hill writes: "The Golden Rule Spiritual Society had the usual fine attendance Sunday, October 13, with our Brother, Jas. E. Coe, for one of his fine talks, and Mrs. Nora E. Hill and Dr. Burgess for message work for the afternoon service. For the evening Dr. J. H. Randall held the close attention of his hearers, his subject, "The present needs of Spiritualism." The rousing encore showed the appreciation. Mrs. Hill gave Messages for the little time given for that purpose. The speaker for Sunday evening, October 27, will be the Pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill. One of the attractions for that evening will be the demonstration of Mrs. Harriett Babcock of Harvey, Ill., in inspirational music. Remember the Hall, 378 So. Western avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Bloom did good work in their respective phases of lecturer and message bearer at the services held by the Progressive Spiritual Society,, 183 E. North avenue, corner Burling street. Sunday last. The attendance was fair and the work of Mrs. Hilbert, the manager, was very good indeed. Her messages were all presented nicely and received with a smile of satisfaction. The northsiders ought to pack that little hall every Sunday evening all winter, and there is reason to believe they will. Your reporter made a few remarks, also, and read a poem as an invocation.

Mrs. M. L. S. Chase of West Pullman, writes: "The meetings at Bock's Hall are well attended; interest on the increase. Madam Harper of 3545 Cottage Grove avenue, assisted Mrs. J. L. Longstaff in giving test messages Sunday evening, October 13. Two solos were sung, one in German, which added much to the music, which is very excellent. When the good sister of the society served cake and coffee to the mediums and members and a little social time is enjoyed. There will be other able platform workers at the next meeting, October 27, at Bock's Hall, 1160 Michigan ave. Remember the time and place.

P. O. Chilstrom writes from Crescent, Nevada: "By this time I have quite a bunch of mining men who regularly come to me to see my numbers of The Progressive Thinker. The fact that your able journal, representative of the best liberal Spiritual thought, each issue, is attracting much attention out in this Sandy Desert country. When I say better (for I always deemed it good), I refer to the great diversity of opinions now admitted to your columns on every conceivable subject, and reaching into the occult, all of which concerns humanity far deeper than generally realized, which now is attracting all thinking, truth-seeking minds."

C. S. H. Writes from 9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass.: "The First Spiritual Ladies' Aid Society held its meeting as usual, with the president, Mrs. M. E. A. Allbe in the chair. A very interesting meeting was held in the evening. It was voted to postpone the 50th Anniversary of the society until Friday, November 15. A grand time is planned. Full particulars will be printed later. The Ladies' Aid meets every Friday. Supper at 6:15; price 15 cents."

Mrs. E. H. Thompson writes: "The Fraternal Daughters held their weekly meeting at 406 Ogden avenue, October 16, 2 p. m., and the following mediums took part: Mrs. Dr. Caird, and Mrs. M. Halvett. Our next meeting will be Wednesday, Oct. 23, 2 p. m. We will discontinue our suppers, and have reading in the afternoons, and tests by prominent medium's in the evenings. We extend a cordial invitation to all."

Prof. R. A. Macurda, who is engaged with the Philadelphia Spiritualist Association for the month of October, is desirous of making engagements for the balance of the season with societies in the Middle West. Professor Macurda is an able lecturer, and test medium, and has a clean record, having served all the large societies in the eastern states. Correspondence solicited. Address him at 2013 Brown street, Philadelphia, Pa.

TAKE NOTICE! Correspondents are requested when writing for this paper to use either a typewriter or a pen, with black ink. Write on only one side of the paper, and in a plain, legible hand, and thus avoid the necessity of preparing your copy for the printer. Please bear this in mind.

STATE MASS MEETING.

The Michigan State Spiritualist Association will hold a State Mass Meeting in Grand Rapids, October 26 and 27. Saturday evening session and three sessions Sunday. Good speakers are expected: E. W. Sprague and wife, Mrs. Marion Carpenter, Mrs. Amanda Coffman, Mrs. Belle Fuller, Mrs. Jennie Martin, Dr. A. B. Spinney and others.

Meetings held in Odd Fellow's Hall 12 Lyon street, under the auspices of the Psychical Research Society. Visitors cared for.

Report of the New York State Association of Spiritualists.

It is in the eleventh year of its existence; numbers 20 auxiliary societies; 172 individual members, and 20 life members. Since the annual Convention in 1906 there has been a gain of 8 life members; 100 individual members; 7 charters have been issued to new societies; 5 ordination certificates; 3 mediums' certificates. 5 Mass Meetings have been held in different parts of the State with good results.

Our State Missionary, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, brings a good report as to an increasing interest in the philosophy of Spiritualism throughout the State, and the New York State Association of Spiritualists is standing firm for truth, equity and justice.

REST.

As Impressively Illustrated by an Unknown Poet.

There is rest. 'Tis but an empty sound—
A dream all shadowless the world around.
Unrest is normal. Every orb or ray,
Greater or less, that beams by night or day,
Sun, moon or star that burns through endless space,
Each in its course runs one eternal race.

God never rests—eternal vigil keeps;
The Eye, All-Seeing, slumbers not, nor sleeps;
All things obedient to one Lofty Soul
Move ever restless as the ages roll.
Unrest is life—hope—action—glory—play:
Rest is but death—cessation is decay.

Unrest is real. The glorious power that spanned
The mighty fabric of the skies and planned
The architectural glories, far and near,
That deck each world and ornament each sphere,
Is constant in its work supreme, sublime,
In restless glory through resistless time.

There is no rest in all the realm of life.
The heated words which drop from human tongues,
The breath that parts the lips and fills the lungs,
Each heart-throb, each pulsation, every thrill
Of joy or sorrow, leaves him restless still.

There is no rest, nor can rest prevail;
The world is in motion—mountain, vale;
The wondrous ocean's restless currents roll
Around the sea-washed world from pole to pole;
The cloud, the storm, the darkness and the light,
Proclaim the restless force and restless might.

There may be peace; the world in stillness may
In awful silence pass the years away;
Long centuries hide in Time's eternal breast—
Peace, silence, stillness, all—but never rest.
Rest is the mildew, the corroding rust,
Hope's faded ashes and Love's crumbling dust.

ASPIRATION.

Come to us, oh! friends immortal,
From your homes so fair and bright;
Open to our view the portal
All enshrined in golden light.

And with teachings pure and holy,
Standing by the open door,
Show us that though sad and lowly,
Soon our sorrows will be o'er.

That beyond the veil material,
That conceals you from our view—
In those holy realms ethereal
We shall yet our lives renew.

Emerging from all pain and sadness,
The inheritance of earth—
Entering into joy and gladness,
Bequeathed to us by second birth.

Progressing ever up and onward,
Guided by our Father's hand—
With aspirations ever heavenward,
We gain at last the Golden Land.

Fraternal Order of Spiritualists.

After a vacation of four months the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists opened the fall and winter season on Sunday, October 6. Our hall is tastefully decorated, and for this occasion the rostrum was becomingly attired in a dress of white and yellow bunting, flowers, palms, etc. A big friendly audience greeted us and everyone was smiling and happy, glad of the opportunity to again meet and visit with friends in this and the spirit world.

In the afternoon we were favored with a visit by George Booth, the genial secretary-treasurer of the Psychic Research Society of Rockford, who voiced greetings from his society. He expressed himself as well pleased with our methods and purposes, and spoke of the advantages obtained in the interchange of mediums.

Those who read sealed letters were: Mrs. Caird, Mrs. Hilbert, Mrs. Adams and Brother Thompson. All were anxious for the circles, and for an hour the several mediums were kept busy giving evidence of the return of the spirit. The supper tables were patronized as usual by those who had been fed spiritually but now wanted something more material. The song service next occupied our attention and Mr. Hadley, who is organizing our chorus, is doing some good work along that line.

A larger attendance than usual greeted Mrs. Henrietta Lichtig at the opening of the concert at 7. Her reading was much enjoyed. Miss Bess C. Johnson, our soloist, sang with splendid enthusiasm, the encore of which was rewarded with a select reading displaying much feeling and character. Mrs. Caird, as vice-president of the Fraternal Daughters, in a few appropriate words presented the F. O. O. S. with $100, the result of the summer's work holding tea parties, etc. Much credit is due those who worked so faithfully, and to the friends who patronized their entertainments so liberally. The money was given to treasurer Thompson, while the audience showed their sympathy and appreciation by vigorous applause.

At 8 o'clock the ten-weeks-old son of George and Nettie de Chabat was christened or named Lyle Ford, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond performing the ceremony. Mrs. Richmond, who was our delegate to the Peace Conference at The Hague, explained the workings of that body, and told of the privileges accorded her as the only woman permitted to attend such a congress. She is a person of keen perception, and her report was much appreciated, at the conclusion of which she was tendered a rising vote of thanks, the entire audience participating.

On Sunday, October 13, another large congregation proved to us that our efforts are being appreciated. Many strangers, accompanied by friends and members, saw our work for the first time, and quite a number have promised to enroll as members. The initiation of candidates took place at 2:30, the different parts of the ceremony proving intensely interesting to those contemplating joining later on. The reading of sealed letters followed, and Mrs. Bloom, Mrs. Lichtig and Mr. Traver were fortunate in having such splendid conditions. Their work was well done. The circles were presided over by Mrs. Hild, Mrs. Y. Zoellmer, Mrs. Bloom, Mr. Schmidt, Mr. Thompson and Mr. Traver. The supper table was an enjoyable scene, and the supper a pronounced success.

Mrs. Frieda Sieber, our pianist, is a valuable acquisition to our song service, which is being entered into more heartily under the leadership of Mr. Hadley. The playing of Mrs. Edith Hill during the concert is appreciated, and the return of Prof. Joseph Singer is hailed with joy. The vocal solos rendered by Miss Gertrude McKinley and Miss Bess C. Johnson displayed rare talent, and the vigorous applause was well merited. We were again favored with an address by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, who was our speaker for the evening. The large hall was almost filled by a sympathetic audience which listened intently to the splendid sermon constructed of questions submitted by the congregation, which made an indelible impression on the minds of those present.

We are abundantly blessed by being in touch with the leading public orators of recognized ability, and offer a program for the coming season which has never been equaled in Chicago. We will take pleasure in presenting to you in November Mrs. R. S. Lillie, of California; for December, Rev. Thomas Grimshaw; for January, 1908, Rev. Will J. Erwood, of Indiana. These orators and instruments are known the country over and need no introduction at this time.

In presenting the philosophy of Spiritualism we have established and intend to maintain the highest standard of efficiency in securing the services of those enjoying the highest merit through experience, whose evidence of ability has been demonstrated many times. We are also in correspondence with C. Fannie Allyn, of Massachusetts, in regard to establishing our lyceum. She is a recognized authority on lyceum work, and her methods meet with success. Our library is also under consideration, so save your books.

Remember, we meet in the same place—Hygeia hall, 406 Ogden Avenue, corner of Robey street, top floor. Come up to the big meeting where big things are being done, and enjoy a visit with friends on this and the other side of life. All are welcome. FERD C. SUHRER.

"A DIALOGUE ON RELIGION."

Between Father John Jutz, a Jesuit Priest, and Dr. T. A. Bland.

This is a booklet of great interest, as it covers the entire ground of the difference between the creed of the Roman Catholic church and her daughters, the orthodox Protestant churches. It comprises, also, a history of the rise and progress of Puritanism, Spiritualism, etc. It is also a defense of Spiritualism against the false theory of the Catholics, Adventists and others, that spiritual mediums are controlled only by evil spirits. For sale now at this office for 15 cents.

"Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus." By Elizabeth Towne. Valuable for health. Price 25 cents.

First Spiritualist Society of Tampa, Fla.

At a recent business meeting of the members of the First Spiritualist Society of Tampa, Mr. Wm. E. E. Kates was elected president in place of Mr. J. J. Lunsford, resigned. Bros. J. F. Ireland and J. J. Lunsford were elected as representatives to the N. S. A. convention at Washington, D. C.

While Brother Ireland gives entire satisfaction as speaker to the members of the society, we feel that it would be good for the cause if we could have some good speaker and test medium with us for a time. There is a fine field here, and much inquiry; so with the proper one to minister to us, much good would be likely to follow.

During the warm summer months the society has held regular meetings in the parlors of Brother Ireland. But on the first Sunday evening we hope to be able to open for the winter campaign in a suitable hall down town. Brother Ireland feels a desire to have some other speaker than himself officiate on that occasion, therefore any workers in the cause who may contemplate coming south for the winter are cordially invited to correspond with either the president or secretary.

We have the most harmonious society here that it has ever been the fortune of the writer to be connected with. All public workers who have been with us sense the same, and often speak of the harmonious influences.

Address Wm. E. E. Kates, president, Box 22, Route 2, or Mrs. M. E. Kirk, 2104 Mitchell street, Tampa, Fla. COR.

Second Anniversary Celebration.

The Ladies' Spiritual Temple Fund Society celebrated the second anniversary, Sunday, October 6, 1907, at their Temple on Fullerton street. The place was beautifully decorated with palms and cut flowers, sunflowers, and the American flag decorated the rostrum. Special musical program, Mrs. Flora Henwood director. Mr. Herder gave several violin solos, others rendering vocal selections. Dinner and supper were served by the ladies in annex.

The speakers were Mrs. M. S. Greenamyer and Frank Ripley; both outdid themselves, their eloquence holding their audience spellbound. Every seat in the Temple was filled. Both speakers remarked about the beautiful harmonious condition; their message work gave comfort and consolation to many an aching heart.

The secretary read the financial report for the year, which showed the society in a healthy condition. Received from October, 1906, to October 1907, $1,480.60; disbursed from October, 1906, to October, 1907, $1,213.54; balance in bank, $267.06.

Beside a mortgage of $1,200, we have no debts.

The officers and members thankfully appreciate the large attendance, the liberal contribution, and all who assisted in making this celebration a decided success financially as well as spiritually.

As this closes the engagement of Mrs. M. S. Greenamyer for this season, we bid her godspeed, thank her for good work done, cheerfully recommend her as a good speaker and splendid test medium. In appreciation of her good work the society extended to her a call for the months of October and November, 1908.

Brother Frank T. Ripley will take charge of our rostrum until first Sunday in December.

Secretary L. T. F. S.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About 7 words constitute a line.]

Our little daughter Emily, born December 28, 1904, passed to spirit life, September 18, 1907. She was a child of great intelligence, wise beyond her years; always so happy and jolly. We are so sad and lonely now. Our knowledge and belief in spirit return and eternal progression, makes us believe that the parting is only a brief one and that holds us up.

Brothers and sisters of The Progressive Thinker, send us your loving thoughts.

J. E. and DELIA J. McMAHAL.

At his home in Wamego, Kansas, October 9, 1907, the Angel of Mercy came and called for our brother Julius Leach. He was an honest and upright man and a lifelong Spiritualist. The funeral was largely attended by loving friends, including two sons from Chicago. Brother Leach was eighty-three years old, and his passing was almost instantaneous and without sickness. Funeral address by the writer, A. Scott Bledsoe.

The funeral services of Mrs. Alice Hendley were conducted by her pastor, Lily M. Thiebaud, at the home on 9th street, San Bernardino, Cal., at 2 p. m., October 10. Mrs. Hendley was born in England; one of the early pioneers of this city, and she outlived many, being 90 years of age. She had been a devoted Spiritualist for many years.

THE PATHWAY of the Human Spirit, or the Pathway of the Spirit Traced, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Price 75 cents; postage 12 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Mrs. M. E. R.—Q. If man came up by evolution from the savage, what about the "lost arts" and the statement of science that all modern inventions and knowledge was possessed by the ancients?

A.—This correspondent is misinformed. Science does not teach that there is nothing new. That belief sprang from the foolish assertion recorded in the Bible: "There is nothing new under the sun." It is safe to say that the "wise men" of ancient times woud be children compared to the thinkers of to-day. There is the steam engine, and all the machinery that goes with it, and all the appliances of electricity, wholly unknown to the ancients. Of physical science their ideas were those of children. The wisest men of Greece amused themselves telling riddles! As for the lost arts, there are none. The present, in intellectual force and achievements, surpasses everything in the past.

A useless pyramid—a monument of superstition—is one of the wonders of the ancient world, but the labor it consumed was not as much as that required to build the Siberian railway, or the Northern Pacific, and these have not only the advantage of being for use, but are expressive of the people's high moral and intellectual culture.

Ludwig Wrangell.—Q. Why is it that most test mediums are controlled by Indian spirits?

A.—It is claimed that the spirits of the red man are nearer to the earth plane, and hence better endowed to deal with physical things. It is not the fact that they are in a majority. Some of the best mediums never receive communications from Indian spirits.

J. S. Cameron.—Q. What was the age of the Mormon prophet Joseph Smith at the time he claimed, through the instrumentality of an angel, to discover the golden plates from which the book of Mormon was translated? What proof is there outside of the few men whose names we find in that book, testifying that they handled those plates? Where are those plates to-day? If I ask a Mormon, he tells me an angel has charge of them.

A.—Joseph Smith was born in 1805, and in 1823 he claimed to have received a message from the angel Moroni, telling him where the plates were concealed. This would make his age 18 years, but he professed to have first experienced an unknown influence at fifteen. There is not a vestige of evidence of the existence of the metallic plates from which Smith is said to have translated the Book of Mormon, beyond the scribe Oliver Cowdery and two other devoted witnesses. Later, all these men, becoming angry at Smith, confessed that it was all a hoax, and they deserted him and the church. Rigdon, into whose hands Smith fell, was unscrupulous, and had the dream of founding a new religion. He used Smith as his accomplice. Smith was a singular blending of rascal and fool. According to the revised testimony of these "witnesses" the story of the "plates" was entirely false. The Mormon religion is too recent in origin to have its claims received by blind faith, as are those which have come down from the remote past.

I was personally acquainted with the family of a brother of Oliver Cowdery. They were excellent people, of high social standing, Spiritualists by organization. In conversation with these nephews and nieces they said it had been to their father, and to them, a mystery how their Uncle Oliver could have been drawn into the support of Smith. They said it was the opinion of their father that he went into the business first as scribe, with full belief, and remained because he disliked the ridicule he would bring upon himself by exposing the scheme. But it, at last, became too rank for him, and he came out declaring the great prophet a fraud.

AN IMPRESSIVE ARTICLE.

What Is the Specific Gravity of Materialized Human Forms?—Fake Mediums.

When I was a student in college I studied natural philosophy or physics. We learned to investigate all sides and conditions of any phenomenon. We were taught to make our own experiments and deduce therefrom the natural law, yet we used the text-book as a guide in our experiments. We were taught to verify the truths, laws and principles studied in the text-book and to be original investigators.

Just so when I studied botany, though it is of little practical value except to a florist, yet we were taught to be very observing. We learned that Nature had its laws and principles in the vegetable world from the carboniferous age to the present time.

When I studied geometry I learned how to reason, taking nothing for granted but axioms or self-evident truths. Starting with an axiom or previously demonstrated proposition, we would demonstrate or prove another.

WHAT AM I TO THINK AND CONCLUDE WHEN I RUN UP AGAINST A SPIRITUAL MATERIALIZATION PROPOSITION AND CAN'T GET EVEN A CHANCE TO DEMONSTRATE ITS TRUTH OR FALSITY?

Over three years ago I met a so-called materializing medium and I attended one seance. I seemed to be satisfied with it and I wrote an article in the medium's favor. I wanted to find a good medium whom I could praise and laud and extol clear up to the skies. I was willing to say a magazine full of good things about such a medium.

I wanted to be the first to say a lot of good things or nothing.

Brother Francis wrote back that I should try to get the medium to sit under mosquito netting, tacked to the floor, and I might have two columns of The Progressive Thinker to write up such a test seance and to sing the medium's praises therein.

Then I informed the medium of the editor's request for that kind of phenomena. Then the medium demurred.

"Oh, that editor is against mediums. I don't want to have anything to do with him," said he.

"No, he is not against honest mediums, but he is against fake mediums. If editor Francis finds out that you are an honest medium and get good results, he will speak well of you and take you into the palm of his hand and throw you up into the public sky on the pinnacle of fame, but he will throw a fake medium down into the bottomless pit of oblivion," I remarked. "His paper can do you much good, and his influence is worth having," I concluded.

"Well, I don't care for his favors," concluded the medium.

Such was the substance of our first talk over three years ago.

As I have taught over twenty terms of school, I have passed many examinations, and I know teachers must furnish proof of good moral character.

I conclude that all mediums ought to pass an examination before the State Board of Examiners or before the examining committee of the State Association.

During the last three years I have frequently met said medium, and I have always failed to get such a test seance. I have talked with him about it, but he has had various excuses.

We soon met in a public hall at the close of a spiritual meeting, and I mentioned the subject again and near by happened to stand another materializing medium who since then has gone to the sunny southwest. She volunteered the remark that a medium could not get good results with his head covered up. I concluded that conversation by observing that a mosquito netting over a medium's head would not hinder such manifestations near as much as the thick clothing over the medium's body. With such artful objections I was disgusted. A person with a scientific mind would try a seance under many different conditions.

The last time I met said medium, it was on Monroe street, in front of the store where I work.

We had a long talk; his last excuse was that it was too warm weather (August) to sit then, but the weather should not be too warm to ascertain the truth.

"Choose your sitters," said I, "and have them swear to the results and have their affidavits printed so people will know who has been to a test seance; then shove that affidavit under the noses of your opponents; then your friends won't be put to so much annoyance to defend you. If I were a medium I would sit under such test conditions all the while for self-protection, and I would not give people a chance to cast insinuations upon me. I would not cause so much dispute or my friends so much trouble to defend me."

So I concluded, but he thought he had friends enough.

Now the weather has grown much colder. I saw him pass by the other day and saluted him; but he said not a word about any seance.

What does a spirit form weigh if standing on a pair of scales?

Would his foot melt if placed in water?

How would the water taste thereafter?

What would be the result if placed in any other liquid?

When a spirit form dematerializes, going down between the curtains, it or he should go down with head erect like a drum major so the sitters can see his face instead of the top of his head, as if he were bowing like a faker.

I have talked with those who have been in said medium's seances and some say he gets or gives personation.

Now, the rule is that no medium who charges should ever personate in a materializing seance, for there is no dividing line between such personation and fraud. Better have a little genuine phenomena than a lot of doubtful show stunts or tricks.

I have inquired also of those who have attended his seances, many times, if the curtain was ever parted so as to show the spirit form and the medium at the same time, and they answered "no."

Suppose such a medium sits with flour in his hands, he can easily pull a big handkerchief out of his pocket or clothes and spread it on his knees and empty the flour therein; then he can play the faker if he wants to do so.

Just so if he sits with his feet in flour; he can take off his shoes and put on another pair of socks; then he can play the faker.

If a medium gives a free test seance, we think he is working for the good of the cause; but if he charges we think he is working for the dollar.

Brother Francis is doing just the right thing in demanding test conditions before he gives mediums a moral certificate; and local and State Associations should do the same.

In materialization I would try many different experiments, just as I would in natural philosophy and chemistry.

The medium I refer to is Mr. Forbush, whom Mr. Faurot exposed in issue of last week. H. E. MARTIN.

MRS. MAY PEPPER VANDERBILT.

An Impressive Statement Made in Her Behalf.

To the Editor:—We hope you will spare us a little of your valuable space in which to say a few words in regard to the Vanderbilt case. We are afraid a prejudice may be created in the minds of some of your readers who read only the newspaper report in regard to it. A great many of the statements which have been spread broadcast are absolutely false and create a very wrong impression. Many think and say that Mrs. Vanderbilt denied her mediumship on the witness stand at the late hearing in the case of Miss Vanderbilt in her efforts to have her father declared incompetent. Mrs. Vanderbilt said, in answer to questions by the opposing lawyer, that she had never seen "Bright Eyes," and knew of her mostly by what her friends had told her, she herself being in an unconscious condition while under the control of the spirit. I do not call that denying her mediumship; very few mediums have ever seen their control or guide; and because she could not, at a moment's notice, tell the contents of a sealed letter held in the hands of a lawyer, one would think that Spiritualism had been knocked all to pieces by the capital that had been made of it.

We wonder how many mediums could have given the slightest demonstration of the truth of the spiritual phenomena under the conditions, under a constant strain of mind for days, harassed and perplexed by the lawyers, and surrounded, as our sister was, almost entirely by enemies and opposers. Mrs. Vanderbilt has never professed to read sealed letters; she frequently does give the exact contents of letters placed on the table at her meetings, and because of that fact societies have got in the habit of advertising that she will do so, but without any authority from her.

The attacks made on her moral character could in every instance have been proven false had an opportunity been given her, but not anticipating the charges that were brought against her, she did not have witnesses present (which she could have had) to disprove them. Mr. Vanderbilt incurred the enmity of his daughter by marrying a Spiritualist, and his wife is being martyred to gratify her malice. One of the latest moves in the case has been to issue a warrant for her arrest on the charge of stealing a house and lot; think of it—stealing a house and lot that her husband was proud to present to her and is willing to testify that he did so present. No unprejudiced person could converse five minutes with Mr. Vanderbilt without being convinced that he was fully competent to judge as to what would be for his best interest and happiness. Experts testified in court to his perfect sanity, except as regarded the one point: that he believed he could communicate with the spirit of his deceased wife, but that anyone who so believed must necessarily be insane. What a lot of crazy men there must be running about loose, and if all the men are incompetent who present their wives with a house, just imagine it; but this one was not presented; it was "stolen." We understand now the reason for the building of so many "sky-scrapers" in New York—they are afraid their lots will be stolen with ordinary buildings on them.

Mrs. Vanderbilt was engaged to speak at Cadet Hall, Lynn, on Sunday, the 6th, but the warrant was sent on here that she might be arrested before the service. A very large crowd was present to hear her, but she sent word that she could not be present, thereby avoiding arrest. The audience was unanimous in their expressions of indignation, and their sympathy for her. The immense audience that greeted her at Unity Camp on September 8th, filling the large auditorium, although a very stormy day, proves the hold that "May Pepper" has on the hearts of New England Spiritualists. Probably before this reaches the eyes of your readers the second hearing in the case will have been reported in the daily papers. If Mr. Vanderbilt should be victorious and prove that a man has a right to marry the woman he wants, if he can get her, thousands of Eastern Spiritualists will rejoice and be glad. If another jury should pronounce him incompetent, even if the property which he has freely bestowed upon the wife of his choice should be taken from her, even should she be sent to prison for "stealing a house and lot," the love and sympathy of her hosts of friends will go with her, and we will wait patiently the time when she will again be doing the work of the spirit world and will prove to friend and foe, in the future as well as in the past, her wonderful God-given mediumship. GEORGIA GLADYS COOLEY.

Entertaining Letter from this Well-Known Speaker and Medium.

It has been some time since I penned an article for the perusal of the dear readers of the good old Thinker, but much work, visiting and travel, have claimed my attention.

I left Chicago, September 15, for my old home in Portland, Ore., where I visited with relatives a short time before starting on my extended journey, and I must say my most pleasant visit in the west, as I found my relatives all well and happy, and met more of the old friends than I had ever met in previous visits, as well as some dear friends from our Eastern States.

I found the First Spiritualist Society prospering under efficient management, and the weekly meetings held at the palatial home of Mrs. Lucy Mallory are an inspiration to all who attend. This worthy woman has held open house for the teachings of Spiritualism for many years, and the city of Portland as well as the cause at large is greatly indebted to her and her loyalty to Spiritualism. May she be spared for us many years.

I left the Rose City for San Francisco October 5. Had a splendid trip over the mountains, enjoyed the wonderful scenery, admired the majesty of Mt. Shasta, standing forth in its snowy garments, and with a great relish partook of the unsurpassed mineral water of Shasta Springs. Here the scenery is beyond description, the mountains towering skyward, waterfalls trickling over them, studded here and there with electric lights within colored globes, making one feel they have found a fairy land. Just about the time your soul leaps with joy and you feel contented to remain in this beautiful fairyland the conductor shouts "all aboard," and we were soon speeding onward, arriving in San Francisco Monday a. m.

Poor old San Francisco; not at all what she was, and the signs of ruin and devastation everywhere. The earthquake and fire of April, 1896, treated her harshly, but with Western energy and pride she is fast building up again, and it is astonishing what has been accomplished in such a short time; yet, as I watch the people, especially on Market street, I noticed they did not push forward with the speed and agility of former years, and their faces wore a demure expression, and to the psychic a sadness of the city's air was quite perceptible, showing plainly the psychological influence of the great disaster.

My time here is spent in sight-seeing, but to enumerate would take up too much valuable time and space.

To me the most interesting object of yesterday's travels was the viewing of the spineless cactus, now on exhibition in the Ferry building. It is the latest, and, to my mind, the greatest achievement of the genius and wonderful work of that "wizard of horticulture," Luther Burbank.

Some of the readers of The Progressive Thinker may remember an article I wrote for the paper October 25, 1906, in which I commended Mr. Burbank on some of his successes, and spoke of his promise to produce the spineless cactus, saying I had long felt the Spanish needles and cactus would some day find their place and use in the world. I never crossed the desert without this thought presenting itself to me, and now we have it, for in the evolution of the plant the percentage of water has been largely increased.

The plants are used for hedges or fences and for ornaments. The leaves furnish food for all kinds of stock as well as poultry. The fat young leaves make excellent pickles and are good food when fried like egg plant. They are also used as greens and produce a sweetmeat similar to preserved citron. The abundant mucilaginous juice from the fruit and leaves is mixed with whitewash to make it lasting when exposed to the weather. The leaves are admirably adapted for poultices and as a substitute for hot-water bags.

The fresh fruit of the improved variety is unique in shape and color, superior to the banana in flavor and is usually sold at the same price as oranges, so says the San Francisco Chronicle.

With truthfulness can we say, "Nature has no secrets or mysteries; she is open to all those who will study and work.

Luther Burbank dared to study her work and has been rewarded thereby. This grand man is giving to others the best that is in him, and through his patience and knowledge we are all benefited.

He, like Edison and some others, is a blessing to the world—a special servant of the people as well as God within himself. Walter Scott said:

"One crowded hour of glorious life
Is worth an age without a name."

Luther Burbank has found his crowded hour of glorious life, but also has made a name for himself that will never die, and when we look upon the improvement of our fruit, vegetable and floral productions of this age we see the name of this man and feel the vibration of a well-grown soul.

But my article is already too long and I must say adieu to my friends in America. The next time you hear from me will be from foreign lands, as I sail to-morrow on the steamship Siberia for Japan.

My address after January 1 will be Wellington, N. Z. My American address, 290 Columbia street, Portland, Ore.

STRANGE PREDICTIONS

Planetary Professor Foretells Events and Quickly Reads the Lives of People, Though Thousands of Miles Away.

Sends Letters to the Rich and Poor Alike in Which He Advises Them About Business, Marriage, Speculation, Love Affairs, Wealth, Etc.

Offers Free Readings to All Who Write and Send Date of Birth.

In his office in New York City, surrounded by charts and dials of strange design, Prof. Albert H. Postel studies daily over the lives of men and women who have written him for advice on affairs of business, love, speculation, travel, marriage, health and the important events of life. The following letter gives an idea of Mr. Postel's ability:

MISS EFFA M. TRYON.

Prof. Postel:

Dear Sir—You are certainly the most wonderful astrologer living. Every one of your predictions came true. I consider that you not only saved me from an awful death, but prevented the loss of hundreds of dollars. I trust that many people will profit by your advice. Sincerely,

MISS EFFA M. TRYON.

The accuracy of recent predictions made by this eminent Astrologer has caused many of his friends to believe that he possesses a supernatural power, but he modestly asserts that his predictions are due alone to a scientific understanding of natural laws. The many thankful letters Prof. Postel has received from people who have benefited by his advice furnish ample proof that he is sincere in his work and has a kindly feeling toward humanity.

Readers of this paper can obtain a reading free of charge by addressing a letter to Prof. Postel, Dept. 684, No. 126 West 34th street, New York. Simply say you wish a reading of your life, stating your birth date, sex and whether married or single. If you wish to do so you may inclose 10 cents (silver or stamps) to pay postage and clerical work; however, the reading will be promptly sent, whether you inclose the 10 cents or not.

PLEADS FOR TORCH TO CURE HERETICS.

Retired Preacher Tells Presbytery Middle-Age Method is Needed in World—Others Should Die, Too—Dr. R. M. Patterson Startles Assembly in Philadelphia When Views are Announced.

The Rev. Dr. Robert M. Patterson, a minister of the Presbyterian church, who is well known in Albany, Chicago and Philadelphia, and who has lived in Malvern, a suburb of this city, since his retirement from the ministry several years ago, caused an uproar in the Presbytery that met in Philadelphia, October 14, by declaring that the death penalty should be inflicted upon all heretics, blasphemers, and co-respondents in all divorce cases.

Persons who sought out affinities should be harshly dealt with by law, said Dr. Patterson, and the death penalty should be established as the punishment for attacks on women.

Dr. Patterson had been scheduled on the program of the Presbytery for a speech on John Calvin.

Wants Death for Many.

The first thing he said when he got up to speak was:

"If I had my way about it I would have an executioner called in to deal with all heretics and blasphemers. Burning at the stake would be too good for those who revile religion and take the Lord's name in vain. The growth of heresy is such to-day that nothing but measures like this can stop it.

"I would requisition the services of the executioner also for those despicable persons who make divorces necessary by their insidious machinations between husband and wife.

"And for those who, under the guise of an artistic temperament or uncontrollable fascination, take unto themselves affinities, forsaking their lawful wives, I would have the law recommend harsh punishment. Execution also should be the punishment for attacks on women."

When Dr. Patterson had finished speaking, the Rev. Dr. John Wheaton, the pastor of Mizpah Presbyterian church of Philadelphia, rose to declare that such pronouncements were too radical for expression in the present day.

Near Clash Over Views.

The Rev. R. C. McCook, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian tabernacle, got to his feet with some heat and declared that instead of being radical, Dr. Patterson was ultra-conservative. He had harked back to the thought of the middle ages, said Dr. McCook, and his ideals were those of the inquisitors in Spain and the anti-papal religionists of Germany.

"There is no man in the Presbyterian church like Dr. Patterson today, I hope," said Dr. McCook in conclusion. This roused Dr. Patterson's ire and he started to make a spirited reply. Others tried to speak at the same time, and the meeting was in an uproar. The moderator presiding pounded for order and announced that to preserve the peace of the meeting further discussion on Dr. Patterson's speech would not be allowed.

CELESTIAL DYNAMICS,

Being a Normal Course of Study in the Astro-Magnetic Forces of Nature.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LIGHT OF EGYPT," "THE LANGUAGE OF THE STARS," ETC.

A magnificent and complete course of Astro-metaphysical study, embodying Vital Principles of Life, Mental Force, Sickness and Disease. With the only true and really Scientific method of treating the sick successfully.

Mental Healers, Meta-physicians, and all who practice the Healing Art Divine should give "Celestial Dynamics" a thorough and impartial study, and thus learn the real cause of their frequent failures.

No Astro-Student can afford to be without this work, if he would understand the Meta-physics of Astrology.

This work was specially prepared for publication to meet the demands of a large and very earnest class of people who cannot afford to pay for a regular course of instruction under a qualified teacher. And those who can afford this privilege will find the work an invaluable text-book to their studies.

These books from the pen of the noted musician, medium and author, Carlyle Petersilea, whose writings have been read and prized by thousands of readers of The Progressive Thinker, will assuredly be enjoyed by all who read them. They are intensely spiritual and of absorbing interest from beginning to end.

OCEANIDES

A Psychical Novel.—Price Paper, Cover, 50 Cents.

This great novel is written with a distinct purpose, to set forth certain phases of spirit life and experience, as related to the gifted and inspired author. The question of soul mates, or of the united male and female constituting the completed ego or angel, is advanced as a vital truth of spirit experience in the higher realms. The work radiates a good spiritual influence, and is very interesting.

It is a spiritual book for Spiritualists, and interesting for everyone.

MARY ANNE CAREW

Wife, Mother, Spirit, Angel.—Neat Cloth Cover, Price $1.00.

This great work relates the experiences of a young wife and mother, early called to the portals of death. It is very realistic, and the narrative is charmingly natural, and beautiful in its tone of sweetness. It brings that other world very near to us; the comfort it brings to those bereaved of the dear ones of the home and family, is beyond one's power to describe. All readers will be charmed with it as well as spiritually aided and uplifted.

Prof. Lockwood's Books.

Store your mind with the great but demonstrative truths found in consecutive order only in these writings.

Prof. Lockwood is the only writer, thinker and lecturer in this country who affirms that the evolution of the soul of man is in strict accord and agreement with the evolution of the soul of nature; and that the only proof of immortality inheres in an analysis of nature's fundamental principles and the co-relation of cosmic elements and energies.

These great truths are explained and demonstrated from the plane of the Spiritual Philosophy founded on Nature itself.

The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature and Its Relation to the Philosophy of Spiritualism. A scientific demonstration of the invisible principles and attributes of nature and Modern Spiritualism. A mint of scientific truths as the basis of its phenomena. Price 25 cents.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism—A Menace to the American Civilization. The entire hierarchy of Ecclesiasticism arraigned as infidels for subverting the scientific demonstrations of universities and colleges, by substituting the immoral phantoms of the Mosaic Hypothesis. It is a hot shot. Price 25 cents.

Historical, Logical and Philosophical Objections to the Dogmas of Reincarnation and Re-Embodiment. A concise and masterly review of the historical origin of Reincarnation as an ancient dogma. Its illogical claims and inconsistent assumptions. Its glaring defects and dogmas dissected. Price 25 cents.

The Spiritualism of Nature. Modern Spiritualism has its basic truths in nature, and is proven not by the bible or any sacred cosmogony, but by an analysis of nature's self-existent principles. Price 15 cents.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth. The greatest book, and the greatest truth of any age; a book of 212 pages with several telling scientific illustrations. Continuity of life and the association of spirit realms demonstrated to be in scientific accord with principles of the Co-relation of Force, and the Conservation of Energy. The greatest book ever written in the defence and support of Spiritualism. Price $1.

All of Prof. Lockwood's publications are on sale at The Progressive Thinker office, Chicago, Ill., and at the rostrum when he lectures. These treatises contain the wealth of a vast historical and scientific research.

FROM SOUL TO SOUL.

By Emma Rood Tuttle. This volume contains the best poems of the author, and some of the best popular songs with the music by eminent composers. The poems are admirably adapted for recitations. 235 pages, beautifully bound. Price $1.

WANDERINGS OF THEE HULL PILGRIM.

In a short time after my article, "The Hull Pilgrim at Home" was sent to The Progressive Thinker, I packed a few of my belongings and journeyed eastward, my objective point being Lily Dale, N. Y. I stopped enroute at Mantua, Ohio, where our son George has been located since he started out in the world for himself.

On reaching Mantua I met my sister, Mrs. Alice Leeds, her husband and little daughter, who are about to take up their residence in Massachusetts. My sister and family have for many years been residents of Cleveland, and are well known among the Spiritualists of that city. Sister and husband were tireless workers in the Lyceum course until the failing health of Mr. Leeds compelled them to drop the work they loved and for which they labored so devotedly.

The visit to Mantua, enroute to Lily Dale, was one of only a few days including a Sunday. As soon as it was known to some of the Spiritualist friends at Maple Dell, that I was in town, I was called upon by that indefatigable worker (especially on behalf of lyceums) Mrs. Florence Barber, who pressed me for an engagement at the camp ground Sunday afternoon.

I had thought to spend Sunday as a quiet visiting day with my relatives; I had thought I would not visit beautiful Maple Dell; I did not make this decision because I had ceased to love that spot; many cherished memories were stored in my soul in connection with former work at that place I had never been there without my recently arisen companion in earlier days. We had filled camp engagements, and later, we held three sessions of Spiritualist Training School on those grounds. I had recently passed through so many ordeals, I felt I must make that journey as free from them as possible. In consequence of my feelings, which some might call purely selfish, I declined at first to meet the friends at Maple Dell. This resolution was soon broken; an instant after I had said I could not make the engagement, the "inner voice" said, "Mattie, do not weaken now; arise and be strong for anything; we have a message for the people; go!" and I did go; how rejoiced I was that I had followed the bidding of the spirits after all was over.

Maple Dell has lost none of its attractiveness; to Mr. Hull and myself it has always been a beautiful place, and wonderfully adapted to intellectual and spiritual work. To me it seemed a lamentable fact that as a camp ground it has been deserted; no meetings save a social and a lyceum was held during the work, the past season. A committee looked after the Sunday meetings, and although those meetings were fairly well attended, the audiences were only faint reminders of that gathered in the beautiful auditorium in earlier days.

After a sojourn of a few days in Mantua, I resumed my pilgrimage and reached Lily Dale on the morning of the 27th ult..

My recent visit to Lily Dale was the first in five years. I had looked forward with something like dread when I contemplated my return to this place. We not only had conducted three school sessions at Lily Dale, but we once owned a home, a beautiful home there, and we were fond of the Dale and its picturesque surroundings. I had felt sorry when its real name was taken from it and "The City Assembly of Light" was substituted. The latter name may be suggestive of beautiful things, but the term "Lily Dale" had become endeared to thousands who had from time to time journeyed to that "Mecca of Modern Spiritualism," and they were rejoiced, I am sure, when the name under which that most delightful place was cherished was restored.

There are so many good things to say relative to the meeting recently closed at Lily Dale, the query arises: "What can I leave out?"

The versatile pen of the Fixen scribe has faithfully portrayed, I judge, the meetings of the present season. At most, I feel I can only write from a personal standpoint.

I was met at the train on my arrival, by Mrs. S. J. Lutes, an old and valued friend of Mr. Hull's and mine. She at once informed me I was to occupy a room in her cottage during my stay at the Dale. It is seldom a weary pilgrim finds so restful a place on grounds where there is so large a gathering, as I found in that upper-room at Lutes Cottage. I did not mingle with the public on the day of my arrival. I begged to be left alone in the cottage, during the service hour in the afternoon. That afternoon was a sweet and a sacred season to me. I received positive evidence that while in one sense I had entered the grounds near and dear to me, alone, I had not been alone. My beloved came to me—the other pilgrim—and he assured me, and he gave me strength and courage. From that time my soul was lifted out from among the shadows; light came; strong, radiant and beautiful, from that time, during my stay. I felt the glory of an inspiration from that enfranchised soul, touching at times the deeps within mine own.

My first appearance on the platform at Lily Dale was Sunday, a. m., August 18. When I reached the chair assigned me I saw my companion standing by it, as though in waiting for me. I had never felt his presence more tangibly, and I felt his presence during the entire service. Several afterward described him in the same position where I had seen him on my entrance to the platform. I cannot go into detail here as I would like; neither time nor space will allaw.

My visit at Lily Dale covered a period of ten days; it was one of the most uplifting, consequently pleasant experiences which has been mine since the shadows fell so deeply over my way.

I cannot conclude this part of my article without referring to the perfect harmony and good will which was a noticeable feature among the workers at Lily Dale. The selection of John Lillie for chairman was a wise one. His wonderfully magnetic voice, coupled with a magnetic presence, each telling in its own way the good will in his soul, makes him an ideal chairman. Another factor deserving many mentions, was the orchestra under the direction of Mr. Humphrey, husband of the estimable President of Lily Dale Association. The music—well, in many instances it was beyond description; it was uplifting and inspiring. Every speaker to whom I listened seemed at his best; why should he not, under such conditions as I have named.

On my return from Lily Dale to Mantua, I remained in Jamestown over night in the pleasant home of our old friends, Mr. and Mrs Thatcher and daughter. The visit was enjoyable and restful. On the following day I reached Mantua.

Sunday night, September 1 I lectured in Cleveland, in the beautiful hall occupied by the Christian Spiritualists, Mr. Homer S. Saxe President. During my sojourn in the city I was entertained in the pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs Fred Haskins. Mrs. Haskins is Sister Leeds' step-daughter. Mrs. Haskins and husband are much interested in our philosophy.

September 2, I officiated at a transition service in Willoughby, O., the announcement of the departed appears in another column. After another brief visit with our son and family, I returned to Whitewater.

My next work will be in connection with the Morris Pratt School. The prospects were never so good as at the present, for a successful session. Before these lines are given to the reader the students will have returned and the sixth session of the school will have been entered upon by as earnest a corps of teachers and as industrious a class of students as ever were working on behalf of education.

I shall hold myself in readiness to fill a few calls to lecture during the coming season.

Dear friends, one and all, I cannot express my appreciation of your kindly messages and letters that find their way to my hands. After a time I shall have more time to spend in social correspondence. I would say in answer to the queries pertaining to the forthcoming book: "Biography of Moses Hull," it is now in type. It will soon be ready for issue.

MATTIE E. HULL.

Whitewater, Wis.

Don't Commit Suicide.

Do not kill yourself, my brother;
Do not take your life, my sister.
Lonely stranger, standing, gazing
From the bridge into the water,
Full of trouble and despairing,
Full of sorrow and foreboding,
We are brothers, we are kindred,
We will lend you our assistance.
Tell us all about your trouble;
Tell your brother, tell your sister;
Tell some person how you're feeling;
Tell somebody what you're thinking;
Ask them for a brother's counsel;
They will help you like a brother,
Give you strength and give you courage.
Oh, my brother; oh, my sister,
Standing by the mystic river,
Don't jump into eternity.
You're not ripe for early reaping;
Linger longer here among us;
Help the needy, those below you;
Don't despair, but fight the harder;
Hold out longer till you're wiser;
Welcome trouble, welcome sorrow;
Never whimper over labor;
Be a soldier, be a hero
In the longest, deepest darkness.
Let the troubles grind and smoothe you,
Polish down the spots and wrinkles
Found upon your disposition.
As the buffer makes the polish
On his patent brass invention,
Let the living emery wheel
Grind and polish you all over.
When you cross the mystic river,
Then your labors are not ending;
For the glory world around us
Is a life of long progression.
We are climbing, sometimes falling,
Up and down progression's ladder.
Hence our life is full of striving,
High ideals and endeavor.
Simply dying is not ending
Any trouble we are having.
Dying does not change our nature,
Does not make us angels quickly,
Does not fill us with perfection,
For progression moves quite slowly.
Help the needy, those below you,
Then their thankful tho'ts, so happy,
Will be flowing back to you and
Filling you with happy thinking.
Would you still be far more happy?
Would you grow to be more useful?
Would you have a better mission?
Would you like to live for ages?
Make, oh, make more people happy,
So their happy tho'ts will fill you
With a living joy unbounded;
Then you'll want to live forever.

LOVE.

Love lightens our care, drives sorrow away;
Love scatters the clouds to the brightness of day.

Love gladdens the soul and fills it with song;
Love lifts us to right, and rights all the wrong.

It makes life worth living; love is real and not a dream;
It is truth, and God-given; love guides with its beam.

Love is holy, uplifting; 'tis emotion sweet and deep;
Love's the highest aspiration God's holy law to keep.

Love teaches only goodness; it knows no fear nor shame;
Love is the holy essence of passion's tender flame.

God's words are love and law; love should rule on earth plane;
To love and be loved is life, so blessed be love's holy name.

From Dream to Vision of Life

By Lilian Whiting, Author of "The World Beautiful," "The Spiritual Significance," "The Outlook Beautiful," etc.

This book finds its keynote in the question asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury—"The Life Beyond,—what is it? What is its bearing on these present working years?". To the discussion of this vital problem Miss Whiting brings the results of modern scientific research and that peculiar spiritual clairvoyance which has been remarked in "The Life Radiant" and some of her other books. It is written with a certain joyous vitality that communicates itself to the reader in a certain radiance and liberation of new energies. Price $1.00 net.

SOME SERIOUS QUESTIONS.

By One Who Is Not a Christian, Mohammedan, Buddhist, or Spiritualist.

To the Editor:—This is a world of change and progress, and of all the animals in it, man is the only creature capable of noting this fact. We have a religion called Christian, and numerous sects that preach and pray in Jesus' name, composed of the very class that he denounces as the rich and the proud, the Priest and the Levite, the scribes, pharisees and hypocrites. He said publicans and harlots would enter heaven before these. Now, what we are trying to ascertain is, who will eventually "get there," if Jesus is to be the judge?

When the judgment day comes, and the rich and pious crowd stand and say: Lord, Lord, open unto us; have we not prophesied in thy name and in thy name done many wonderful works? and he shall say, depart from me, ye hypocrites, and the publicans and sinners shall stand there, beating on their breasts and saying, God be merciful to me a sinner, and he shall say, inasmuch as ye have done some good without sounding a trumpet before you, here is a pass; which class do you think it is safest to stand in with?

And how about those who claim to heal in the name of Jesus? This fad of healing is becoming popular, but are the healers true followers of the Nazarene?

I turn to his Sermon on the Mount and read: If a man smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also, etc. I admit that this shuts me out, for, if a man smites me on either cheek I will give it back to him under the eye if I can. I have concluded that I am not a healer, nor much of a follower; neither do I have any intelligent dreams or psychic visions, and I am over eighty-five years old. I am in good health and eat three square meals per diem. Am I left out because I am not an invalid or a lunatic?

Well, here is a little squib in rhyme on a subject that I know something about. Don't print anything you don't want. I don't claim to be Spiritualist, Christian, Mohammedan, Theosophist, Buddhist nor Puseyite. I take and read The Progressive Thinker because it is unique, visionary, poetic, and possibly occupying a needful place in the world at the present time. The mills of the gods are not running full time yet. The brains of men are capable of greater power and speed than has yet been attained. H. E. P.

BIBLE NOT FIT FOR CHILDREN.

President of Chicago School Board So Tells Delegation.

The problem of religious instruction in the public schools was lately put up to President Otto C. Schneider, of the Chicago Board of Education. He met the issue so squarely as to bring a gasp of astonishment from the two clubwomen who had broached the subject.

"I believe with Jean Jacques Rousseau," said Mr. Schneider, "that religion should not be taught to anyone in any form until his or her mind is mature. As for the Bible in the public schools, I object to it. It is not fit for children."

President Schneider's visitors were Mrs. Elizabeth Cook, president of the Woman's Educational Union, and Mrs. Clarence A. Starr, a prominent clubwoman and educational worker. The two wanted to ask the president's aid in securing the introduction of a book of Bible readings in the curriculum of the Chicago schools.

"I would not object to a history of the Bible in the schools as a masterpiece of literature," said President Schneider. "It should be there, the same as Byron's poems or any other of the great masterpieces, and for the same reason I should be glad to have on the reading list a history of the Koran or of the religion of Confucius or Buddha.

"But as for teaching the Bible in the schools of Chicago, it would be against the Constitution."

Religious instruction never has been introduced into the schools, the school authorities feeling that in Chicago no system of religious training could be adapted to the innumerable sects and religions represented in the city's population. In addition, as suggested by President Schneider, a legal question is involved.

REGRET.

For What I Might Have Done for One That God Had Given Me.

I might have said a word of cheer
Before I let her go;
Her weary vision haunts me yet;
But how could I foreknow that
Slighted chance would be the last
To me in mercy given?
My utmost yearnings cannot send
That word from earth to heaven.

I might have looked the love I felt;
My Mabel had sore need
Of that—for which too shy or proud
She lacked the speech to plead.
But self is near and self is strong,
And I was blind that day,
She sought within my careless eyes
And went athirst, away.

Oh! word and look and clasp withheld,
Oh! Mabelle's heart now stilled;
Dear life, forever out of reach,
I might have warmed and filled.
Talents misused and seasons lost,
O'er which I mourn in vain;
A waste as barren to my tears
As desert sands to rain.

MOTHER LOVE.

A mother's love, holy and pure,
Unselfish and sublime,
Is the one love that does endure
The ravages of time.

They tell us that through Eve the race
Was doomed to endless woe,
But that through blood of Christ we're saved,
Because God loves us so.

Don't talk to me about a God
That separates the child
From mother everlastingly;
Such preaching makes me wild.

Priestcraft and greed go hand in hand,
Still mother love remains
The purest, sweetest sentiment
This dark world entertains.

The strong will dominate the weak,
God has ordained it so;
Still there's enough to wear and eat
And room to live and grow.

Don't get excited, anyway,
Keep cool and do your best,
Let everybody have their say,
But feather your own nest.

A REMARKABLE SENTIMENT.

As Expressed by a Leading Divine of New York.

To the Editor:—It appears from the daily papers that Rev. Madison C. Peters, a popular preacher in a fashionable down-town church in New York, has resigned his position that he may preach in Majestic theater to the unchurched multitudes of that great metropolis. He reveals the startling fact that on the fairest day there are not over 15,000 men to be found in all the Protestant churches of New York city. Here is what he says: "I believe the kingdom of Christ is vastly larger than any church. The church must go back to Christ as the brother of man—the reform for every wrong—the rule for every-day life. For man-made creeds it have no more use than for a last year's almanac, and, unmindful of the traditions of the church, I am seeking to know what Jesus taught. If I go to the theater that I may freely speak what I honestly think. I protest against being hired by the privileged few to preach what they think. Many a preacher to-day, to hold his job, must sell his manhood to the favor of men and women who pay his salary. There is not a church in New York city that has grown at all in proportion to the growth of the population. There are fewer Protestants in New York to-day than there were twenty-five years ago. There are men in my city drawing $10,000 a year who preach to less than fifty men each Sunday morning."

Verily what next in this stirring world of ours? T. RUTH.

CURED. WORRY, HURRY, SCURRY, FLURRY.

By William E. Towne. Learn how to cast away unnecessary care. This book points the way. Price, 25 cents.

LAUGH AT THINGS.

Laugh at things.
Then will troubles find their wings;
Fear and care, and grim despair
Ne'er house with him who
Laughs at things.

Laugh at things.
Then will trifles lose their stings;
Fret and worry, doubt and hurry
Soon flit from him who
Laughs at things.

Laugh at things.
In our daily lives we're kings;
Scorn and anger, hate and languor
Fast steal from him who
Laughs at things.

Laugh at things.
All joys come to him who sings;
Friend and lover, and helping brother
Fast, bide with him who
Laughs at things.

Laugh at things.
Thus it is good fortune brings
Health and power and richest dower
To crown this life who
Laughs at things.

Laugh at things.
Smile and laughter runs wisdom after;
Makes heaven for him who
Laughs at things.

Pagan or Christian?

On finding in another advanced society that the seats of highest culture are seats of discipline in barbarism, where the test of manhood is the giving and taking of wounds in fights arising from trivial causes or none at all, and where last year, a single day witnessed twenty-one such encounters in one university, we are reminded more of North American Indians, among whom tortures constitute the initiation of young men, than of civilized people taught for a thousand years to do good even to enemies. Or when we see, as lately in a nation akin to the last, that an officer who declined to break at once the law of his country and the law of his religion by fighting a duel, was expelled from the army, we are obliged to admit that profession of a creed which forbids revenge, by those whose deeds emphatically assert revenge to be a duty (almost as emphatically as do lowest races of men), presents humanity under an aspect not at all of the kind which we look for in "the adorable Great Being." Not reverence, not admiration, scarcely even respect, is caused by the sight of a hundred million pagans masquerading as Christians.—Spencer.

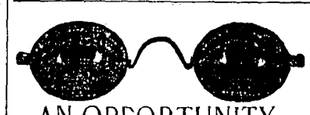
MASTERSHIP IS THE RIGHT WAY.

THE GREAT WORK is Vol. III., MASTERSHIP, and not Mediumship, of the "Harmonic Series." It makes clear the Way of Mastership. This is the Way that leads to Individual Liberty here and hereafter.

Every intelligent man and woman who is seeking for Spiritual Truth should read THE GREAT WORK. Why? Because:



1. It teaches the Constructive Process of Spiritual Development whereby we may communicate with our spirit friends without becoming Mediums.
2. It explains the most mysterious and fascinating phenomena of human life simply and clearly.
3. It presents a new array of demonstrated facts which prove that MASTERSHIP is the Constructive Road to Spiritual Unfoldment, and that it is open to all who elect to travel it.
4. Its author speaks from the standpoint of one who has "had the personal experience and made the demonstration."
5. It presents to the world a Moral Philosophy so simple and exact that it may be understood by a child, and yet so profound as to meet the deepest and most exalted demands of the human soul.

It will be sent post-paid to any address on receipt of $2.00. Address, Department P. T.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 36 CHICAGO, ILL., NOV. 2, 1907 NO. 936

Harrison D. Barrett.

His Annual Report as President of the National Spiritualists' Association of the United States of America, for the Year Ending October 1, 1907---A Report That Should Be Read by Every Spiritualist in the Land.

To the Officers, Delegates and Visitors to the Convention, and to the Spiritualists of America, greeting:

In compliance with the requirements of the Constitution, By-Laws, Rules and Regulations of the National Spiritualists' Association of the United States of America, I have the honor to submit my report as president of said body, for the year 1906-07 for your consideration. It is the fourteenth message that it has been my privilege to present to similar delegate bodies during my official connection with the organization in whose name we are assembled to-day.

GROWTH OF SPIRITUALISM.

Never before in all its history has Spiritualism occupied so large a place in the thought of the world as it has during the past twelve months. The increase of interest in our movement on the part of the people is confined to no one locality nor State nor nation. Reports from all lands show that it has been a favorite theme among all classes of people. It has been discussed in the laboratory of the scientist, in the library of the student and in the drawing-room of the leader of society circles. Those who move along the humbler walks of life have made it their favorite topic of conversation, whether at their daily toil or in the quiet of their homes. More than two thousand newspaper clippings from secular journals alone have passed through my hands, all of which have borne directly upon the subject of Spiritualism. Books bearing upon this subject have been in general demand wherever free public libraries are maintained. It is pleasing to note this increase of interest in our movement and to record the fact that Spiritualism has grown into popular esteem, despite the other fact that its professed followers have been quite remiss in their support of and devotion to the cause they profess to love. The growth made during the year has been intellectual in its character, rather than practical in its application. Of course, all educational work has its practical side because it fits the masses to receive a new revelation of truth when it shall be vouchsafed to them.

SPIRITUALISM ABROAD.

A word with regard to the progress of Spiritualism in foreign lands is not out of place here. Reports received from Great Britain prove that the cause is flourishing in the United Kingdom as never before. The local societies are doing a most excellent work and the National Federation is constantly widening its sphere of activity. Best of all, the lyceums, or Sunday school work, is receiving, as it ever has received in the past, the devoted consideration of the ablest minds among our English cousins. They do not wait to convert people to Spiritualism, but they make Spiritualists out of the young by educating them in the sacred truths of a religious Spiritualism. English scientists are devoting themselves to a painstaking analysis of sundry phenomenal manifestations and doing their best to reduce them to orderly form. In France and in Germany, the most prominent scholars and scientists are doing the same thing. Reports from France in particular are especially encouraging. Colonel De-Rochas, Professor Flammarion and their associates have taken high ground in favor of a scientific basis for Spiritualism and have thrown no little light upon the general subject of psychism through their investigations of the past year. Encouraging reports reach us from Austria and Russia. Never since the transition of Rudolph Virchow have the countries of middle Europe shown so much interest in the movement which that great man so ably represented. Russia has always been a fertile field for spiritual thought. Aksakof and Butlerof have had worthy successors and their demonstrations have done much to turn the minds of the people to the realities of being, away from the ephemeris of materialism.

In Italy, Professor Lombroso has come to the front with a new declaration as to his interest in the subject of psychic science. A princess of the realm as a medium, for the unseen forces has been the means of converting Marconi, of wireless telegraphy fame, to a belief in Spiritualism, and inspired him to proclaim that fact to the world. A movement is on foot to form a National Federation of Spiritualist scientific circles and clubs for the purpose of engaging in the propagandism of the truths that are to be found in the higher Spiritualism. A national organization is also under consideration in Bulgaria. A strong working church society has been formed in Sophia, with the Chief Justice of the Principality, His Excellency W. Groblachoff, as its president. The Judge is also the prime mover in the work of organizing a National Federation. He has been able to gather around him many of the nobility, both in the field of intellect and of social standing. In Spain and in South America, wherever the Spanish language is spoken, the same increase of interest in the subject of Spiritualism is apparent. No returns have been received up to date from Cuba, Porto Rico and Mexico. It is known that a large number of societies exist in al these places, especially in Porto Rico. Portuguese journals show that Spiritualism is a popular subject in Portugal and Brazil.

In India, the King of Tagore entertained our missionary to the world at large, Dr. J. M. Peebles, and opened one of the royal banquet rooms for a series of lectures upon the subject of Spiritualism. A society was organized under the leadership of the most representative men of the kingdom. In the large cities of India, such as Bombay and Calcutta, Spiritualism is coming to the front with rapid strides. This is also true of all the thought centers in Ceylon. South Africa gives us the same encouraging outlook and assurance of growth. Societies exist in Cape Town, in Durban and Johannesberg. The work in Australia is also of a most encouraging nature. "The Harbinger of Light," with Mrs. Charles Bright as its editor is proving a power for good in all thought centers in the southwestern continent. She is a most worthy successor of that tireless worker and splendid leader, W. H. Terry, who resigned the editor's chair in her favor during the past year. A national organization has been formed in New Zealand, with William McLean, of Wellington, as its executive officer. Mr. McLean is also president of the large and flourishing Spiritualist society in Wellington. He reports a steady and healthful growth of the spiritual movement throughout the New Zealand States. Letters have reached me from British Columbia, Assinboia, Saskatshawan, Ontario and Quebec in the Dominion of Canada, all indicating an active interest in our thought and a desire to spread the light of truth. A strong organization has been formed in Montreal, with Mr. John Maclean, A. M., the distinguished author, as its president. Toronto, Hamilton and Guelph all send encouraging reports. Truly, the outlook in foreign lands is indeed encouraging.

SPIRITUALISM AT HOME.

Turning to our own country, we find a marked increase of interest in Spiritualism in the abstract. The reports of the secular press, to which reference has already been made, show that the masses of the American people are keeping pace with the citizens of foreign lands in their study of psychic subjects. Everywhere is this interest apparent. The only people who have not responded to the progresive spirit of the year are the Spiritualists themselves. They, at least some of them, have maintained a studied indifference to this wonderful development of our thought outside of its own movement, and have held aloof from everything that would add to the sum total of knowledge on the subject. Many of the newspaper articles and magazine essays have been highly favorable to Spiritualism in esse and in posse, while others have been most severe in their criticism and highly unjust in the conclusions to which the writers have come. There never has been a time when the shadows of Spiritualism have been so conspicuously placed before the eyes of the masses. David P. Abbott, C. W. Bennett, Hereward Carrington and Will Irwin have written at length and with forceful emphasis upon the deceitful practices that unscrupulous persons have so long engaged in under the name of Spiritualism. James Creelman wrote of the scientific side of spiritual endeavor, fair in every statement he made with the exception of the heading of his article, in one of the issues of Pearson's Magazine.

Well-informed Spiritualists cannot gainsay the vast array of facts that these eminent men have martialed against what passes in the popular mind as Spiritualism. In some instances their statements have been too sweeping and wholly at variance with fact. They struck a popular chord, however, for the publications in which their articles appeared never were in such demand as they were when these essays appeared. Occasionally the exhaustion of the entire edition is reported. Your president would respectfully call your attention to the fact that the reading public, outside of the ranks of the Spiritualists judge our entire movement by the tricks which these writers so completely expose, and suggests that the time has come for this National Association to take a stand before the world differentiating between genuine and counterfeit Spiritualism. The time has come for the Spiritualists of America to cease covering up the knavery of pseudo mediums. Knowing, as we all do, that counterfeiting exists in our ranks, it is our bounden duty to fearlessly expose the same and to remove it from our midst forever. A movement that will not purge itself when wrong is known to exist within it, deserves to die an ignominious death.

I feel that the world at large should be shown that we sympathize with these distinguished writers, in so far as they have dealt with facts, and that we propose doing everything in our power to continue the good work they have begun. The eyes of thinking men und women in all parts of the world are upon this Convention. No class of people, no writer or body of writers, can draw the line between the true and the false in Spiritualism as can the enlightened Spiritualists themselves. This the world has a right to demand. It is not enough to reply to the essays that have been written or to review adversely the books that the past year has brought forth, bearing upon our religion. We are expected to place ourselves on record so clearly and so emphatically as to enable all people to see what Spiritualism really is and know for themselves that which it is not. I have faith in this intelligent body of delegates and I believe that you will decide this question aright. I recommend action upon this important matter, and urge that something more than mere resolutions be adopted by this body in order to meet the call of the thinking minds of the world. Let us profit by this increase of interest in Spiritualism and concrete it for the benefit of our cause.

PSYCHICAL RESEARCH.

The Society for Psychical Research, organized a little more than one year ago by Professor Jas. H. Hyslop, has made no little progress during the past year. He is endeavoring to raise an endowment fund of $1,000,000, the income from which is to be used in furthering the purposes of the society. He reports the discovery of several mediums whose powers he considers to be equal, at least, and in some instances superior, to those possessed by Mrs. Piper. It is reported that $75,000 are already in the treasury of the society as a foundation for the proposed endowment fund. I recommend that we extend greetings to this distinguished body of scientists and pledge them our aid in every undertaking that may add to the sum total of human knowledge.

STATE ASSOCIATIONS.

There are now twenty-two State Spiritualist Associations in the United States. Maine, Nebraska and Rhode Island have accomplished little or nothing during the past year. The first named is showing signs of renewed activity, and may under the leadership of its able president, Mark A. Barwise, be restored to a high degree of usefulness. The other two scarcely more than exist on paper. The remaining nineteen State organizations have, for the most part, done good work during the past year. No doubt the Convention will hear at length from them when the reports of their delegates are presented. I feel that this branch of our work needs strengthening and most earnestly recommend that ways and means be adopted by which the State work can be improved and new organizations formed. I am especially pleased to call your attention to the work of the State Associations of Illinois and Minnesota before the Legislatures last winter. The results demonstrated the value of a strong, active State Association more than has ever been made apparent in any previous year. I recommend considerate attention to the reports of all States and urge the delegates to take such steps as will prove their interest in this line of work.

THE CAMPS.

The reports received from the various camp meetings in the United States indicate successful seasons for the majority of them, although, with very few exceptions, there has been a decided falling off in attendance. It is of interest to note the fact that twenty-three camp meetings have gone out of existence since 1895. There are now thirty-two working camp meeting associations in the United States, including the winter camp in Florida. Your president is inclined to think that the present number can be reduced with profit to the cause as a whole and to the camp meetings themselves. A serious question has arisen in the minds of many Spiritualists as to whether camp meetings are a source of strength or of weakness to our movement. A calm, considerate discussion of this proposition on the floor of this Convention might result in throwing a great deal of light upon this subject.

I visited seven camp meetings during the past season, at six of which the N. S. A.'s claims were presented to the people. Onset, Massachusetts, assigned us a special day on its official program, on which occasion our secretary acted as our special representative. At the other five camps to which I have referred, the people responded to the special appeals made by me and contributed generously to both our general and pension funds. If sufficient interest could be aroused in the work of the N. S. A. to induce all camp meetings in the United States to assign this organization special days on their program, it is probable that great good would thereby be obtained. I recommend that the incoming secretary be instructed to secure such special days at all these camps, and that letters of thanks be sent to the managers of those that have favored the N. S. A. the present year.

LOCAL SOCIETIES.

I shall not weary you by any extended reference to this most important branch of our organic work. I have referred to it in all my annual messages during the past fourteen years, and I can only repeat what I have said from year to year with regard to this vital issue. There are now 467 organizations possessing real structural form in the United States. I would not dare say that they are all actively at work. 216 others have been organized during the past ten years and chartered by the N. S. A., but they have either disbanded or fallen into a state of "inocuous desuetude." There are 225 gatherings of a nondescript character that center about the personality of some medium or manager that cannot be recognized as regular organizations, having no membership or boards of control. Something must be done to change this distressing condition and infuse new life into the people residing in the communities where these societies once existed. Local societies are the primary units upon which the State and National Associations rest. Weakness in the foundation means a corresponding weakness in the entire structure. Let me urge this body of delegates to do something to remedy the distressing state of things now obtaining in this special field. Resolutions will not do. Action is necessary. I recommend that a special hour be set aside for the consideration of this question and plead with you, one and all, not to follow the example of past Conventions by adjourning without doing something to remedy the crying ills pertaining to local work.

N. S. A. WORK.

The N. S. A. has moved steadily along over the roadway of active endeavor throughout the past year. Its officers have endeavored to carry out the orders of the last Convention to the best of their ability, and will place the results of their labors before you for acceptation or rejection. Many of the activities of former years were abolished by direct vote of the delegates of the Chicago Convention, hence the enterprises of the N. S. A. have not been as numerous as in previous years. The correspondence of both your president and secretary has largely increased, which, in itself, is another proof of popular interest in the subject of Spiritualism. Field work outside of the camp meetings was abolished at the Chicago Convention, hence there is nothing to report along this line. The union of several minor offices was effected with a view to lessening expenses with a hope that the influences of the N. S. A. would not be diminished thereby. The results will be made known to you by the different committees to which various matters will be referred, hence I need not discuss them here. I feel, however, that many improvements can be made that will result in good to our cause in all departments of its thought, and especially to the N. S. A. as its chief representative. I shall, therefore, recommend action to that end. I therefore respectfully call your attention to the following paragraphs with the hope of interesting you, one and all, in their subject matter.

MISSIONARY WORK.

The plan of missionary work was radically changed at the Chicago Convention. Your trustees were directed to appoint only one missionary at large. This position was tendered to Rev. E. W. Sprague, who could not accept the office. It was then decided to make your president the only missionary for the current year. No special effort has been made during the past twelve months to organize local or State societies by any representative of the N. S. A. Repeated calls from various sections of the country have been made for missionary work and its great importance warrants me in laying special emphasis upon it at this time. I need not argue the benefits to be derived from well-directed missionary efforts. I believe they are apparent to every delegate on this floor. I respectfully urge upon you the necessity of reengaging in missionary work. I ask that the plans followed in past years be abandoned, and that our missionary enterprises be confined to combinations with the various State associations, if possible, or to such communities as promise good results from the short-circuit method. I am utterly opposed to missionary work at large, or to the organization of numerous societies to leave them to pass out of existence after a single visit. I recommend the thoughtful consideration of this question, and, if necessary, the assignment of a special hour for its discussion.

THE HISTORY OF SPIRITUALISM.

The historian's office, that of the editor at large, and missionary at large, were united in one, and your official board was directed to select some person to fill the same. Their choice fell upon your president, and in view of that fact this special reference to the history of Spiritualism is now made. For several years previous to 1906 Mr. Lyman C. Howe had been the historian of our movement. The work that he has done is yet in his hands, but, as historian, your president has undertaken to do that which time and strength would permit him to do in this special field of endeavor. I have gone over more than a century of civil and religious history to determine certain facts that I felt would be of moment to an accurate account of the progress of Spiritualism. I shall be able to turn over to my successor a manuscript of about 25,000 words, and certain notes that may be of use to him. Let me call your attention to the fact that the writing of a truthful history involves an immense amount of study. The historian is obliged to carry a great many things in memory, or to depend upon such notes as may quicken his mind at the moment of writing. The work is difficult and should receive the undivided attention of one person. To do this work as it should be done, your historian ought to have an assistant. It is useless, however, to argue this question in this report. Other interests require large outlays and are making heavy drafts upon our treasury. The history, to my mind, is one of the paramount needs of the hour. I urge the continuation of this branch of our work in a wholly independent manner, and respectfully recommend that it be placed in the hands of someone who can devote his whole time to the work. Our aged veteran workers are rapidly passing away. Their reminiscences necessarily form a very large part of the history of our movement. They must be consulted while in bodily form. Let us act upon this important matter and make it possible for the history to be written as it should be with due regard to truth. It cannot be done in one year, nor yet in two years. I ask you to bring your best thought to this matter, and respectfully request you to take such action as will bring forth better results during the coming year.

EDITOR AT LARGE.

I began work as your editor at large in December, 1906. Very few articles were required at my hands during that month and the one following. Beginning with February, 1907, almost daily demands were made upon me for articles in defense of our movement, or in correction of misleading statements concerning it. I subscribed to a clipping bureau, through the instrumentality of which I was able to keep in touch with everything that was said for and against Spiritualism by the secular papers of the United States, Canada and Europe. Interested friends of our movement sent me almost as many as I received from the Bureau. A conservative estimate of the number received is the one given earlier in this report. Articles from my pen have found their way into the columns of the secular press of 27 States of the Union and two of the Canadian provinces. I have also written for all the Spiritualist papers and tried to keep our own people informed with regard to the progress of our cause. I feel that the work of the Editor at Large should be continued another year, and I recommend action accordingly. If the historian be given an assistant, this special work can be placed in the hands of that officer with no loss to our movement as a whole.

THE LYCEUM.

I regret that I can only report progress in this very important branch of our work. Our National Superintendent, Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, entered into the work with great earnestness at the opening of her official term. She met with but little encouragement from the various lyceums and from the officers of our local societies. I believe that there are but 34 lyceums in existence in the United States. Our superintendent did her best to come into direct touch with them all and sought by every means in her power to organize new ones wherever there was a promise of success. The removal of her husband to British Columbia forced her to resign her position after a few months' service. She filed her report with our National secretary and placed in the hands of that officer all papers that were in her possession. No doubt our secretary will make special reference to this same subject. I have only to add that your official board did not choose a successor to Mrs. Gillespie, deeming it best to hold this work in abeyance until the assembling of this Convention. May I urge this matter upon you with respectful emphasis? This branch of our work has been neglected in bygone years, and will, I fear, continue to languish in influence and power unless something is done at this Convention to infuse new life into the lyceum movement. Its importance must be apparent to you all. I recommend action, not talk, and ask you, once more, to solve this problem correctly by your votes at this time. I hope someone on this floor will be able to explain to us why the lyceum work has flourished in England and deteriorated in America.

THE LATEST WORD OF SPIRITUALISM.

Some years ago, under what was known as the "Pruden Resolution," your president was directed to solicit articles from the pens of representative Spiritualists upon the various important subjects that make up Spiritualism as a whole. This resolution was reaffirmed at the Convention at Minneapolis in 1905. Your president reported progress at our last annual gathering in Chicago and asked for further time, which was readily granted. I am obliged to report that I have failed to secure manuscripts bearing upon materialization, trumpet manifestations, table tippings, Bible Spiritualism, the rappings, and several other phases of phenomena. If this body of delegates should decide to have this work published as originally planned, the omission of any reference to these special topics would be a subject of remark and of keen regret to many people. I have some twenty manuscripts in hand from the ablest minds in our ranks, and I trust that some use will be made of them during the coming year. The transition of several of our noted workers to whom some of these subjects have been assigned makes it impossible for us to receive anything from them, as they had not prepared their manuscripts prior to their taking leave of earth. I again report progress and recommend that this work be continued by the incoming president under instructions to secure authoritative papers upon all of the subjects named with further directions to the board of trustees to have same published in book form.

THE FEDERATION OF LIBERAL RELIGIOUS BODIES.

At the Convention of 1905 your president was directed to enter into correspondence with the officials of the various liberal organizations in America with a view to the formation of a National Federation of Liberal Religions in America. He was also directed to correspond with the representatives of local and State Spiritualist societies and with the ministers of our faith to see if they would favor such a step and assist in the work incident upon the organization of such an association. In 1906 your president reported progress and asked for further time. I am now able to report that all the liberal religious bodies in America, with the exception of the Christian Scientists, the Swedenborgians, and Theosophists, were heartily in favor of such a federation. All local Spiritualist societies were likewise in favor of the movement, with three exceptions, as were all the Spiritualist Ministers who replied to my letters of inquiry, again with three exceptions. The Christian Scientists and Swedenborgians declined outright to have anything to do with the movement, while the Theosophists paid no attention to my letters. The American Secular Union and Free Thought Federation was especially kind in its reply to my letter of inquiry and very courteous in its acceptance of the invitation. I am inclined to believe that the intent that prompted action in this direction is fully met in the International Federation of Liberal Religions that has been in existence for some twelve years. Its last meeting was held in Boston in September of this year, at which distinguished men and women from all quarters of the globe were present. It remains for us to request permission to join this distinguished and most representative body, or to drop the matter altogether. I recommend union with the Federation in question.

THE TEMPLE FUND SOCIETY.

At our last National Convention an organization bearing the title "The Temple Fund Society" was organized and has been incorporated in harmony with the law during the past year. Rev. George W. Kates, of Pennsylvania, is the able and efficient president, while Mrs. Carrie H. Mong, of Indiana, is the capable secretary. This society has chartered with the N. S. A. and is now one of its working auxiliaries. Your attention will be called to the results of its labors during the present Convention when the executive officers make their yearly reports. A special meeting in the small hall has been appointed for its annual convention, to which all who are interested in temple buildings are cordially invited. The name of this society defines its purpose, and it certainly will appeal to all Spiritualists who believe it best for local societies to have homes of their own. I recommend this organization and its work to your thoughtful attention.

DEFINITION OF TERMS.

The Chicago Convention directed your president to appoint a committee on Definition of Terms to report at the present Convention. This committee consisted of Hon. Chas. R. Schirm, of Maryland, W. A. Willing, of Iowa, Geo. W. Kates, of Pennsylvania, Mrs. Georgia G. Cooley, of Illinois, and Miss Elizabeth Harlow, of Ohio. The report of this committee has in part been placed before the Spiritualists of America by its able chairman, Mr. Schirm, through the columns of the Spiritualist papers. Its presentation to the public was timely, for it has given you as delegates an opportunity to decide as to your wishes regarding this matter and I trust that by your votes you will place the seal of your approval upon this report, with such amendments as the Convention may, in its wisdom, deem necessary. The adoption of this code of definitions, or some other, is a necessity, from the fact that the statutes of the different States require something of this sort in order to give our movement its just dues under the law. I recommend action of a decisive character upon this important matter and urge you further to append to this report a glossary that shall include the special words that make up the peculiar vocabulary of our people. Intelligent men and women are frequently compelled to blush with shame over the misuse of some of our simplest words, as, for instance, soul and spirit, which are used interchangeably as synonymous. I further recommend that our committee be requested to go over the glossary prepared by Andrew Jackson Davis and published by him in his great work entitled "Answers to Important Questions;" also the one prepared by Hudson Tuttle and published by me in the columns of The Banner of Light nearly ten years ago, and draw therefrom a complete code suitable for pocket use by our speakers and mediums.

ORDINATION.

No extended reference to this subject is necessary at this time in view of the fact that every delegate knows that many abuses have grown up under the cover of this term. Their correction and the discovery of a remedy for existing ills are duties devolving upon this Convention. Several unworthy and not a few incapable persons have been ordained to our ministry during the past year. I feel that this Convention should take some action looking to the better enforcement of our own Usages. Your executive officers have exercised every possible care in their dealing with this question but have been misled by the representations of local bodies which have on two or three occasions issued Ordination Sanction to parties who should not have received the same. Our rules either mean something or nothing. If they mean something, let us enforce them. If they mean nothing, let us repeal them and adopt some that do. The time has gone for blatant and insufferable self-conceit to exploit themselves from our pulpits. I trust that the Convention will in its wisdom take sharp, decisive action with regard to this matter, so that Spiritualists will no longer stand as apologists for some of those who represent them as public teachers. I recommend that this question be considered in open convention and the facts, whatever they are, placed before us in their true light.

PHENOMENA.

No new or striking phenomenon has made its appearance during the past twelve months. The twenty-eight clearly-defined phases of mediumship enumerated by Andrew Jackson Davis have all been in evidence throughout the year and many valuable lessons have been deduced therefrom. Phenomena are as valuable as they ever were, and every member of the board of trustees of the N. S. A. is a friend to all genuine psychic manifestations. Phenomena are challenges to the understandings of men to induce them to go in search of the realities of the invisible spheres. They are evidences that prove to us that our loved ones survive the change called death. Theirs is a high and holy office. Accursed indeed is he or she who would counterfeit these things of God and prostitute them to selfish ends. I recommend that this Convention go on record as demanding that a line of cleavage be drawn between the true and the false, the genuine worker and the base counterfeiter. Of all the people in the world, the Spiritualists are the only ones who are qualified to speak on this question, and if they are not qualified to act and refuse to become so, then they must not complain, if this precious truth be taken away from them and given into the hands of those who are worthy of its custody.

THE LEGAL STATUS OF SPIRITUALISM.

In his defense of the will of the late Frederick Fickey, Jr., of Baltimore, Md., our able brother, Hon. Chas. R. Schirm, prepared a comprehensive brief covering what might be termed "The State of the Art," or giving a resume of all cases in which Spiritualism has appeared in the courts of the land and the decisions rendered at the several trials. In view of the fact that legal difficulties are constantly arising, involving the validity of the wills of departed Spiritualists and the sanity of those who are living, I am of the opinion that this brief of Mr. Schirm's should in some way be secured by this Association, brought down to date and published in pamphlet form for distribution among our people. Several calls for such a document have been made during the past year upon the home office, and it is the duty of this Convention to see to it that the N. S. A. is enabled to do the needed work in this direction. Mr. Schirm has already published this most excellent paper in the columns of the Spiritualist press, and it is highly probable that he would be willing to have it used in the manner mentioned and assist the Association in appending to it all cases involving other matters than the testamentary disposition of property. I recommend action in harmony with the foregoing suggestions.

AN OFFICIAL ORGAN.

I have been urged by several representative Spiritualists, some of whom are delegates upon this floor, to call your attention to this special topic in a separate paragraph. It is held that the N. S. A. should have an organ of its own issued from headquarters, setting forth the advantages to be gained through co-operative effort and to acquaint our people with the work performed by the National body in all its varied departments. It was said that this paper should be so planned and conducted as not to interfere with any journal now in existence, but to devote its every energy to the special needs of our cause as represented by the N. S. A. I place this matter before you without recommendation, feeling assured that your decision will be just and right, whatever it may be.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS.

In view of the marked increase of interest in Spiritualism throughout the world during the past year, it occurs to me that the time is ripe for holding an International Congress of Spiritualists for the purpose of forming a complete federation of our brethren in all parts of the world. I recommend that the incoming secretary be instructed to open correspondence with the representatives of our denomination in every quarter of the globe, asking them to unite with the N. S. A. in calling an International Congress to be held in the early summer of 1908, on the supposed sixtieth anniversary of the advent of Spiritualism in its present form, either in Paris or London.

THE PENSION FUND.

You will hear in detail regarding this important branch of our work from our efficient secretary, Mrs. Longley. Permit me to anticipate her report in part by asking you to make this matter a personal one to every delegate before me. We are now paying out $160 per month to our aged and indigent speakers and mediums who have no other income than that which they receive from the N. S. A. Our pension fund is being rapidly depleted. Contributions to it have been few in number and very small in amount. Every name added to our list is, of course, an added draft upon this fund. We have several applications pending before the official board that we dare not grant until this Convention shall have determined what shall be done in the premises. If no new names are added to our pension list, the fund on hand will probably last about twenty months. If we take on those whom we know to be in actual need, the money will go that much quicker. If you desire this activity maintained, then the fund must be increased to proportions that will enable your official board to extend the pension to those who are worthy when proper evidence as to their needs is presented to the home office. I urge you to adopt some plan by which the fund may be made a permanent institution, returning an income to itself, anomalous as that proposition may seem. When such workers as Prof. J. S. Loveland, now 90 years of age, is placed on the waiting list because of the conditions of our funds, it is time that the Spiritualists of America were inspired to act, lest they be shamed in the eyes of all the world. I recommend that ways and means be devised by you as delegates to maintain this activity in an ever enlarging sphere of unselfulness.

AN ENDOWMENT FUND.

The Convention of last year instructed your official board to undertake the raising of an endowment fund of generous proportions for the sustentation of the N. S. A. The trustees endeavored to carry out the orders of the Convention. Appeals were issued to the country, both by letter and through the mediumship of the press, with the most discouraging results. Less than $300 have been received from all sources during the entire year. One-third of this amount was contributed by one friend in Texas. The necessity of having such fund properly invested becomes more and more apparent as the years go by, and the N. S. A. increases the scope of its work. This fund should not be less than $100,000 at the very outset. I appeal to you as loyal friends to Spiritualism to raise this fund. It can be done if each delegate present will but do his duty. I recommend the election of special agents to act as collectors in various sections of the country, who shall make personal appeals to their friends and acquaintances for donations to this worthy charity. These agents can be placed under bonds, if the Convention so elects, and every possible safeguard placed around them to protect the integrity of the N. S. A. I further recommend that these agents be compensated on the percentage plan, receiving, instead of a salary, let us say, twenty-five per cent of their gross receipts in return for time and labor expended. It is certain that unless something of this kind is done that the N. S. A.'s future as a working force in Spiritualism will be as naught. The income received from the renting of the three houses deeded to the N. S. A. by our late treasurer, about $90 per month, must go into the pension fund. This will not be half enough to meet the needs of that special activity. Let us have a large general fund upon the endowment plan safely invested at a reasonable rate of interest, and then the N. S. A.'s sphere of usefulness can be enlarged and its many activities carried on without any fear of financial disaster. Brothers and sisters, please do something more than talk regarding this matter. Action is necessary, as you will see when you come to consider the financial reports of our secretary and treasurer.

SPEAKERS' SALARIES.

I may be pardoned for introducing this subject into a convention of this kind. I deem it a matter of importance, otherwise I would not trespass upon your valuable time. When some of our ablest speakers and mediums receive only five, ten or fifteen dollars per Sunday for two lectures, something is radically wrong with our movement. We cannot expect scholarly men and women to come into our ranks to act as our representatives upon the platform. If a speaker lives in a city of 25,000 inhabitants, the above-named sums will not pay his rent, let alone provide food for his family and other necessities incident to home life. The N. S. A. cannot interfere in the management of its auxiliaries, but can aid them when it is necessary to preserve their work. The Convention, therefore, cannot dictate to the societies represented by you as delegates. I ask you to consider this matter to see if this great wrong cannot be righted. You cannot expect speakers and mediums to work in the factories or upon the streets as day workers, or in the homes as domestic servants, and then go into the pulpit on Sunday and give up-to-date, scholarly addresses. Let us at least try to induce our people to support their own religion instead of continuing the old method of obliging outsiders to do it for them. Conversation, concentration and consecration, are three things that Spiritualists should observe and practice. I recommend action accordingly.

CLERGY RATES AND CHURCH TAXATION.

It will please you as delegates to learn that special rates for clergymen are now a thing of the past. So many States adopted the two-cent mileage law that the Passenger Associations felt constrained to abolish all special tickets and passes, so that there is now a uniform rate of traffic for all patrons of the railroads. The clergymen of other denominations share the same fate as our ministers, hence there is no discrimination whatever shown in this matter. This Association and its president are under special obligations to F. C. Donald, Commissioner of the Central Passenger Association, Eben E. MacLeod, chairman of the Western Passenger Association, James Charlton, chairman of the Trans-Continental Association, and to J. E. Hannegan, Joint Agent of the Southwestern Association. I recommend that we extend to these gentlemen a hearty vote of thanks for the courtesy and kindness that they have extended to us as a people during all the years that we have had dealings with them and the organizations they ably represent. The abolition of special rates to clergymen should be followed by another much-needed reform work. I refer to a just and uniform rate of taxation for all church and ecclesiastical school property. I recommend that the Spiritualists of America place themselves on record as being in favor of the reform named.

THE MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE.

Let me refer briefly to the one school connected with our movement. It has made healthy growth during the past year and stands to-day at the very front as an institution of learning. The young people who are enrolled as students in the Morris Pratt Institute possess more than ordinary talent and will certainly be a credit to our platform when they shall have been advanced to our ministry. This school should receive the moral and financial support of every Spiritualist in America. I believe it has come to stay. I do not recommend any appropriation from our treasury at this time, because of the heavy drafts that have been made upon it during the past year in the regular conduct of its business affairs. I do recommend that each delegate make the Morris Pratt Institute a special object of interest when he returns to his home and send to its treasurer such sums as he and his friends can afford to lay upon the altar of education. Prof. A. J. Weaver, the principal of the Institute, serves without salary, as does his good wife who acts as assistant secretary and matron to the school. Such devotion to duty and to the principles of Spiritualism deserves more than a passing mention on the part of the Spiritualists of America. Let us give them our thanks in a substantial form, which form shall be practical aid to the school to which they are giving their very lives.

THE GOFF WILL.

From our honored vice-president, Dr. George B. Warne, we shall learn of the contest in the famous Goff will case in Michigan; also as to its present status. Up to date the decisions of the Supreme Court of Michigan have been in our favor, but the case has been ordered back to a jury trial; hence the ground must be traversed a second time ere a complete victory is ours. In round numbers the N. S. A. has spent about $2,500 in the defense of this will and it will take at least $1,000 more to carry the case through the County Court, and another $1,000 up to the supreme court of Michigan. As at present advised, I am decidedly in favor of continuing the contest up to the court of last resort, if necessary. The report of our vice-president, who has been the agent of the N. S. A. in this contest, may throw new light upon the subject and induce me to believe that further litigation should not be undertaken. The Spiritualists of Michigan have not raised more than $250 in the defense of this will case. The State Association is the beneficiary, yet its officers and supporters have not been able to procure funds to protect their own rights. The N. S. A. has done this work for them, and it remains for this body of delegates to reflect seriously upon the subject. We must either abandon the case or carry it through as above indicated. I believe that we are in the right and do not feel that we should yield until the Supreme Court of the United States informs us that the law is against us. I submit this matter for your consideration, recommending thoughtful action on your part.

POST OFFICE MISSION.

The distribution of tracts from the Home Office has been continued throughout the year by our faithful secretary, resulting in a great deal of good to the N. S. A., as well as to our cause at large. I feel that this branch of our work should be enlarged and continued during the coming year. I recommend that the incoming Board of Trustees be instructed to prepare additional expository tracts to be sent out with those already on hand. In this connection I also recommend that the history of the N. S. A. be brought down to date by the incoming president and his manuscript placed on file at the Home Office. Our Usages provide for the appointment of Ordination Commissions to conduct the services of ordination of our ministers in States where State Associations do not exist. No form for the guidance of these commissions has been providid. I recommend that the incoming Board of Trustees be instructed to go over the reports of the several Commissions now on file in the Home Office, select the one best suited for general use, have the same printed and placed in the hands of all Commissions that may hereafter be appointed. Repeated calls have been made the past year for a document of this kind, hence the recommendation.

FINANCE.

Upon examining the financial statements of the secretary and treasurer you will see that the N. S. A. has spent nearly $2,000 more than it has received during the past year. Its pension list alone has drawn almost that amount from the treasury. Other activities equally important had to be carried on, and the work paid for. Our people throughout the country have signally failed to contribute to the needs of our pensioners and to the N. S. A. as their legal representative and spiritual leader. I introduce this subject in a special paragraph with the hope that every delegate will make himself a committee of one to see to it that this organization is placed upon a sound financial basis. Recommendations are not necessary at this point in view of the fact that I have made several under other headings in this report. The future success and permanency of the N. S. A. depend upon the correct solution of the financial problem. It is our duty to solve that problem at this Convention.

THE INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONGRESS.

As everyone is aware, an International Peace Congress is now, and has for some weeks been, in session at The Hague, in Holland. One of our best known and ablest workers, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, was a delegate to that body and bore credentials from the N. S. A. as its direct representative. Her report will be made to this body later in this Convention. The importance of this work cannot be overestimated and I trust that as delegates you will enact such legislation as will prove to the world that all Spiritualists are believers in international peace. I recommend that the Committee on Resolutions be instructed to prepare a special manifesto on the subject, to be distributed in printed form, gratuitously, among the Spiritualists of America.

REFORM WORK.

No doubt the Committee on Resolutions will have something to say upon the reform issues of the times. The importance of placing ourselves on record as favoring every humanitarian effort of whatever character will appeal to every delegate present. We cannot speak too emphatically upon the subject of child-labor in the mines and factories of the country, nor should there be any hesitancy in dealing with the question of prison reform and improvements in the care of the insane and other defective classes. We should also speak with no uncertain sound upon the subject of temperance, taking care to differentiate between temperance in all things and prohibition of one thing. I recommend that fraternal delegates be appointed by this Convention or by the incoming Board of Trustees, to all reform associations that shall hold conventions during the coming year. It is not enough to say that Spiritualism is reform, is temperance, is progression, but we, as Spiritualists must do something to prove these statements true. May I also add that I feel that this organization should send fraternal delegates to the Biennial Conclave of the Universalists' General Convention that is to assemble in Philadelphia on the 23d instant, and to the national gatherings of all liberal religious bodies, including, if you please, the Woman's Suffrage League, that are to be held during the next twelve months. I recommend action accordingly.

CLIPPING BUREAU.

In order to facilitate the work of the future historian of Spiritualism and to assist the editor at large in the discharge of his duties, I venture to recommend that the incoming Board of Trustees be instructed to subscribe to two of the best clipping bureaus in the nation, one in the East, and one on the Pacific Coast. These clippings should be placed in scrap-books under appropriate subheadings and kept on file at the Home Office. I believe this is a practical issue and trust that it will appeal to the good judgment of every delegate as a matter of moment to our cause.

MASS MEETINGS.

A few calls have been made during the past year for the holding of mass meetings at certain points in different States of the Union. Some were held with indifferent results. In past years they proved valuable aids to the N. S. A. and to our cause. Perhaps they should be left entirely in the hands of the State Associations, or to a union of forces of local societies in those States where no State organizations now exist. I make no recommendation regarding this matter, but leave it wholly to your own discretion as representatives of our movement.

MEDIUMSHIP.

Whatever legislation may be necessary on this subject can safely be left to this intelligent body of delegates without special recommendations from me. Permit me, however, to call your attention to the fact that the Legislatures of a majority of the States of the Union dealt with certain bills during the past winter that bore directly upon the rights of mediums to use their powers under the direction of the unseen intelligences who prompt them to action. In some instances these measures were prohibitive in character, and it was only by zealous efforts on the part of a few loyal Spiritualists that they were defeated. A few genuine mediums have been arrested and subjected to great ignominy when brought to trial. The trouble in Seattle, Washington, to which I referred last year, is yet unsettled, but the mediums then under arrest were tried and on two occasions acquitted. They are in trouble again, but there has been no call made upon the N. S. A for funds to aid in their defense. An itemized statement as to expenses incurred in former trials will be made to this Convention. As soon as Spiritualists discriminate between commercialism in Spiritualism, and Spiritualism as a religion, there will be no further trouble in respect to these matters. A proper definition of our terms will greatly aid our cause as a whole and be of untold benefit to our genuine mediums in making it possible for the courts to discriminate between genuine and counterfeit workers. We must speak in no uncertain way upon the subject of fortune telling and its concomitants. To defer action in this respect any longer would be an open confession of cowardice. We have delayed, temporized, apologized, covered up these matters altogether too long. Let us act and show the world that we stand only for that which is true and support only those mediums we know to be genuine in all their work. Let us not only denounce fraud, but let us also refuse to employ frauds, or countenance them on our platforms.

THEODORE J. MAYER.

On March 13 of this year our large-hearted, open-minded friend and brother, in the person of our treasurer, Theodore J. Mayer, returned to his home in the soul world after an earth visit of sixty-one years. For the second time in our history we are in convention assembled without his presence with us in bodily form. He was not present at the convention in Chicago in 1893, and is not with us in mortal as we assemble here to-day. For twelve years out of the fourteen that the N. S. A. has been in existence, he has served us as our treasurer without salary. His benefactions to our cause are known to you all and need no special reference at my hands to-day. He has completed his course, he has fought the good fight, he has finished his work and gone back to the home whence he came a little more than three score years ago. One of his last acts on earth was to draw a check in payment of the rent of this hall for the use of this convention. It was his last gift to the N. S. A. Let me send him a thought of gratitude for this favor and of brotherly love for his many other acts of kindness while he lived on earth. I recommend that our Committee on Resolutions be instructed to prepare a special memorial in honor of our arisen brother and that the same be spread upon the records of this Convention and published in all the Spiritualist papers in America.

NECROLOGY.

During the past year a large number of our foremost representatives have taken leave of earth. Some of them have been active workers for the N. S. A. ever since it came into existence, while others have labored for the cause as seemed to them best in the communities where they resided. Among those who have gone we may mention the names of Moses Hull, of Wisconsin; Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown and Captain W. H. Winn, of Texas; Hon. A. Gaston, of Pennsylvania; Mr. A. F. Melchers, of South Carolina, and General W. H. Parsons, of Illinois. We know that these good friends of our cause are not dead, but have taken the next progressive step in life; therefore we should congratulate them upon having attained a larger sphere of usefulness and of having gained a broader freedom in which to unfold their splendid soul powers. Let us remember them at their best, honor them for the good they have done, close up our ranks and go forward, doing better work for humanity because of our love for them. I ask that the Committee on Resolutions be requested to deal with this subject as may seem best to the members thereof.

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

The members of the Official Board have worked together in perfect harmony throughout the year. The vacancy caused by the transition of Treasurer Mayer was filled by the election of Mr. Cassius L. Stevens, of Pittsburg, Pa., who resigned as trustee to accept the post in question. The vacancy caused by his resignation was filled by the election of Mr. Francis A. Wood, of Washington, D. C., who has done excellent work as our trustee since his election at the April Board Meeting. The last convention selected Los Angeles, California, as the place of meeting for the convention of this year. Upon the urgent request of many influential Spiritualists, the friends in California kindly and generously relinquished their claim to the convention and left the selection of the place of meeting to your trustees. By unanimous vote Washington, D. C., was selected and notice given accordingly. I am convinced that the wisdom of this change will be apparent to every delegate as the work of the Convention progresses. Your trustees have acted in all matters according to their best judgment and in harmony with instructions given at the last Convention, so far as it was in their power to do so. Whatever departures therefrom there may have been were wholly due to unforeseen circumstances and to the exigencies of the times.

THE HOME OFFICE.

The work at the Home Office has been of the same high order of excellence that has been characteristic of our conscientious secretary ever since she assumed the position nine years ago. She has been promptness itself in the discharge of every duty and has labored with singleness of heart and devotion of soul for the best good of the N. S. A. She now announces her purpose to retire from office at the close of this convention. The Spiritualists of America little realize what they owe to that noble worker and generous-hearted woman, Mary T. Longley. As she goes from us let us assure her that she carries with her our earnest prayers for her future success in whatever field of labor she may elect to toil, and our soul-blessings for the good she has done our cause as a whole, and the N. S. A. in particular while she has been with us. All honor to her for the good she has done! Personally I am under great obligations to Mrs. Longley and her good husband for many favors received and I take this opportunity to extend to them both my most grateful thanks.

THE SPIRITUALIST PRESS.

The N. S. A. is under obligations to all the Spiritualist papers in America, to "Light" and the "Two Worlds" in England, and to "The Harbinger of Light" in Australia. Especially are we indebted to W. H. Bach, late of the "Sunflower," and Mr. J. R. Francis, of "The Progressive Thinker." Mr. Bach has opened his columns freely to communications from the Editor at Large and from the Home Office. I feel that he is entitled to our grateful thanks for the services he has rendered us and believe that he should receive an expression of our good will as he enters into his new field of endeavor. Very few Spiritualists in America realize what they owe to the intrepid and wide-awake editor of "The Progressive Thinker," Mr. J. R. Francis. He has fought valiantly for true Spiritualism and has dared to tell the truth with regard to the shams that have attached themselves to our movement. I recommend that a special vote of thanks be extended to him for the splendid work he has done for Spiritualism and the generous aid he has rendered this Association. Let us also remember "The Herald of Truth" and its editors and proprietors, Mr. H. C. Berry and Dr. W. A. Haley, also Mr. Frank Walker, the new proprietor of the "Sunflower." They are rendering the N. S. A. loyal support and are entitled to our grateful thanks.

CONCLUSION.

It remains for me now to surrender into your hands the great office you have entrusted to my care during the past fourteen years. Were I to presume to offer any suggestions with regard to the organic structure of the N. S. A., I should feel tempted to urge a change in the length of the official term for your Board of Trustees. Not more than one-third of its membership should retire at any given election. Prominent business men have referred to this matter and stated that the present method is a perpetual source of weakness to this organization. Nothing can be done to change the Constitution at this Convention, but a resolution can be introduced here providing for the making of the change at our annual gathering in 1908.

To the Spiritualists of America who have honored me with their confidence through the changing events of more than a decade of years I return grateful thanks. There is need of consecration to the principles underlying Spiritualism as never before. I appeal to my brethren in these closing words to rally as one man around the banner of organization and plant it upon the ramparts of assured success. There are signs of promise in the skies, but there are also storm clouds that must be broken up and scattered ere those promises can be realized in everyday experience. The future of Spiritualism depends upon the individual Spiritualist. It is for you and for me, then, to build so wisely that the Spiritualists to-morrow will have cause to thank us for our sacrifices. Spirit communion is a precious truth, but it is only one phase of our great movement. With only the phenomenal side upon which to build our temple, there would be no symmetry in the grand superstructure. Science, philosophy and religion as our corner stones, our temple will withstand the heats of the summer sun and defy the heaviest frosts of the northern clime. Our movement is safe, but our people need re-birth into the light of a loftier spirituality. Let us work together to make our N. S. A. a finite means to a divine end whose ultimate purpose shall be the revelation of the Infinite enthroned in the universe, whose everlasting arms are around, about, above and below us all.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President N. S. A.
Washington, D. C.

Report of Committee on President's Report

Report of the Committee on the Report of Harrison D. Barrett, President of the National Spiritualists' Association.

Your committee desires to report that it has carefully read and considered the comprehensive and admirably written report of the president. Much of the report is devoted to a recital of conditions and circumstances connected with the cause of Spiritualism in this and foreign countries. This part of the report your committee has regarded as a means of instruction and intended to give a bird's-eye view of the entire spiritualistic field, and therefore does not deem it necessary to advert further to that part of the report. Certain portions of the report are within the proper province of the Committee on Resolutions, and they have already been recommended by this body to that Committee. Again, there are sections in the president's report which disclose evils for which this committee is unable to recommend a remedy, and it has therefore refrained from making suggestions which it believes will be entirely futile.

The purpose of your committee has been to reduce this report to as narrow a compass as possible consistent with a due regard for essential matters.

STATE ASSSOCIATIONS.

The Convention at Chicago last year made some wholesome recommendations in regard to the organization of State Associations, and the method of conducting their business. Little more than suggestions can now be made in respect to this subject; nevertheless your committee wishes to impress upon those interested in State associations the advantages to be derived from uniform organization in offering resistance to legislation adverse to mediumship. The experiences of the Illinois and Minnesota State Associations are a valuable source of instruction.

CAMPS.

Your committee recommends that the secretary endeavor to secure a N. S. A. day at each of the Spiritualist camps of the country in the coming season, and that the secretary send letters of thanks to those camps which have already extended us this courtesy and support.

LOCAL SOCIETIES.

The matter of placing local societies on a footing where they will be able to offer the greatest resistance to opposing forces and to protect their mediums against unjust prosecution is a matter of vital importance. The nearest that your committee can come to offering a solution without making it obligatory is to recommend the incorporation of local societies under the general laws of the various States and the conduct of the business of the society by a board of trustees. For the greater protection of the mediums we recommend the adoption of the following form of certificate containing an accurate description of the phase or phases of mediumship, to be issued to worthy mediums by the State Association, where one exists, otherwise by the N. S. A., believing that a commission of this kind will clearly bring mediums within the Constitution of the United States:

MISSIONARY'S CERTIFICATE.

THIS IS TO CERTIFY, that.....
.....is a member of the (here insert the name of the church or society) of the city of.....county of....., and State of....., a religious corporation, incorporated under the laws of the State of....., and chartered by the (here insert the name of the State Association or the name of the National Spiritualists' Association of the United States of America), a body corporate incorporated under the laws of the State or district of.....and that..... has passed a satisfactory examination before the Board of Trustees of the said church or society as a Spiritual medium; and it is further certified that.....possesses the following phase or phases of mediumship, to-wit:..... and that.....is deemed worthy and qualified to hold public seances or religious meetings, and to give private spirit communications in accordance with the rights and religious belief of the Spiritualists' denomination; and it is further certified that .....has been appointed a Missionary for the period of.....from the date hereof, and is authorized and directed to solicit and collect contributions for the support of missionary work of said denomination.

Witness the hand and seal of the president of the Board of Trustees of the said (here insert the name of the State Association or the National Spiritualists' Association), duly attested by the secretary, under its corporate seal, this....day of....1907.

Secretary.

(Here insert the articles of belief adopted by the National Spiritualists' Association.)

This certificate and the appointment as Missionary herein mentioned are accepted by me with the clear understanding and agreement on my part that they may be revoked at the pleasure of the said religious corporation by which the same was bestowed, without the assignment of any reason for the revocation.

.....
Signature of Spiritual Missionary.

MISSSIONARY WORK.

This is a troublesome subject. If we had ample financial means the trouble could easily be obviated. In the absence of such resources we recommend that all State Associations be urged to introduce circuit work, and where already introduced, to promote it by the use of local talent. Where there are no State Associations, we believe the matter can be safely left to the discretion of the Board of Trustees.

HISTORY OF SPIRITUALISM.

This most important matter has already dragged along its weary length through many years, and not until the beginning of this convention have we received anything in the form of tangible results. The appointment of Harrison D. Barrett as historian was a move in the right direction, and we recommend that in view of Brother Barrett's refusal to again be candidate for the presidency of the N. S. A., that the incoming Board be instructed to appoint him historian and editor-at-large with a salary of $1,000 per year, and that the said board provide him with an assistant at such time, and for such compensation as it may seem advisable.

THE LATEST WORK ON SPIRITUALISM.

Your committee recommends that in the event of the appointment of Harrison D. Barrett as historian and editor-at-large, that the subject matter under the "Pruden Resolution" be referred to Brother Barrett as a matter involved in the history of Spiritualism.

FEDERATION OF LIBERAL RELIGIOUS BODIES.

Your committee recommends that the N. S. A., through its president, make application for membership in the International Federation of Liberal Religions.

DEFINITIONS OF TERMS.

Your committee recommends the continuance of the Committee of Definitions of Terms, with instructions to turn over to the Board of Trustees, from time to time, the results of its labors, and that the Board be instructed to have printed in pamphlet form the matter turned over to it, so that it may be generally distributed.

PHENOMENA.

Your committee desires to reiterate what is well known to every Spiritualist and to every other person who knows anything about Spiritualism, to-wit: that the phenomena produced through mediumship are the foundation and ground work of our philosophy, and, that being true, it is necessary to eliminate, to the best of our ability, from our cause every person and thing which tends to discredit the high mission of Spiritualism or to becloud the fair fame of those true and noble souls that stand between the two worlds and perform the holy office as message bearers. Therefore we recommend that neither the N. S. A. nor any local society, nor any officer of either of them, sanction the employment or the endorsement of any medium who debases the high calling of mediumship, and that they visit upon the heads of pseudo mediums, who steal the livery of heaven to serve the devil in, their relentless denunciation.

THE LEGAL STATUS OF SPIRITUALISM.

Your committee begs leave to state that Brother Schirm has entered into an agreement with Mr. E. W. Vanderbilt, whereby funds will be provided for publishing the articles on "Spiritualism and the Law," by the editor of The Progressive Thinker, who has already, at his own expense, prepared the plates for this publication.

OFFICIAL ORGAN.

Your committee believes that the matter of an establishment of an Official Organ will be solved some time in the near future, but that nothing can be done at this time to force the matter.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS.

Your committee respectfully disagrees with the recommendation that the N. S. A. set on foot measures for calling an International Congress to be held in 1908 in Paris or London, and respectfully suggests that for the present there be a thorough concentration of effort upon our interests in this country.

PENSION FUND.

Your committee recommends that the secretary of the N. S. A. solicit the local societies to devote the proceeds of one seance or meeting annually to the Pension Fund, and that the State Association be requested to make a similar solicitation of their affiliated societies. Your committee begs leave to suggest the probable feasibility of establishing a certain Sunday in the year for taking up collections in the various societies for this fund, and that this day be designated as "Gratitude Day," and that a form of services be provided bearing upon the virtue of gratitude.

ENDOWMENT FUND.

In addition to the many forms of soliciting contributions, your committee desires to recommend as a means of building up the Endowment Fund, a simple plan which has been used with marked effect by other organizations. We propose that the Board of Trustees secure large lots of novelty albums arranged for the insertion of dimes to the extent of $5.00; that these albums be sold at about cost price to local societies to be distributed by them to worthy members to solicit aid in this simple way, the albums when filled to be sent to the headquarters of the N. S. A. and the committee suggests that it might be a good plan to have a suitable inscription on the outside of the album which will at once explain the purpose of its presentation by the solicitor. This plan, we believe, can be taken up by the young people, and will be more prolific of results than any other.

Some Glimpses of Occultism ANCIENT AND MODERN

BY C. W. LEADBEATER

The following subjects are treated in a most able manner;

ANCIENT:—Theosophy and Christianity; The Ancient Mysteries; Buddhism.

MODERN:—The Unseen World; The Rationale of Mesmerism; Telepathy and Mind Cure; Magic, White and Black; The Use and Abuse of Psychic Powers; Vegetarianism and Occultism; How to Build Character; The Future of Humanity; The Gospel of Wisdom.

Well bound in Cloth, with silver back and side stamp. 400 pages. Price, $1.50.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette:

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Securely packed, and sent postage paid from the manufacturer, for $1.00. Address

THE OTHER SIDE OF DEATH

Scientifically Examined and Carefully Described.

BY C. W. LEADBEATER.

A Volume of 500 large pages, treating very interestingly of Life, Death and Immortality, Clairvoyance, Spirit Phenomena, Etc, as viewed by an acknowledged and cultivated exponent of Theosophy. Price, $1.50.

INVISIBLE HELPERS

A Very Excellent and Comprehensive Work.

One from the Theosophical Standpoint.

This work, "Invisible Helpers," written by C. W. Leadbeater, the remarkable English psychic (whose lectures have graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker), is certainly very interesting and suggestive throughout. It treats of the "Universal Belief in the Invisible Helpers," the "Angel Story," "Work Among the Dead," "What Lies Beyond." The work is neatly bound in cloth, and the price is 55 cents.

HEROES AND HERO WORSHIP, AND THE HEROIC IN HISTORY.

By Thomas Carlyle.

A remarkable book by a remarkable man. Marked by terse strength and vigor, deep thought, philosophy and dramatic tensity of earnestness. A notable literary effort. A fine edition in cloth. Price 50 cents.

A Conspiracy Against the Republic

By Charles B. Waite, A. M., author of "History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200," etc. Price, paper, 25 cents.

THE GOFF WILL.

Your committee has received in detail an account of the work done and funds expended in defense of the Goff will, and though it does not believe it good policy to rehearse these matters now, it nevertheless recommends an endorsement and confirmation of what has already been done by the Board of Trustees, and that the Board be further empowered to render such further aid in that contest as in its judgment may seem wise.

POST OFFICE MISSION.

In the opinion of your committee, one of the most effective means of reaching the minds of reasonable men and women is through the post office. Persons will read in secret what they will not listen to from the lips of our advocates. It would be a splendid adjunct to our work if it were possible to establish in connection with every society a mailing bureau, and where such bureaus are already established we would suggest the plan of having the members of the societies place in a box provided for the purpose the names and addresses of such persons as they believe to be in a receptive mood in regard to Spiritualism, and also the names of those persons who publicly or privately show marked opposition to our cause, with such notes of the characteristics of the persons to be reached made on the slip, to the end that the most appropriate literature be sent to all.

FINANCE.

This committee recommends the adoption of the provision for increasing the per capita tax to $1 without increasing the fee to be paid by State Associations for each affiliated society. This we believe to be the most feasible plan for increasing our finances, and one that will supply the needed funds for the general treasury.

REFORM WORK.

Your committee concurs in the recommendation that fraternal delegates be appointed at this Convention or by the Board of Trustees to all conventions of Reform Associations that shall be held during the year, and particularly recommends the appointment of fraternal delegates to the Biennial Conclave of the Universalists' General Convention that is to assemble in Philadelphia on the 23d instant.

CLIPPING BUREAU.

Your committee recommends the adoption of the recommendation that the incoming Board of Trustees be instructed to subscribe to two of the best clipping bureaus, one in the East and one in the West, and that these clippings be placed in scrap books under appropriate headings and kept on file at the headquarters.

MASS MEETINGS.

This matter, your committee believes, should be left entirely to the judgment of the Board of Trustees.

MEDIUMSHIP.

Matter pertinent to this subject has already been brought to the attention of the Convention in this report, and yet your committee takes the position that the N. S. A. is essentially a religious body, and while we recognize the value of spirit communications bearing purely upon material affairs, yet we do not deem it within the province of the N. S. A. to defend commercial mediumship; at the same time, we do not believe it fair and just to class as "commercial mediums" those mediums who incidentally with their spiritual communications give advice upon material matters to those who are seeking spiritual light and comfort, but who are in need of guidance in regard to worldly and material affairs.

THEODORE J. MAYER.

Your committee indorses in every particular the eulogy pronounced upon our late treasurer, Theodore J. Mayer, and recommends that the Committeee on Resolutions, to whom this subject is properly referred, be instructed to provide for a set of engrossed resolutions, to be properly framed, and hung upon the wall at the National headquarters.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

Your committee respectfully begs to recommend that there be no change made as to the time or method for electing members of the Board of Trustees. It is the opinion of this committee that when good, strong persons are elected to that Board they will be kept in office, and that if weak ones are elected, or for some reason members lose their interest or efficiency, they will be dropped. It is easier to retain good trustees annually than to get rid of bad ones who have a long lease of the office.

HOME OFFICE.

It must be a source of gratification to every member of this Convention to read the words of approval and commendation which have been bestowed by the president upon Mrs. Longley, our secretary, and her good husband, and your committee are gratified that the termination of her services are under such happy auspices as surround us to-day.

SPIRITUALISTS' PRESS.

Your committee most heartily recommends that this Convention, through the secretary, extend the profound thanks of this body to Mr. J. R. Francis, editor of The Progressive Thinker; to Wm. H. Bach, late editor of the Sunflower; to Frank Walker, present editor of the Sunflower; to H. C. Berry and Dr. W. A. Hale, editors of the Herald of Truth, and to the editors of the English publications, Light and The Two Worlds.

ADJUSTMENT OF COMPENSATION.

Under instructions from this Convention, this committee respectfully submits and recommends (1) the reduction of the secretary's salary to $1,100 per annum, with the proviso that the secretary occupy the premises at the headquarters, heretofore occupied by the secretary, and that the rental of said premises be fixed at $240 per annum, and one-half of the cost of light and fuel; (2) in conformity with a previous provision of this report, we recommend payment of $1,000 to the historian and editor-at-large, if he be Harrison D. Barrett; (3) we recommend the payment of a fixed salary of $500 to the president and his traveling expenses.

CONCLUSION.

We heartily endorse the words of President Barrett in which he forecasts with optimistic word-picturing the future of the cause of Spiritualism. We feel that the harmonious conditions under which this Convention was organized and has continued to work, augur well for the rapid expansion of the influence and working power of the National Spiritualists' Association. We appear to have entered upon a new era, in which business methods shall be fittingly united with true sentiment and lofty devotion. To the retiring president we extend our best wishes and our grateful thanks for all the good things he has done during his long incumbency, believing that in his new position, which seems to be assured, he will find needed physical rest and that mental activity so thoroughly congenial to his nature.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AMENDMENTS.

To the Officers and Delegates here Assembled:

We, your Committee on Amendments, as a whole do not favor the proposed change of Art. VII, Sec. 1, in reference to the increase of per capita tax from 25 cents to $1.00.

Also we do not favor a change of State dues to N. S. A. from $2.00 to $5.00, feeling such change would be disastrous to the interests of organized Spiritualism.

The following proposed amendment was submitted to your committee:

By-laws, Sec. 8, Art, 1:

Strike out the following words:—"after all other business of the Convention has been transacted"; substitute as follows:—"at 10:30 a. m. on the last day of the Convention"; and after the word "Officers" and before the word "in," the words "by written ballot" shall be inserted.

We, the committee, agree with the foregoing, except that we recommend that in place of 10:30 a. m. be substituted 3:00 p. m.

We, your committee, further recommend the following amendment of Art. VII, Sec. 2, By-laws, by striking out the word "or" after "lyceums" and before "charitable" and after the word "Associations" and before the word "and;" adding "or educational institutions".

Your committee further recommends that Art. IV of the Constitution be amended—

By adding the words in the following order:

Beginning with the year 1908 the treasurer and one trustee be elected for one year.

The secretary and one trustee for two years.

The vice-president and one trustee for three years.

Two trustees for four years.

And all terms shall be for four years in the order named, save the president, who shall be elected annually.

This being a change of the Constitution, it is understood that the same will be acted upon by the Convention of 1908.

Respectfully submitted,

OSCAR A. EDGERLY.
A. W. BELDEN.
MRS. J. P. WHITWELL.

MRS. MARTHA WOOLSEY.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PLACE OF MEETING NEXT YEAR.

Niagara Falls offers assembly room free. If we charge admission, it is free. Entertainment of music and decorations also provided. Hotel rates from $1 per day up.

Buffalo.—Hall free, if admission is charged. Hotel rates from $1 per day up.

Detroit.—Cordial invitation with no especial inducements.

Indianapolis.—Makes liberal offers. Hotel rates from $2 per day up.

Columbus, Ohio.—Makes liberal offers. Auditorium free of charge if no admission taken; $25 per day if admission taken.

Asbury Park, N. J.—Convention hall free. We appreciate this offer, considering that this city by the sea is such a religious atmosphere, realizing by this that they are at least in harmony with our excellent work.

Seattle, Wash.—Invited our Convention to be held in their city, 1909, in view of the coming exposition. We refer this to the Convention, as we consider it out of our power to act upon.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Your committee considers the offer from Buffalo from a financial standpoint the strongest.

Indianapolis, the next in strength, all things considered.

Crush Not a Flower.

Crush not a flower of faith or hope
That in another's heart may rise,
But let the perfumed petals ope
And waft their fragrance to the skies.

Say not 'tis vain of any dream
Or fancy of the human brain,
For out of it some lofty scheme
May ripen into golden grain.

Laugh not to scorn the humblest plan
A brother may have formed for good,
For angels deeper see than man—
It may be wise when understood.

Say not to any careworn heart,
Your cries will reach the goal you seek,
But act the kinder, nobler part,
Give strength and courage to the weak.

Say not of any neighbor's field,
He's planted where he should have sown,
For God is patient, and the yield,
Though rich or poor is all his own.

The National Spiritualists' Association.

Annual Report of the Secretary, Mrs. Mary T. Longley, for the Year Ending September 30, 1907.

To the Officers and Members of the National Spiritualists' Association in Convention Assembled:

Greeting:—

Mr. President and Co-Workers:—It gives me pleasure to herewith submit to this honorable body, the annual report of your secretary for the year ending September 30, 1907.

The work of the year at our headquarters in Washington has been pursued by your secretary under pleasant conditions, on the whole, and with such dispatch and fidelity as were possible to display. The usual routine of clerical business has been the rule, varied with many other duties and tasks that must of necessity come up for attention in the great affairs of a National organization.

An extensive correspondence—not only with our chartered societies, and the press, but also with a large number of inquirers and other individuals who write to our office for information and aid in their studies and labors, has been steadily maintained by your secretary, and thousands of letters have been sent out from the home office in the interest of Spiritualism at large, and of the N. S. A. and its objects as well as of its auxiliaries. In addition to these the usual quarterly circular letters and all necessary literature—including official notices and announcements have been mailed to our chartered societies, most of which have been received and kindly acknowledged. In cases where associations have failed to send us word of their change of officers or of locations, letters have been returned to us and in some instances we have been unable to find anyone who would deliver these writings to the proper parties to whom they belong. This is not the fault of your office but of those at the other end of the line who neglect to give the timely and proper notice of their doings—we have reason to think also that some of the societies have gone out of existence, but of which fact we have not been notified.

The Spiritual Press has kindly and generously published all the articles, appeals and statements sent to its columns by your secretary and we owe to the editors and managers of the same a debt of gratitude for the unfailing help which they have given to the N. S. A. and its officers; in this connection we may mention with profound appreciation, The Progressive Thinker, Sunflower, Lichtstrahlen, Reason, Occidental Mystic, and the latest comer into the field of Spiritualistic journalism, The Herald of Truth.

Our Free Library.

is in excellent condition and has been well attended, scores of readers have visited our rooms for the loan of books, and our work in attending to these alone, is of no small account—in point of time and labor expended upon it—it is a good work, freely given, and not only the humble residents of our city, but also many who occupy high places come to freely receive the blessings that our standard liberal and spiritualistic literature offers to them.

Visitors from far and near have been many at our headquarters; the present season has brought perhaps more than usual, owing to the Jamestown Excursions to Virginia, those Spiritualists who visit that great exposition wishing to stop over in the Capital City and among its sights and points of interest, taking in the Headquarters of the National Spiritualists' Association—the time and work given to the reception of the many callers and visitors to the home office, must be counted as a large part of the duties and official affairs of the secretary.

Charters.

The Temple Fund Association—National in scope and purpose—was organized at the N. S. A. Convention in Chicago, 1906; Rev. Geo. W. Kates was chosen President of that worthy association, and Mrs. C. H. Mong, secretary; shortly after Convention, an application for a charter was made to the N. S. A. by the Temple Fund Association and granted; in addition to this the following named societies have been granted charters by the N. S. A. Board—these are all local in character, and have concurrent jurisdiction—Tampa, Florida; Apalachicola, Florida; Salt Lake City, Utah; Haverhill, Mass.; and Philadelphia, Pa. Two lyceums have been granted charters, one in Pittsburg, Pa., the other in Fall River, Mass. Two societies that have been members of the N. S. A. for years, namely, one in Bradford, Pa., and one in Paterson, N. J., have been granted new charters at their request. Our valued auxiliary, the Spiritual Research Society of St. Louis, Mo., has surrendered its charter to the the N. S. A., but only to enter the State Association and it still continues in thought, purpose and spirit with us.

Auxiliaries.

Up to October 1st it is impossible to state the probable result of the financial returns to this Association from our auxiliaries, as many of them will not pay their dues till their delegates come to convention, bringing the money with them; this is the yearly practice, and we know of no way to change it; notices and appeals have no effect, and it is not right to deprive delegates of their seats in convention—as was suggested last year—who represent societies in good standing and who have the money with them to defray all obligations of their associations, to the N. S. A. But, we can state that a number of our auxiliaries, State and local, have paid their dues and discharged all obligations to the National body, and most of them have appointed their representatives to the annual assembly. The outlook is for a good and most important convention of large attendance and much enthusiasm. The annual reports are, as a whole, encouraging, inasmuch as most of them show that their societies have held their meetings, paid their bills and kept faithful to the Cause during the year; this has meant hard and continued work on the part of a few in each locality, but it shows commendable earnestness and zeal on the part of those loyal souls, which save the day for our beloved movement in their respective localities.

A number of societies have failed to report for more time than the N. S. A. is disposed to allow them, and there is no doubt that some of them will have to be suspended ere long; we have been lenient with them because it frequently happens that just as we think the day of grace has gone by for a society a letter suddenly comes containing back dues with statement of complete resurrection and an improvement in methods, all of which we are glad to note, and consequently these societies are restored to good standing in our work. Duty, however, calls me to mention that nearly every local society in Indiana that we organized has either withdrawn or has failed to answer letters from our office or to pay up back dues of more than two years; we believe that the greater part of them is extinct—some have gone into the Indiana State Association—the State Secretary reports twelve local societies in good standing in its jurisdiction, this leaves as many more unaccounted for in the State. Pennsylvania and other States also have derelict societies, and some means should be devised by our Convention by which we can ascertain the direct status of each locality in point of spiritual organizations. Your secretary has done what she could to learn of these societies, but in many instances without satisfactory results.

Our last convention ordered the printing of a list of the N. S. A. chartered societies for distribution to those who might call for them; this list was printed but it is not satisfactory because the addresses of the secretaries and presidents are changing from year to year and new societies come up and some of the old ones go down, therefore we cannot have an accurate list for three months at a time. the list published shows nineteen State Associations, and ninety-nine local—including camps, with one National, The Temple Fund. This list is misleading in view of the fact mentioned in the foregoing that many societies have failed to report this year that did not do so last season, but while at that time they had barely, perhaps come within the pale of the edict of suspension, this year—if they do not send in accounts, they will surely be amenable to this law.

State Associations.

The report of several of our State Associations is far from encouraging; Minnesota, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, California, Wisconsin, and one or two others give good and pleasing reports. Massachusetts, composed of lay members only, always sends encouraging accounts of its good work in holding successful mass meetings at different points, in doing much benevolent work and in meeting adverse measures in the State House with promptness and dispatch. New York shows a grand work accomplished. Connecticut is doing much, but needs encouragement from more of its people. Some State Associations have failed—up to the present to report. Texas states that only six societies in the whole State are holding meetings; Nebraska does not report at all; Iowa seems much in need of attention, and, in the opinion of your secretary, the N. S. A. Convention should give some real work and measures to the needs and purpose of State Associations. The subject of dues from the State Associations—on which an amendment will come before this assembly—seems to be an important one; while it is true that most of the State organizations send in their dues and contribute liberally to the National body, some of them are lax in this respect; when two dollars comes to this treasury from a great State as the dues of a State organization which elects two delegates to our Convention, one on its charter, the other in accordance we presume, with the $2.00 a rate rule for State bodies, it seems to us that some means should be devised whereby a suitable revenue should come to the N. S. A. from these organizations—especially in view of the fact that before these state bodies were chartered, or given exclusive jurisdiction, the many local societies in their territories then chartered with the N. S. A. direct, yielded a much larger sum to the annual receipts of the N. S. A.

Our finances are not so low that we have to become a bankrupt institution, nor are they so large that we can afford to stop begging for funds to sustain the work of this Asociation. The financial report of Treasurer and Secretary will give full information concerning expenditure, receipts and property, and we recommend them to your careful attention. A steady drain is made upon the exchequer of the Association—its propaganda work, and all its other works and objects call for a large annual outlay of funds, those of our people who think a great National Association can be properly conducted and maintained without the expenditure of a large amount of money are sadly mistaken, not to say picayunish in their ideas. But in this connection, we are happy to state that the largest item of exponse for the year just closed has been for the support and aid of our poor mediums from the Mediums' Relief Fund—a fact that we can point to with pride, that a charitable work, a benevolence to the needy and worthy poor, has been the largest expense to this institution during the year.

An Endowment Fund was started by President Barrett in the early part of the year, calling for contributions from dimes to dollars that a fund—in perpetuity—might be established that would yield an annual income to the N. S. A. for the support of its work. One hundred thousand dollars in popular subscriptions were asked for. A few tried and true Spiritualists responded with their donations, but up to this time but a little over two hundred dollars have been collected for this worthy purpose, one hundred of which was contributed by one noble woman in the west.

Our Pensioners.

Since last October, a number of new pensioners have been placed on the list for monthly payments; some of the old-time pensioners have passed away—Mrs. Hendee-Rogers of California, Mr. Abram James of New York. We have now fourteen regular pensioners on the list, namely, Mrs. A. L. Chamberlain, Dr P. C. Mills, Lyman C. Howe, Belle Bush, Mrs. Weeks-Wright, Dr. A. C. Williams, Mrs. A. Angell, Mrs. B. Cutler, Mrs. Myra Paine, Mr. and Mrs. A. Jaqua, Miss Ella Porter, Mrs Kate Hoskins, and Mrs. Hattie C. Mason.

The full amount of money now being paid monthly to veteran mediums is $160. We are also constantly appropriating sums of money—from ten to twenty dollars as temporary aid to such mediums—and the drain upon the Mediums' Relief Fund in this direction is sometimes considerable; we have aided twelve since last report, four of whom were sufferers by the great and disastrous fire at Lake Pleasant Camp—we do not give the names of these temporary beneficiaries of the N. S. A. since they are sensitive and the aid given was simply to tide them over a brief period of distress, but they are entered on our books for the inspection of those who wish more concerning them—the names of regular pensioners are given here that the Spiritualists at large may know to whom the money goes, they are no less sensitive than those who are assisted temporarily, but this is not a charity in the common acceptance of that word, it is honorable for a discharged or weary soldier to receive a pension from his government and none of "The Old Guard" are ashamed to be thus counted in the ranks, nor need our soldier mediums be at all sensitive at being known as pensioners upon the N. S. A. We only regret that we cannot add immeasurably to the list or as long as one needy, worthy medium is in the land. But we have no endowment fund established, and as the yearly drain upon the pension fund is large, we cannot add many to the list in any single year, though there are several names in waiting to be added as soon as possible.

Literature.

A selection of books suitable to be placed in the hands of investigators and readers of spiritual literature generally was made and submitted by a committee of the Convention; the Board was orderod to have said list printed for general distribution, but has not as yet done so, because the editor of The Progressive Thinker made statement to us that many of the books recommended are out of print and unobtainable—this matter therefore hangs in statu-quo.

Thousands of tracts have been gratuitously distributed from our home office and we have much commendation for this great work from Spiritualists and others; last October, an article from the pen of Ella Wheeler Wilcox upon the topic of Spiritualism appeared in the Hearst papers from New York to California, this article concluding by advising its readers to send to the National Association of Washington, D. C., for a copy of Heber Newton's tract on Immortality—the gifted writer not forgetting to admonish them to send a postage stamp for payment of mailing the tract. On our return from Convention we found awaiting us over seven hundred letters containing request for the tract mentioned. Prof. Longley at once took charge of them and not only mailed to each one a copy of the Newton tract, but also one of each of the many spiritual tracts issued by the N. S. A.; the requests for the tracts continued to come and are still coming, and all receive what they ask for with additional literature thrown in—this has created a wide interest in our cause and we have received many responsive and thankful letters from parties who have secured our literature, some of them being from officials in high places, from clergymen and other professional men and women.

Camps.

In obedience to request of convention, your secretary early in the fiscal year sent out appeals to the various camp meeting associations soliciting the appointment of an especial N. S. A. Day during the camp-meeting season of each; a few heartily and generously responded, some made no reply. Our President will make a report of the camps he attended, east and west, and of the good work performed there. Vice-President Warne held an N. S. A. Day at Lily Dale and secured the handsome sum of $108; your secretary conducted an N. S. A. Day at Onset Camp, at which she raised the liberal contribution of $103. She was ably assisted on that occasion by Dr. George A. Fuller and Mr. J. B. Hatch and a number of other prominent speakers and mediums. Clinton, Iowa, Camp sent twenty dollars, and other camps of which others will report added their contributions to the N. S. A fund—to all of these the hearty thanks of this Convention are due.

Wills and Legacies.

The important matter of will cases with which the N. S. A. is concerned is still before our board; that of the John Goff case in Michigan not yet being settled, although as far as it has gone this case stands in favor of the Spiritualists. A large sum of money has been advanced on this case by the National Association and more must be spent before this estate will be finally settled; we refer you to the financial statement of the secretary for information of amount expended on this case during the year.

The Sinclair will case is one that shows defeat for the N. S. A. and for Spiritualism in the city of Lakewood, N. J. Benjamin F. Sinclair, a medium and Spiritualist, devised a will in which he left a large amount of land and other property to the N. S. A. This will was demurred to by his son, George S. Sinclair, and an action brought to prevent its being probated. The case was peculiar, since a large mass of testimony was brought to show that Benjamin F. Sinclair professed to communicate with spirits who told him many things, among them that his wife would survive him but a few hours, and that his son would only live a year after the parents had passed away. The wife lived a year longer than her husband, and the son still survives. The judge ruled that the testator was incapable of making a will, because laboring under the hallucination of being in communication with spirits and thus misled by undue influence, and the will was denied the right of probate in court. The N. S. A. was ably represented in the case by a prominent lawyer of New Jersey, but there seemed to be no appeal from the decision rendered.

But still another grave matter in the Sinclair estate confronts the N. S. A. and Spiritualists; several years ago Benjamin F. Sinclair executed a deed to the N. S. A., conveying his house at Lakewood, and nine acres of land to the National Association, the understanding being that Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair should have a house on the estate as long as either remained on earth. This deed has been in possession of our association for three years—a suit is now in progress, brought by George Sinclair, to set aside this deed on the ground that Mrs. Sinclair was at the time of making the transfer, of unsound mind and incapable of intelligently acceding to the transaction and of signing the deed. It is true that the lady had been of unbalanced mind for some time before her decease and the point to establish is, was she in that condition, prior to and at the time of signing the deed in controversy; the case is not yet settled, but will be so before long.

Since our last report final statement and settlement of the estate of George Smith, late of Acushnet, Mass., has been made and the N. S. A. has received the sum of $1,281 for the same. J. H. White of Port Huron, Mich., devised a share of stock to the N. S. A., from which the sum of $78.40 has been realized; we have been informed by the County Clerk of Cairo, Ill., that the late Mrs. Maria McGuiness of that city has bequeathed the sum of $460 to the National Association; that estate has not yet been settled.

Arrested Mediums

In October of 1906 word came of the arrest in Seattle, Wash., of several mediums for pursuing their calling without paying license fee; the N. S. A. Board was solicited to take up some of these cases and help to test them in the courts; the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars was appropriated in the defense cause of Mrs. Swan and Mrs. Ross of Seattle, and our president will probably give the result of that work in his report.

Convention of 1907.

The Convention of 1906 voted to hold the succeeding one of 1907 in Los Angeles, California; owing to a number of reasons, among them the fact that many who voted were unaware of the needs of the N. S. A. and of the great expense it would be to the Association to take the Convention there; the lateness of the hour when vote was taken and the absence of many of the prominent delegates. The N. S. A. Board was as well as many prominent Spiritualists and a number of chartered societies felt that it would not be expedient to hold this Convention in California, especially as that State had not as yet recovered from the effects of the terrible earthquake shock and fires of 1906, therefore, after some correspondence between the officers of the National Association and those of the California State Board, the Spiritualists of California, through their State Association, most gracefully and kindly withdrew their invitation to the Convention to meet in the Golden West at this early day, and thus left the way open for the N. S. A. to appoint the location of 1907 assembly at Washington, D. C., the city of its Home Office and scene of its incorporation.

Missionaries.

This year we have had no salaried missionaries, but those who have served as workers in that field have done so with no cost to this Association; their reports will be presented to this convention. It may be well to state here that Rev. Henry C. Dorn of Newark, N. J. has done much efficient work in this line and has raised contributions and other help for the N. S. A. on several occasions by his untiring energy in our behalf; Rev. Frank T. Ripley has taken up penny collections in several places where he has lectured, which collections have been sent to the Mediums Relief Fund of the N. S. A.; and a noteworthy benefaction is that of the First Church of Allegheny City, Rev. Geo. C. Day, pastor, which has taken a monthly collection for the N. S. A., sending in to this office on several occasions a goodly sum to aid in its good work.

Mass Meetings.

It was decided last year that the N. S. A. should hold a series of mass meetings in New England and elsewhere, but after repeated efforts on the part of your President and secretary to awaken an interest in the project in the localities to which they were assigned, the subject was abandoned as impracticable and useless—it having been clearly shown that mass meetings are not wanted by our

PROF. ELMER E. KNOWLES,

The Great Telepathist,

Who Claims That Through Telepathy Anyone Can Obtain Success and Happiness.

A rather unique and attractive organization known as The Psycho Success Club with Prof. Elmer E. Knowles, the noted Telepathist, as President, is creating widespread interest. Judging from the strong endorsements and letters of commendation from members in all parts of the world, the Club is accomplishing results which seem little short of the miraculous.

The following extracts were selected from a large stock of letters recently sent to Prof. Knowles by members. A letter from Member No. 19454, dated Chicago, Ill., Aug. 31, 1907, states: "I have followed your instructions beginning one week ago to-day, and can honestly say that I feel like a new being."

Another letter from Member No. 1064, dated New York, N. Y., May 17, 1907, contains the following statement:

"From traveling salesman to manager of the publicity department, with a substantial increase in my salary, is one of the changes that took place after only three weeks membership."

Another member writes that her membership has been worth thousands of dollars to her, and many write that membership in the Club is a great boon to humanity. Some of the members admit that the changes that take place seem strange and incomprehensible, and all unite in praising the work of the Club in the highest terms.

The principles upon which the Club is founded are carefully thought out along lines which aim directly at transforming failures into successes, filling the discouraged and despondent with faith and hope and teaching its members to live in ways that cultivate the ability to win personal victories in the arena of accomplishment.

The President of the Club claims that the reason many persons are not in the positions in life they ought to be lies in the fact that they are not using their inherent forces in the right way to produce the proper harmony of environment. In his own successful career he has demonstrated the wisdom of mental development and the folly of being ignorant of psychic laws.

Prof. Knowles is well known throughout America, and the newspapers have praised him highly for his excellent work in Telepathy. If you want to be a member of The Psycho Success Club, send your name and address to Prof. Elmer E. Knowles, Suite 20, No. 126 West 34th street, New York City, N. Y.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEAL.

The POSTAGE on papers has been increased to all the British possessions on this continent. On a single paper we are compelled to pay ONE CENT each week, amounting to 52 cents a year, whereas previously we only paid the pound rates—a mere trifle. Hence, to all the British possessions on this continent the paper hereafter will be $1.50 per year.

The Jews.

For many years it has been the aspiration of the Jews scattered all over the world to colonize Jerusalem. There are supposed to be about eleven millions of them—near one-half located in Russia. If the whole of Palestine were donated to these people it would be worthless as homes for them. During its best days Palestine never contained to exceed two and a half millions of people. It is a land of desolation, made up of barren hills, mountain ranges, towering cliffs, deep valleys, and gullies of appalling depth. The country east of the Dead Sea and the Jordan rises into an inhospitable desert which is continued to near the Euphrates, while the arable land along the Mediterranean coast-line will not average more than a mile in width, and at places the mountains come down to the sea so closely that they scarcely leave room for a roadway. It is estimated to contain 3,800 square miles—about one-sixth the size of England.

Mountain regions, unfitted for human homes, have always been credited with being the abode of the gods. Mt. Caucasus had the credit of being the home of Jupiter, though he is reputed to have been born in a cavern on Mt. Ida, as was our Jesus in a cavern in the mountain town of Bethlehem, near Jerusalem. It is proper that mountainous countries should be utilized in some way, and what better use than as homes for the gods?

But we took up the pen to say the leaders of the project to colonize Palestine with Jews, with renewal of outrages against them in Russia, are now turning their attention to the United States, and will probably direct their people to locate among us. At present they would be secure in America, and the liberalizing spirit that is abroad will probably protect them, though intolerance of opposing faiths has been characteristic of Christians in every age since their's became the dominant religion.

Ancient Spirit Rappings.

The following, copied from Baxter's "Historical Discourse on Apparitions," is interesting and valuable. Baxter was born in 1615, and died in 1691. It is written of Baxter, "No more diligent student ever shut himself up with books. His practical writings were never mended, and his controversial ones were seldom confuted." He was a voluminous author. But to the extract:

"There is now in London an understanding, sober, pious man, oft one of my hearers, who has an elder brother, a gentleman of considerable rank, who, having formerly seemed pious, of late years does often fall into the sin of drunkenness. He often lodges long together here in his mother's house, and whensoever he is drunk and has slept himself sober something knocks at his bed head, as if one rapped in the wainscot. When they remove his bed it follows him. Besides other loud noises on other parts where he is, that all the house hears. They have often watched him and tied his hands lest he should do it himself." But his mother declared she had seen his shoes under the bed taken up and "nothing visible to touch them." The drunken sinner refused, in spite of these solemn warnings, to abandon his evil ways."

THE MOORES.

Their methods were exposed several years ago at Lily Dale, and they are forever barred from that camp. The "Spirit Manifestations" occurring in their presence in New York, were in no sense derived from the spirit world, but were wholly of mundane origin, confederates figuring conspicuously therein. They are now in Chicago. Mediums who have so far lost their self-respect as to circulate their cards, or attend their meetings, will be barred in the future from the columns of all respectable Spiritualist papers.

Some Pointed Questions.

If the reader were in pursuit of knowledge, and should ask a learned friend for information on a subject nearest his heart, and that friend, instead of a direct reply, should answer in an unknown tongue, or evade the issue entirely and leave him in ignorance, would he feel that he was treated fairly? If that friend were a professional teacher, would not the inquirer feel that he was outraged, almost insulted, by such treatment? If that teacher openly professed to be enlightening the world on the subject of the inquiry and withheld the information sought, would he not be classed as a pretender, an impostor in fact? If a teacher in the public schools, and he treated all his inquiring pupils in the same ungentlemanly manner, is it not probable that the authorities would give him his dismissal and employ a successor who would be faithful to his mission as a teacher? Should some friend of that teacher, because complaint is made that he is not a worthy instructor, charge the fault-finder with being an atheist, and with holding a grudge against him, would it not look as if he had gone outside the record to find reproachful terms to hurl at him who only sought desirable information?

Now, if Jesus was a God, as orthodox Christians allege, and if he did say, as represented by Mark 4:12, that he was teaching by parables, "That seeing they may see and not perceive; and hearing may hear and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted and their sins should be forgiven them," was he not unfaithful to his mission and an improper teacher? On the contrary, was he not practicing the acts of the deceiver, and deserving of censure?

Should a person be maligned and charged with being what he is not, for directing attention to gross errors in the teaching of a professedly public instructor?

China Coming to the Front.

An imperial edict has been issued by the empress dowager of China, providing for compulsory education throughout that empire. The people are to be taught the principles of a constitutional government, with view to the early election of representatives to a Parliament which has been determined upon.

China, aroused to action, will fall into line, and take her place with the most favored nations.

And, reader, don't forget, light travels around the globe from east to west. It was knowledge from the Orient that swept westward, and inundated Europe, following the Crusades, and finally developed America. That educational light crossed the continent, spanned the wide Pacific, and took root in Japan. It has gained a foothold there, which time cannot obliterate.

The wave rolls on, and the mountain tops of China are illumipated. Soon the school house will be found in every valley, and education in every home, and, like a giant long bound now free, the Celestial Empire will aid in freeing the West.

The blight of superstition that accompanied the morning dawn westward a few hundred years ago, is losing its power. Each generation modifies it, and finally will strip it of its terrors. Japan is the most advanced of nations in religious thought. China is already too intelligent to embrace the errors of the orthodox faith.

When the new coming wave shall reach America, rest assured the crushing faith of our ancestors, still lingering among us, will find its home with the bats in some old cavern where its founder is reputed to have been born.

Not Brought Up on Hell.

A Methodist Conference is in session in Chicago as we write. In looking over a report of its doings our eye fell on the following paragraph:

"Rev. Dr. M. M. Parkhurst addressing the conference said:

"I never was brought up on the kind of Methodism that declares there is a real hell of fire, brimstone and sulphur. Nor was I taught to believe there was a real heaven of gold pavements. The highest Christian ideal is heaven. The lowest moral status is hell. We have them both in Chicago. Many a man born in Boston thinks heaven is unnecessary."

Sixty years ago Dr. Parkhurst could not have made such utterances, and maintained his position in a Methodist church. In truth there was no denomination but the Universalists who would have welcomed him as a member. Who shall say the spirit of progress is not abroad in the land?

Personnel of the N. S. A. Convention.

The King Is Dead!---Long Live the King!

Probably the Convention of the N. S. A. that has just closed its five-days session in the capitol city of the nation will stand out conspicuously among all the annual sessions of that body.

Not only for the practical work actually performed, but because of radical changes in the persons who were elected as officers and trustees for the ensuing year.

The delegates very fairly represented the entire membership—of State and local societies—of the National Association, although all regretted the notable absence of nearly all delegates from California.

Evidently the delegates had come with the intention of making the business of the Convention their first thought, and of paying strict attention to that business.

In the assignment of the Order of Business, and in the appointment of committees, there was impartial recognition of all the delegates, or societies, and an almost intuitive perception of the best ability present in the convention for each particular committee.

Naturally all eyes were turned toward the president, Harrison D. Barrett, who has filled for so many years—all the fifteen years of its existence—the office of the executive head of the N. S. A., having been president, missionary, and editor-at-large, and doing more work in the same length of time than half a dozen men usually perform.

Evidently Mr. Barrett was far from perfect health; but he brought to the work of the Convention that signal ability that has made his career as its presiding officer and official head a marvel of dignity, scholarship and parliamentary thoroughness; and it must have been in the heart and mind of every one present that he had given to the work of the National Association the fifteen best years of his life, and that as its president he has made the N. S. A. respected and honored throughout this whole country and the world.

Ably seconding the work of the president, and relieving him of the duties of chairman whenever it was necessary, was the vice-president, Dr. George B. Warne, of Chicago, whose ability and faithfulness in the work of Spiritualism have long been known in the West, and who was made vice-president of the N. S. A. two years ago. The doctor has grown ten years younger—as all his friends have noticed—since he has been so fortunately united in marriage a few weeks ago to one of the most lovely of her sex. The Doctor, as president of the I. S. S. A. and of the M. P. I., as well as being one of the faculty of Hahnemann Medical College of Chicago, seemed to have enough to do; but there is always more work for those who are ready and willing.

Mrs. Mary T. Longley, the faithful and untiring secretary of the Association for nine years, brought to this convention the culmination of her labors in an almost ideal report, and in the able support of every measure she deemed for the good of the N. S. A. The presence in the convention of her husband, Prof. C. Payson Longley, whose spiritual songs have so charmed all lovers of true melody, reminds us that his most able and devoted assistance has enabled the frail little woman, who has served and filled the office of secretary so many years, to perform her arduous duties. Mrs. Longley early in the year announced that she could not take the office of secretary any longer, that she had served her time, one all-sufficient reason being that her inspirers—and she herself—wish her to return to the great field of speakers and writers which she temporarily abandoned to take up the work of secretary of the N. S. A. And she is right. She is needed on the rostrum.

The passing on to the higher life within the year of the treasurer of the Association, who, with the exception of two years, has always filled that office, Theodore J. Mayer, made such a vacancy as seldom comes to any association. Mr. Mayer, both from inclination and ability (financially), was the financial resource of the N. S. A., not only standing in the breach whenever necessary to prevent a financial crisis, but stimulating others by his unselfish example to rally to the financial support of the Association. The loss of Mr. Mayer's bodily presence cannot be measured in words; therefore the Convention, while appointing a committee to frame some suitable resolutions that are to be framed and hung, with Mr. Mayer's portrait, upon the walls at headquarters, decided that the most fitting remembrance—as proposed by Mrs. Longley—will be the raising of a one hundred thousand dollars endowment fund, to be called the Theodore J. Mayer Memorial Endowment Fund, for the N. S. A., which will be the best and most lasting memorial to Mr. Mayer.

The treasurer appointed to fill the vacancy in office caused by the passing on of Mr. Mayer was Mr. C. L. Stevens, of Pittsburg, Pa., than whom a more suitable and judicious choice never was made. Mr. Stevens has at heart the welfare of the cause of Spiritualism as represented by the N. S. A., and although not a millionaire, he gives of his time and means as far as is possible to forward the work of the Association.

Perhaps one of the most conspicuous personalities in the Convention is the Hon Charles R. Schirm, of Baltimore. How the N. S. A. ever existed without Mr. Schirm I cannot tell. Indeed it never did really, for Mr. Schirm has been active in the Association since the early years of its organization; but the particular kind of service he has recently rendered to the N. S. A. cannot be overestimated. He has made so clear and plain the legal status of Spiritualism, and has so constantly and ably taken the lead in altering the Constitution, By-laws and Usages of the N. S. A. to conform to the laws of the country and the various States of the Union, and in enabling the N. S. A. to win disputed bequests, etc., Mr. Schirm is as legal adviser and counselor what Mr. Mayer was financially.

Among the delegates present and active were many who have not been at an annual convention for years, and some who have never been delegates before. Many were disappointed at the absence of Mrs. Lillie, W. J. Colville and Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, who were expected and announced to take part in the work of the Convention, especially the evening sessions.

The work of Mr. Thomas Grimshaw has long been prized in this country, ever since he came here from England, and the building up in St. Louis of one of the most prosperous churches in our movement has proven the value of his work and of Mr. Grimshaw as a man.

Oscar A. Edgerly, quiet and retiring in manner, is one of the best workers in our ranks, and one of the best trance speakers, his inspirers ever manifesting he highest order of spiritual teaching.

The presidents of several State Associations were present and really gave indisputable evidence that they were the right persons in the right place. Dr. Warne, of Illinois—well, we all know about him. The president of the State Association of New York, indefatigable and faithful in promoting the cause—what better choice could the State of New York have made?

Mrs. Helen Palmer Russegue, of Rhode Island, one of our old-time speakers, and one of the most eloquent and forceful, was with her good husband, Dr. Russegue, constant in attendance and active in every effort to promote the best interests of the N. S. A. and the general cause.

Mr. Maxwell, of Minnesota, has long been a tower of strength to his own State Association and to the N. S. A. With the eye of an eagle and the heart of a dove, he watches and works, letting nothing escape his active mind. From all that we know of the Minnesota State Association, it is the banner Association in its Constitution and working order, and the nearer the other States "go and do likewise," the better they will be.

George W. Kates and wife, and E. W. Sprague and wife were, as they always are, active in the work of the Convention.

Miss Elizabeth Harlow, one of the more recent acquisitions to our ranks and rostrum, is certainly one of the most prized of our workers, and helps to answer the question, "What will the spiritual rostrum do when all the old workers are gone? If Miss Harlow continues to increase in eloquence and good looks—well, of course, there are no envious ones in the ranks of Spiritualism; no, indeed.

Mrs. Clara Watson, of Jamestown, N. Y., one of the older speakers on our platform, had never spoken for the N. S. A. Convention before. Like many of the other long-time workers, she had always been too busy to attend, and may not always have recognized the value of the organization of Spiritualists into a unified working body. Her reception by the audience on the evening she spoke can leave no doubt in her mind that both personally and as a speaker she was most heartily appreciated.

John W. Ring, than whom our cause has no more efficient worker, was present and took an earnest part in the deliberations of the Convention. In the State of Texas Mr. Ring did such splendid work—why did he go away? There was a time when Texas was the best-organized State in the Union for this work. What has happened to Texas?

The "LONG and the short of it" is that Brother Brooks, of Wisconsin, is absorbing a great deal of inspiration from Minnesota, and some of its VIM is rapidly placing Wisconsin next to Minn., spiritually as it has always been geographically.

A new worker in our ranks comes in the person of Mr. G. Tabor Thompson, of Philadelphia, who, as reading clerk of the Convention, was able to make his voice heard in every corner of the hall, owing to his splendid culture as a singer. Some of his compositions were sung in the Convention, and so another gifted worker is added to our ranks as a speaker and as a musical composer.

The work of Mrs. Pruden, Mrs. Sexsmith, Mrs. Kates, Mr. Sprague, Mrs. Nicholson, George H. Brooks, and others, in giving messages and readings, was duly appreciated by the evening audiences.

Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader has ever been a conspicuous figure in all the conventions of the N. S. A., and as chairman of the Committee on Delegates' Reports has done much—in fact, all that has ever been done to bring local societies in intelligent touch with the N. S. A., Mrs. Cadwallader is thoroughly versed in parliamentary usage, and her appointment as chairman of the committee to revise the printing of the Constitution and By-laws, so that they shall harmonize and shall read as actually intended, was one of the happy inspirations of the hour. After this, if there are any "printer's errors" in the Constitution of the N. S. A., it will not be the fault of Mrs. Cadwallader.

Mrs. I. C. I. Evans has been associated with the N. S. A. from its inception; first as official stenographer and clerk of the conventions, and also for many years one of the Board of Trustees. He brought a clear and accurate mind into his appointed work, and an ever-faithful and loyal spirit.

Mr. Evans was at his usual post fulfilling his arduous duties and manifesting even more than usual interest in the work of the Convention.

Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing has for a long time been a most prominent speaker and worker on the Spiritualist and other reform platforms, her persuasive powers being very remarkable. She is nearly always placed as chairman of the finance committee in conventions, for her persuasions go far to determine the financial success of the sessions. She seemed to need rest, and we all hope that her usual trip to Lake Helen this winter will bring that rest.

Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, a most honored platform speaker and worker, and long associated in an official capacity with the State Association of New York, was in finest condition and took active part in the general work of the Convention, as well as in that of the Temple Fund Association, of which latter she is vice-president.

Mr. Kates, as chairman of the Temple Fund, or rather its president, for I believe it is the Temple Fund Association, has done good work and is continued in that office; it may explain to some people the cause of a telegram to some of the daily papers, that this Association, which is an auxiliary of the N. S. A., asked permission—and it was received—to hold its annual election of officers during the hour allotted to the Temple Fund by the Convention. So the rumor went abroad that So and So had been elected officers of the N. S. A., when in reality they were officers of the Temple Fund Association. This was on Thursday, and the election of the officers and Board of the N. S. A. did not take place until Friday.

The lyceum question was the subject of lengthy and serious discussion, which became animated at times. No one actually said, "You are another," but it came quite near that point at times.

The selection of Mrs. Elizabeth Schaus, of Toledo, Ohio, as National Lyceum Superintendent, brings to that work an earnest and able woman, who has had a leading position in such work in Ohio, and who cannot only reach all who speak the English language, but will be valuable in organizing lyceums among the German Spiritualists.

In the report of the committee on "Usages," there was valuable progress made, and the chairman, with his able assistants, made a splendid report, all of which was adopted by the Convention and will be published.

There was most perfect unanimity in the rank and file of the Convention concerning the elimination of fraud from our midst—i. e., from any possible endorsement or protection by the N. S. A. or its auxiliary societies, and an equally earnest determination to protect all reliable mediums, of every kind, in the exercise of genuine gifts, with provisions in the Usages for granting certificates and ordination papers to each and every class of workers. It cannot be said truthfully that the N. S. A. is opposed to any form of genuine mediumship, but the mediums must be truthful and honest in their lives as well as in the manifestations given through their mediumship. The strong measures adopted by the Convention will entitle every delegate to future conventions to have imprinted on their badges as delegates the letters "R. D. of F."

There were many "shining lights," who cannot all be enumerated, but who did splendid work on the floor of the Convention, and all deserve the praise of their fellow delegates for the fraternal spirit manifested, there being only one or two unimportant exceptions to this rule.

Perhaps the master stroke of the Convenion was that early in the proceedings, and when it was in accord with the regular order of the business, Harrison D. Barrett was made the choice of the N. S. A. for Historian of Spiritualism; he had, in fact, filled that place during the past year, it having been privately as well as publicly announced that Mr. Barrett would not be a candidate for the presidency of he N. S. A. There could have been no wiser selection. He brings scholarship, literary ability and a genuine love of the cause. The work will be well done.

There is always "somethin' brewin'" in any and every convention. Was it this knowledge that kept some usually turbulent and restless people more quiet than usual? Some seemed to know what was coming. Was it the gift of prophecy?

"The King is Dead? Long Live the King!"

These were the words of Harrison D. Barrett when, at the close of all its appointed work, the N. S. A., it having been previously understood and publicly announced that Harrison D. Barrett would not accept the nomination for the office of president, unanimously elected the one next in office, Vice-President Dr. George B. Warne, of Illinois, to the office of President. If there were any in the Convention who expected Mr. Barrett to faint or have "heart-failure," or anything of the kind, they were doomed to disappointment. Mr. Barrett was, as usual, master of the situation. With countenance aglow and perfect poise of voice and manner he was the first to congratulate the Convention on its choice, and while retaining the gavel he had always used as the president of the N. S. A. and the chairman of the meetings, he presented Dr. Warne with a new gavel in the most eloquent and fraternal words and spirit.

The names of the new officers and Board are before you, and this Convention of 1907 passes into history as one of the most important in the annals of Spiritualism. If each succeeding convention shall manifest an equally earnest and fraternal spirit, and shall bring equal ability, the complete organization of Spiritualism of every State and town throughout the length and breadth of the country is not far away.

I could not stay until the close of the Convention and hear the final results of the election (only being able to stay until the election of the president), but have since learned who were elected as the other officers of the N. S. A. I do not think there could have been a better selection for their respective positions. Dr. Warne we all know, and he could not have a better or more helpful mate than Mr. Schirm. Mr. Stevens' ability as treasurer I have already mentioned. I know of no one better qualified for the position of secretary than Geo. W. Kates. I told Mr. Richmond, upon my return home, that I hoped the Convention would elect Mr. Kates for secretary, and he shared my hope, well knowing the qualifications of Mr. Kates for that position. Pension Fund Gratitude Day.

I am glad that my first official appeal, or communication, to the Spiritualists of the United States is in the interest of the Pension Fund, that is of such great importance to the cause all of us love so well. Our indigent mediums must not be permitted to suffer. The noble-hearted donor, Brother Mayer, has given it a perpetual help that will partly sustain the present pensioners, but the fund is now so exhausted that there will soon be an impossibility to help these needy ones in a material manner, unless there is an immediate increase of donations. To that end the Board of Trustees has instructed me to make a call to all auxiliary societies of the N. S. A., and all other societies of Spiritualists, and persons, to take a public collection and solicit personal contributions, on the LAST SUNDAY OF NOVEMBER.

Each society and person can make that day a memorable one for the cause of Spiritualism by a generous response.

Please remember that it is desired to make

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1907, A DAY OF GRATITUDE TO THE SPIRITS AND THEIR MEDIUMS FOR THEIR HELP AND COMFORT TO HUMANITY.

If you feel that the new officers of the N. S. A. should be encouraged in their earnest efforts that they shall make for the cause of Spiritualism, then respond to this needed call, and show that you are willing to join hands in CREATING A NEW ERA FOR OUR MUTUAL CAUSE.

Make all remittances to the N. S. A. office, 600 Pennsylvania Ave., S. E., Washington, D. C.

Fraternally,
GEORGE W. KATES, Sec'y.

The Notorious Howlands.

They are now at Toronto, Canada, posing as materializing mediums. All the manifestations occurring in their presence are the result of legerdemain or deception. One of their tricks is very fine indeed. In their meetings in California and elsewhere, they would, in a mystifying manner, liberate a dove, ascribing the same to spirit power. Of course it would create a sensation. The spirit manifestations occurring in their presence are all of earthly origin. But they are indeed artists in their especial line, and the gullibles and senile old men and women are their victims. Whenever you grab the spirit appearing in the Howlands' seances you will have every time the medium or a confederate dressed in artificial toggery. Their "flower spirit manifestation" is a trick throughout, and can be performed in several different ways.

POLICE BREAK UP A SPIRITUALIST SEANCE.

Lagged Rev. Clarence Howland and Rev. Mrs. Howland to the Station on Charge of Fraud—Seized Gauze that Eloise Wore and Took Away Cabinet.

Between eight and nine o'clock last night there were lively doings at the residence of Samuel Rynex, of 572 Bathurst street. They were occasioned by a Spiritualistic seance, given by the Reverends Clarence C. and Elizabeth Howland, "ministers of the gospel of Spiritualism," whose home is in New York City. They were arrested on charges of fraud preferred by Mrs. Lowe, another Spiritualist, of 1158 Brunswick Avenue. Policeman Hogue and Brisbane, in plain clothes, made the arrests after a most exciting fifteen minutes.

Holding a Seance.

"We were just holding a seance, which is a form of our religion, which is Spiritualism," said the Rev. Mr. Howland to The Star this morning at his temporary home in Bathurst street. "I had the idea that all present were friends of mine. As much as I have traveled, I never saw anything to equal the behavior of last night."

The seance was in progress when the climax was precipitated by Mrs. Lowe, who threw her arms about the waist of Mrs. Howland just as that lady issued from the cabinet. The lights had been extinguished and Mrs. Howland had called upon her spiritualistic guide, Eloise. She was lightly clad in filmy lace, having attired herself in it after she had disrobed to meet the faithless eyes of six women.

Policeman as a Printer.

Policeman Hogue, who gained admittance by paying a dollar, had attended a previous meeting on Tuesday night. Someone had asked him his occupation. He had said that he was a printer from Hamilton. He said he was at present considering the advisability of buying a printing plant here. A friend from the spirit world came forth from the unseen and unknowable and told him that his venture would prove successful.

Then the spirit of a child called Mrs. Lowe. She stepped forward and looked closely at Mrs. Howland. Seeing was not believing, apparently, for both women immediately fell to the floor. Mr. Howland immediately went to his wife's assistance, but not before a believer had seized Mrs. Lowe by the back hair and was pulling with more force than grace.

Turned on the Light.

Confusion reigned. Brisbane, who was armed with an electric torch, turned on the current. He then declared that he and Hogue were policemen. That brought down upon them the combined forces of all the men present. He drew his baton and heads dodged. Hogue then seized Mrs. Howland, who at once became the center of a mob. As she was gowned only in lace, he pushed her toward the cabinet, where she dressed.

Took in the Apparatus.

The cabinet, spiritual clothing, and other accessories were then conveyed to No. 3 Police Station, as were Mr. and Mrs. Howland. A loyal little band followed them and waited the arrival of Magistrate Kingsford to affix his signature to bail bonds in sureties of $400 each.

Mr. Howland produced several of the certificates. One was dated Evansville, Ind., and was made out in the name of Mrs. Howland. It set forth that "her special phase is materialization." It was signed by Jonas Goldsmith, President.; Barbara Bauer, Vice-President, and Anna Folz, Financial Secretary.

Mr. A. Gollan, of 47 Bellevue Avenue, had something to say regarding past experiences with the Howlands.

"I saw a seance conducted by these people two years ago," he stated to The Star. "It was in a house at 87½ Church street, occupied by a Mrs. Martin. I sat through the whole seance, and was thoroughly convinced that it was a hoax. At the close of the entertainment Mr. Howland asked us if we were all satisfied, and when I said I was quite the reverse, he gave me my dollar back. Both Mr. and Mrs. Howland have traveled all over Europe and the East, and are well known in spiritualistic circles."—Toronto Evening Star, Oct. 19, 1907.

TIME FOR ACTION!

It has arrived. THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, the largest Spiritualist paper now published in the world, will continue on its good work in its efforts to ELEVATE THE STANDARD of Spiritualism as a cult, as a sect, as a religion, if you so especially desire, or as a grand uplifting and soul-inspiring SCIENTIFIC TRUTH. Notwithstanding the fact that paper has arisen greatly in price, especially book paper, yet The Progressive Thinker will continue to be printed for the present at One Dollar per year, and the premiums sent out as formerly.

It is a fact that no paper the size of The Progressive Thinker can now be sustained at $1.00 per year. To be started in the United States, and endeavor to accomplish that feat now would prove ruinous to the one who undertook it.

The Progressive Thinker stands PRACTICALLY ALONE in this country in size, in circulation and influence, and to-day it is received by the great mass of intelligent Spiritualists with greater favor than ever.

Now we wish to extend its influence, to enlarge its scope of action, and thus be of greater value to the great SCIENTIFIC TRUTH, which those possess who believe in SPIRIT-RETURN. YOU can help us on in the great work we have undertaken by sending in your own subscription, and also by sending in an additional subscriber. The time for action has now arrived.

The N. S. A. Association.

Report of the President of the Temple Fund Society.

To the Members of the Temple Fund Society of the United States, in Convention assembled.

Dear Friends and Co-workers:

It is with much gratification that I, as your president, am able to meet with you in convention, to make my annual report, and obtain from you such deliberation that will create more extensive means for carrying forward the objects for which we were organized by the National Spiritualists' Association.

That work is the extension of Temple or meeting-place building for the Spiritualists of the United States. You are enthused with the need of home places for the Spiritualists to meet in, where proper magnetic forces may be given to the desired communion of spirits that is now an established fact. You realize the importance of agreeable and attractive meeting-places, and for such surroundings as shall be pleasing to the people and proper for spirit inspiration and manifestation. You have responded to the call for help to achieve such; but many thousands of Spiritualists are waiting to see what others shall accomplish.

There is only one way to success for us, and that is by co-operation and mutual assistance. They who refrain from assisting are retarding the progress of Spiritualism in the spiritualization of the world. Selfish ambitions and desires dominate the human race, but should not be an attribute of a true Spiritualist.

The world is in sad need of an application and promulgation of the ethics taught by the spirits through modern mediums.

The spirits do not minister unto us simply for our gratification by proving their ability to produce sensuous phenomena, nor by all possible help for our worldly interests. They have an undoubted desire to teach truths that shall assist in the betterment of humanity mentally, morally and spiritually. To that end we, as their chosen instruments, should be coadjutors in the development of all possible good. Are any of us remiss in that assistance? If so, then we are surely debasing our own soul natures.

Realizing the need of unselfish labor for humanity, many of the Spiritualists are giving their time, talent and means to the good work of human progress. For that they are steadfast in their associated efforts to keep this philosophy, and its basic facts, before the people. They make many sacrifices to sustain the local cause. To all such we give all hail! From them alone we are not expecting the help that our Temple Fund Society is in need of. But they, who are already taxed, have in a number of instances given assistance to our society by membership or contributions. This is an example to the lethargic and inconsiderate Spiritualists who have passed our pleadings for help with no response or even sympathy, perhaps. It is our duty to devise some way to enthuse these for an affiliation in this worthy movement. How shall we gain their enthusiastic support? How shall we obtain at least some thousands of individual members who will each pay the small sum of one dollar per annum to sustain this needed assistance to the public propaganda of the cause of Spiritualism? I trust that you may devise some ways and means to this end. Your Executive Board, during the past year, gave authority to the president and secretary to send forth circular letters and other printed documents explaining the organization and intent of the Temple Fund Society. This has entailed some expense, which should be avoided as much as possible, but seemed to be inevitable this year.

Your president believes in printer's ink, and thinks that our society will prosper by issuing documents soliciting funds and members. But it is entirely within the province of the assembled members to restrict or increase this plan of solicitation.

Your officials have been very cautious in making any outlay of funds, but could not get the society before the public properly this first year of effort without employing this method. The Spiritualist papers have, with great generosity, assisted in publicly announcing the society, and inserting its calls for members and donations. A vote of thanks of this society is due The Progressive Thinker, The Sunflower, and The Herald of Truth. Their co-operation shows that these papers have the public cause of Spiritualism dearly at heart, and are willing to assist in any worthy enterprise; and their generosity, also, shows that they esteem the Temple Fund Society as filling a need in our public cause.

I can also say that many responses have come to our public appeals, approving the plan and intent, urging us to press on with confidence in the future to realize the great aim of our society. These also promise early help in that direction. Thus the future seems to hold many glowing promises of attainment. We should not be discouraged. Persistence is what we need in the cause of Spiritualism. Obstacles may confront us, but we must overcome them. Discouragement should never be written on the face of a Spiritualist, and decidedly not be voiced in speech or by pen. Let us hold a dominant thought of success, and that will help win the desire.

Your president has mailed several thousands of circulars, membership application blanks, appeals, copies of the Articles of Association, etc., and has also sent out fully one thousand personally written letters; and the result is feeble in comparison. But he is glad to give his time and energy for the cause, for he is greedy to labor for its advancement. State associations and camp-meeting associations, local societies and public workers, have been appealed to for assistance, with only the feeble response that the report of the secretary and treasurer will show. And yet, I am not discouraged. These will each bring some returns soon or late.

The Executive Board authorized a call to societies of Spiritualists to take a collection on the second Sunday of March, last, for the Temple fund. The call was made by letters to societies and through the Spiritualist papers, but with the result of a response from only a few.

An appeal was publicly made for some self-denial to assist the Temple fund, but no results were reported.

The Spiritualists are slow to enthuse, but when enthused are mighty in their power!

I have tried to gain statistics of the number of edifices now owned, or in the course of construction, by the Spiritualists, but have not sufficient replies to warrant an estimate. I can say they are more numerous than we are publicly aware. This is an important matter to gain a record, and I urge some plan of cooperation by the members of this society and officials of the N. S. A. to secure this.

Several new edifices have been erected during the past year, and a number of local societies are slowly accumulating funds to that end. The latter is a slow process in most localities, and they need some impelling force that should be caused by the Temple Fund Socley to secure quicker and greater results.

Nothing will further this more than our ability as a society to loan or donate to such worthy localities a needed sum to secure a building lot, or to make the first payment for the erection of an edifice. We have had several very worthy applications during the year, but have been unable to assist any locality, as our Constitution provides that one thousand dollars must be in our treasury, and no help given except from an excess thereof. This provision is wise, for some great need may arise in the future for a contingent fund.

But if this society were in such affluence as to have the ability to help localities, then its mission would attract more readily the members' fees and public donations to enlarge its capacity. These are sure to flow in when we can show some good results of our applied method for assistance.

Liberal donors and thousands of Spiritualists should at once respond to this need. When thousands of Spiritualists shall annually pay to our treasury one dollar each for this propaganda movement, then generous givers will liberally aid, and legacies be bestowed.

THEN OUR SOCIETY WILL BE AS SECURE AS THE ROCK OF GIBRALTAR, AND ALL FUNDS BE WELL APPLIED TO THE CAUSE FOR WHICH THEY ARE GIVEN.

There are many liberal givers amongst the Spiritualists, who only wait for some secure process of application. The N. S. A. is gaining great security; and that Association stands back of the Temple Fund Society, to which we must report all disbursements intended or desired, and secure their consent. Thus our close allegiance is a realization of mutual interest, and is a means of absolute protection.

I urge that each member of the Temple Fund Society shall be a working agent of the society to secure other members and all possible donations. I also urge each public speaker and medium to make some effort to assist this society to secure a working fund, by collections, meetings, seances, etc.

With wide-spread co-operation there will be magnificent results the coming year, and all Spiritualists will feel the impulse of success thus created, and pessimistic doubts of our cause be succeeded by rejoicings in prosperity.

I trust that liberal donations will soon be forwarded to the incoming officials of this society, and enable them to say to the world that the Spiritualists of the United States are enthusiastic and generous. These donors may be fully assured that all funds will be wisely used for Temple extension, and every locality in need so assisted will bless the liberality prompting each to public generosity.

I have been well assisted by various members of the Executive Board the past year, and extend to each my heartfelt thanks for their kind co-operation to the results secured.

Hoping for and trusting in the earnest assistance of each Spiritualist of the United States for the progress of our mutual cause, and notwithstanding the meager results of our first year of effort, I continue to proclaim: "I HAVE FAITH IN YOU!"

And I trust that each and all will have faith in one another.

BOOK REVIEW.

What Is Socialism? What Is Capitalism?—An Address to Religious People—Especially to Clergymen.—By R. A. Dague, Tacoma, Wash.

Those who wish a clear, succinct, brief exposition of Evolutionary Socialism, can not do better than secure a copy of this 16page tract, written by a well-known and able contributor to The Progressive Thinker. His writings on any subject attract attention by their strength and straightforward earnestness and clearness. His differentiation between "evolutionary" socialism and "revolutionary" socialism and anarchism, explains a point that many people, especially rabid anti-socialists do not clearly apprehend, and hence confuse the two—which is like making darkness the synonym of light, and is a great injustice to evolutionary Socialists. There is no better brief treatise on the subject. The reading of it will correct many erroneous and mistaken views held by those who are not really well informed regarding the principles and aims of Socialism.

Since coming to Convention I have received from memberships and donations, $44.25, which makes a balance on hand of $219.98.

This is not as good a showing as we had hoped to make, but since the Temple Fund Society is young, and its purpose not understood by the most of the people, we do not feel discouraged, but expect better results in the future.

The success of the society is largely due to the untiring efforts of our president, who has done all the advertising, both by circular and through the press. He is mingling with the Spiritualists of the country all the time and has never lost an opportunity to present the benefit which the Temple Fund Society would be to them.

Personally, I wish to thank him for the many ways in which he has assisted me with my work as secretary. The work with all the officers has only been through correspondence, but has been most pleasant in every instance.

With best wishes for the continued success of the Temple Fund Society, this report is fraternally submitted,

SPIRITUALISM AND RELIGION.

A Californian Takes the Stand that It is a Religion, in Opposition to Dr. Page.

I observe in The Progressive Thinker of Ocober 5 a letter signed "Edward Page, M. D.," wherein the writer ridicules the idea that Spiritualism is a religion. He says he has been a Spiritualist for fifty years, and accepts it simply as a scientific fact; that the "dead can communicate with us, and still live."

"Therefore," says Dr. Page, "when we hear a Spiritualist say Spiritualism is the coming religion of the world, we may conclude that such person has not advanced very far from the superstitions of past ages."

He says there is no more religion about it than there is when a person telephones from New York to some one in Boston.

Now, sir, anyone can see where Dr. Page misses it. After being, as he says, a Spiritualist for fifty years, he has apparently still to learn that the phenomena of Spiritualism which correspond to the telephone are only half of Spiritualism. The other half relates to the messages and teachings we receive from the spirits. The lower ones (who only deal with the trivialities of daily life and its affairs) are, of course, not religious; but the teachings of the higher ones most certainly are, because they teach us our duty to God and our duty to our fellow man, and our duty to ourselves in developing (saving) our own souls, and if, then, that is not religion, then the Gospels (4) contain no religion.

Dr. Page's position is absurd and inexplicable, coming from an educated man who claims to have been a Spiritualist for fifty years.

REPORT OF MRS. ANNA L. GILLESPIE.

Summerland, B. C.,
July 3, 1907.

Mrs. Mary T. Longley,
Secretary N. S. A.,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sister:—Inclosing my report of work for eight months of previous term of office, which has been with all its limitations a most pleasant duty, permit me to make a few suggestions regarding the banner contest. While only a few have made regular reports since the first, there are many of the lyceums working hard for the prize, and after looking over the different schools and seeing the great need of a little help for many of them—in fact, for all, it has seemed to me that instead of putting the money in banners, make the prize in cash to each winner, that they may supply books or banners as they most need. I have spoken to several of the lyceum conductors re-regarding this and they all have thought it would be a wise thing. The National felt they could give $50 for the banners, and so would it not be a good plan to give $25 as first, $15 as second, and $10 as third? This would be fair and would help greatly. The Pittsburg lyceum is one of the best, or was, that have grown up during the year, and should be greatly encouraged; also the Battle Creek. The California lyceums are in good shape, especially San Diego and Los Angeles. The Portland school is also doing good work, as well as Montana, and while the reports are meager regarding the Buffalo school, I think it is in good shape. The Bower of Beauty Lyceum and others are all working hard, and with attention many others could have been built up on my trip to the Coast. I made a special trip to Los Angeles and San Diego, giving lectures when I could and accepting donations voluntary in every way to help defray expenses. The lyceum at San Diego gave $7.50 toward lyceum work. The other donations were all for the general lecture work. I am sorry I have no money to leave for my successor, but, as you know, not a cent was left for me in my work, or even a small donation from the National to carry on the work, as has been done in previous years. I was started empty-handed and left so, and allowed no expense fund to enable me to get about among the lyceums. To ask a struggling lyceum already overburdened with its local financial troubles to help in this, I could not; so my work has had to be done by mail. During the six weeks of March and April I had to hire the writing done, so made it as small as I could. I feel that I have done but a small part in the great work I entered with such high hopes, but the odds have been against me. Societies have not shown an interest and the speakers and leaders have been unable, in many cases, owing to their transitory positions, to build up the work; but with all the discouragements, I have no thought of failure, for so long as we have children we will have the desire to give them a broader education than the old theological one, and the Spiritualists will awake to the danger of listlessness. I could not help but see the small place the children had at many of the anniversary services in March. I remember Mr. Barrett's letter to me, in which he wrote—"It is like putting a cold wet blanket over an audience to try to interest them in the subject of lyceum work." This has been too true; but surely some brighter day is coming for our children, and they will awaken an interest in their needs.

The lyceum pins are with our goods, excepting about 100, which were left with Mr. Stevens to turn over to you. As soon as our things come I will forward them. I had about 500 song cards printed at my own expense. They are in San Francisco, and if you should need them, let me know, and if they are not sold, you can have them. I gave some to San Francisco Lyceum, as well as some other things they need to work with, as they lost all books, banners, flags and dumb bells in the fire, and have had a hard struggle, but are now on their feet and doing well. Mr. Ring sent a large package of membership cards to Battle Creek just as I was leaving there in May. They are still there; if you want them, let me know. They seem to me at present of little value, but will be cared for until you need them.

I am sorry I cannot be with you at Convention in October, as I fully enjoy the work done there. I regret deeply that you are to give up the office you have filled so perfectly, and hope for the good of the cause you may change your mind, and still be in your present position. But wherever your feet may wander, may the path be full of flowers of peace for you and yours.

With kindest wishes for you personally, and with loyal regards for he N. S.-A., its Board and every member, I am,

Yours lovingly and fraternally,
ANNA L. GILLESPIE.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON LYCEUMS.

Mr. Chairman and Fellow Delegates:

Your Committee on Lyceums has carefully considered the correspondence and report of your late Superintendent of Lyceums, Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, and presents the following report and recommendations:

We realize the need of the N. S. A. taking hold of this work with more enthusiasm. Each year a National Superintendent of Lyceums has been appointed, but not much accomplished owing to the lack of funds to carry on the work. If the foundation stone of Modern Spiritualism rests on the phenomena of Spiritualism; then the future workers of Spiritualism must come from those who attend the primary school, the lyceum.

After reading Mrs. Gillespie's report, we find that the thanks of this Convention should be extended to her for the able manner in which she performed the arduous duties during her term of office. Mrs. Gillespie, in her report, recommends that the $50 appropriated for the purchase of banners for prizes be expended in three cash prizes; $25 first prize, $15 second prize, and $10 third prize. But your committee, after reading the numerous communications and noting the earnest efforts of the various contestants, we feel that it would be unfair to single out only three for this distribution, and recommend that the appropriation be devoted to the purchase of text-books, suitable for use in lyceums, and the same to be distributed among the contestants according to the number of their members. In this way the money will carry on the educational work and each lyceum that has sought to win a banner will be benefited by this plan of your committee.

We are convinced by the perusal of the communications that the prime need of the movement is a lesson leaflet, and we would recommend the publication of a quarterly that shall be devoted to the presentation of outline lessons, suitable for assistance of leaders of lyceums. This leaflet to be distributed free to lyceums. We recommend that this Convention appropriate sufficient money to cover the cost of publication and distribution of such leaflet. We recommend the appointment of a Superintendent of Lyceums, who shall keep in touch with the various lyceums, and attend to the publication and distribution of said leaflet. We further recommend the Manual of A. J. Davis, Founder of Progressive Lyceum; "Lyceum Guide," Emma Rood Tuttle; "Lyceum Lessons," C. Fannie Allyn, and the Lyceum Manual published by British Lyceum Union, be used by various lyceums, according to their needs, and suggest that where there is a desire to start a new lyceum, that one copy of the book chosen be supplied to the conductor free of cost, in addition to the leaflet.

Your committee feels that the time has come for the N. S. A. to do for the lyceum, instead of asking the lyceums—whose needs are so apparent—to furnish the money for this literature. We urge upon the delegates to consider the lyceum question as one of the most important features in the Spiritualistic movement.

Your committee feels that the importance of the lyceum movement warrants us in recommending that this report be adopted ad seriatim.

Respectfully submitted,
THOMAS GRIMSHAW.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, the national cause of Spiritualism is not fully justified by public estimation of our esteemed exponents, both of speakers and mediums, and is not properly considered in relation to its organized merits, we, as delegates of the auxiliary bodies of the National Spiritualists' Association in annual convention assembled, in order to present our true convictions to the public in general, and the Spiritualists in particular, do hereby Resolve, That we declare the true place for an estimate of the personnel and organized merits of Spiritualists is to be found in the authorized societies of this body, and not at all to be measured by such persons reputation as to character and psychic power.

Resolved, That we urge upon our auxiliary bodies supreme care in the employment of tried and true speakers and mediums, refusing their platforms to any one not sufficiently authenticated as to moral character and psychic ability.

Resolved, That we regret the fact that many of our societies and camps cater to the sensation hunters by the employment of persons of doubtful reputation a sto character and psychic ability.

Resolved, That as Spiritualists we deplore being classed with advertised fortune tellers and so-called clairvoyants who do not represent Spiritualism in its philosophy or phenomena.

Resolved, That the N. S. A. ever stands ready to defend and uphold genuine mediumship of any phenomenal character.

Resolved, That Spiritualism represents all humanitarian reforms, and has a special interest in education, temperance, protection of children from injurious labor, cruel treatment of prisoners and the insane, suffrage without regard to sex, and the revelations of the spirit for proofs of a continuous life and their communion with earth denizens.

Resolved, That the irreparable loss that has befallen the N. S. A. by the passing from earth of our beloved and respeced treasurer, T. J. Mayer, cannot yet be estimated. He has been a tower of strength and help to the N. S. A. and Spiritualism everywhere. We mourn the great loss, but shall welcome his return to us as an adviser and friend, assured that his interest continues unabated for all time.

We request that the Executive Board of the N. S. A. shall transmit this resolution to the family of Mr. Mayer and inscribe the same upon a page of the records of this Association.

Resolved, That we feel the great loss to the cause of Spiritualism of the earnest workers who have passed to the great beyond, but shall realize that our beloved members and friends from the spirit life shall minister unto us for human progress. We tenderly mention the names of the following arisen ones during the past fiscal year:

Moses Hull, of Whitewater, Wis.
Mrs. Jennie H. Brown and Captain W. H. Winn, both of Texas.
Mr. A. Melchers, of South Carolina.
General W. H. Parsons, of Illinois.
Hon. A. Gaston, of Pennsylvania.

Respectfully submitted by the committee:

G. W. KATES, Chairman.
HELEN L. P. RUSSEGUE.
PAUL McARTHUR.
G. H. BROOKS.
CARRIE M. HINSDALE.

Natural Death No Terror.

Death has lost its sting and the grave its victory since Dr. Metchnikoff has studied the hows and whys of shuffling off the mortal coil. Discarding metaphysical assumptions and placing himself on the ground of science, he reached the conviction that the pain of death was largely due to the fact that old age is pathological in the vast majority of cases, and death was not physiological, but accidental. If by hygiene, sobriety, pure and suitable diet, rational living and the use of certain sera we could attain an old age free from organic malady, then we should arrive at the natural termination of existence, which is rarely reached at present, and we should acquire a normal instinct for death, the thanatic instinct which we do not now possess. Surfeited with life, the man would receive death at a time when from natural causes and from the attainment of the natural span of life, the instinct of life would be replaced by that of death. The achievement of this result, thinks Dr. Metchnikoff, combined with the prudential regulation of marriage, must improve the human lot, conquer pessimism and regret.

AFFLICTIONS OF THE EYE

Successfully Treated By "ACTINA"

Eyeglasses May Be Abandoned.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for the relief of most forms of disease, as a new method—the Actina treatment—has been discovered which eliminates the necessity of former torturous methods. There is no risk or necessity of experimenting, as many people report having been cured of failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye after being pronounced incurable, through this grand discovery.

Rev. C. Brunner, Pastor of the Reformed Church, Bridgeport, Conn., writes:—"So far your Actina has done me good and my eyesight has really improved and I have good hope that by continuing, my eyesight will be restored."

Mrs. T. F. Noye, Watertord, Wis., writes:—"About two years ago I was taken with Iritis in both eyes and nearly went blind and it was thought an operation would be necessary. I sent for an Actina last April and it has taken all the inflamation out and my eyes are now well.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother, of cataracts."

Hundreds of other testimonials will be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 31L, 811 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

THE BIBLE

New and Revised Edition.

Authenticity, Credibility, Morality.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S GREAT WORK

Ingersoll's desire that somebody should at last tell the whole truth about the Bible has been brilliantly fulfilled. No Freethinker worthy of the name can afford to pass over Remsburg's book in silence. Like Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," may it, let us hope, find admirers and translators in other languages. And again, like Paine's book, may this brilliant work bring to its author the praise of posterity.—Der Freidenker (Milwaukee).

This great work on the Bible by Mr. Remsburg is most valuable—it is an encyclopedia of information in regard to the Bible, and surpasses in importance all other works of the kind now published. It is up-to-date in every particular. Price, $1.25.

The absurdities of the reputed teachings of Jesus are here shown up as no other writer has ever presented them before, which will convince any honest reader that the most of them are consummate nonsense.

Psychic Light

BY MAUD LORD DRAKE.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has a national reputation as a medium. The manifestations given through her mediumship have been most marvelous. She has written a book with this title: "PSYCHIC LIGHT—THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE." It is a ponderous volume of 600 pages. It will hold your attention from the beginning to the end. It is chockful of stirring incidents. Price of this large volume, only $1.50, postpaid.

SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.

A Book That Every American Freethinker Will Delight to Own.

By John E. Remsburg.

The work consists of two parts, "The Fathers of Our Republic," and "The Saviors of Our Republic." In regard to Paine's religious views, Mr. Remsburg establishes the negative of the following (1) Was Paine an Atheist? (2) Was he a Christian? (3) Did he recant? Page after page of the most radical freethought sentiments are culled from the correspondence and other writings of Franklin and Jefferson, which show that these men were as pronounced in the rejection of Christianity as Paine and Ingersoll. That Washington was not a Christian nor a believer in Christianity. In support of Lincoln's infidelity he has collected the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses.

The book is handsomely bound in cloth, giving fine portraits of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant; also portrait of the author.

This book contains 365 pages, printed on heavy paper, well bound in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

COMMON SENSE By Thomas Paine. A Revolutionary pamphlet, addressed to the inhabitants of America in 1776, with explanatory notice by an English author. Paper, 15 cents.

The Development of the Spirit
After Transition. By the late M. Faraday. The origin of religions, and their influence upon the mental development of the human race. Price, 10 cents.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

The Song Cards for sale at this office at $4 per hundred, by mail $4.50, are the help you need in society work.

The Third Annual Harvest Festival and Dance will be given under the auspices of the Golden Rule Pleasure Club, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western ave., Saturday evening, November 2, 1907. Tickets 25 cents, including score card. Music by W. W. Kirkland; Supper extra.

Ferd. C. Suhrer writes: "The Fraternal Order of Spiritualists held their usual services Sunday, October 20, in Hygiea Hall, 406 Ogden ave., corner Robey street (top floor). In the afternoon quite a good sized congregation assembled, many of whom were benefited by receiving exceptionally good readings from sealed letters through the mediumship of Mrs. Barbara Hilbert, Mrs. J. Staner-Adams, Mr. Charles Thompson and Mrs Mamie A. Helyett, formerly of Boston, who was initiated at camp last summer. This was Mrs. Helyett's first public work in Chicago, her services being engaged at Rockford since making Chicago her home. She is an instrument worthy of the name and a decided favorite with our people. The circles were eagerly awaited and quickly filled. We are blessed in having such an array of willing workers presiding over the different circles, who are instrumental in proving that death does not end all. We feel elated at the success of the first rehearsal of our Chorus which took place at 6, and in which twelve took part. But Mr. Hadley says he needs more voices and if you want some vocal exercise, we would be pleased to have you with us—just enquire at the hall for Dr. Caird. The song service already shows improvement and an increase in attendance. The vocal solo by Miss Kiser was heartily encored, as was the singing of Miss Bess C. Johnson, who we are pleased to announce will be with us in November also. Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond occupied the rostrum in the evening, and after answering questions took her subject, 'Of What Value Is the Knowledge of Spiritualism to Us in This Life?' Her discourse was one of absorbing interest and was listened to attentively. The first Sunday of each month will be given up entirely to the phenomena, both afternoon and evening, and will be known as Medium's Day. We are pleased to announce the return of Mrs. Alice Sexsmith, one of our popular mediums, who has been serving the National Convention in Washington, D. C. Interest is being shown in the proposed Fraternal Camp Association by encouraging letters from Spiritualists and others throughout the state. Mrs. R. S. Lillie of California, one of the most able lecturers before the public, will be with us next month. Tell your friends. Mrs. Lillie is a wonderfully gifted orator, and will have something for each of us."

K. W. Grove writes: "Mrs. Hamilton Gill, after a pleasant rest at Onset Bay, has taken up her winter work with much enthusiasm, being in excellent health and spirits. She has not resumed meetings in a public hall, but is holding circles in various parts of the city by request. These circles at private houses have met with unusual success, and many have been convinced by the excellent tests given of the truth of spirit return. Among her engagements is a meeting to be held one evening every two weeks at the residence of members of an orthodox church on Ellis avenue, who are seeking more consolation than mere faith could give, found the consolation of knowledge through Mrs. Gill's mediumship. Mrs. Gill has held meetings for the Olcott society, and lent a helping hand at other places. Her Thursday night circles are held as usual. We are glad of the ministry of this helpful medium."

The lecturer, W. F. Peck, has now moved to No. 1817 Bacon street, St. Louis, Mo., his home address. He writes from Springfield, Mo.: "I am having excellent meetings here; am drawing back one by one the earnest and thoughtful Spiritualists, who have been driven away by the conscienceless tricksters with which this town has been cursed to a superlative degree. Address me for the present, at No. 1524 Roberson ave., Springfield, Mo.'

W. W. Aber writes from Bellingham, Wash.: "Having made a general tour through the principal cities of the west, myself and wife are now located for a short time in Bellingham, Wash., where we have resided for the past three months. Mrs. Aber is lecturing each Sunday evening, followed by me with tests. My circles here and elsewhere have been large and appreciative. My wife is open for lecture engagements and I for my old phase—materialization. Anyone wishing to communicate with us will reach us at 1901½ Bellingham, Wash."

Samuel A. Huntington writes from Malden, Mass.: "Our society held a very interesting mid-week meeting on Thursday evening, 17th inst., With Mr. James Litchman and Mrs. Raulett, both of Boston, as speakers. On Sunday evening, 20th inst., Mr. Fred Gowing of Boston, and Miss Alice M. Whall of Everett, Mass., were speakers. Mr. Gowing made a brief address on 'The Science of Osteopathy and Magnetic Healing,' giving a demonstration of the same. Mrs. Whall, prefaced her work by reading two fine poems, after which she devoted an hour to very fine message work. Mrs. Ruth A. Swift of Haverhill, Mass., will be the speaker on the 27th and Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn of Stoneham, Mass., on the 3rd of November."

W. J. Colville's address at the present time is 611 Grant Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.

Tenth Anniversary and Second Grand Bazaar. The committee writes: "On Saturday, Sunday and Monday, November 2, 3, and 4, 1907, the Bund der Warheit No. 18, will celebrate its Tenth Anniversary, at Hack's Hall, 519 Larrabee street, beginning Saturday evening, and ending Monday evening. The Anniversary celebration will be opened with our Second Grand Bazaar, the proceeds of which are to be applied to the building fund, for the purchase of property to be used as a Spiritual Temple, where we can carry on our work in the interest of pure and true Spiritualism unhindered. At 3 p. m., Sunday afternoon, the Anniversary services will be held, including a very select program of lectures, music and messages, by mediums and workers of a high grade and order. Supper will be served on Sunday evening at the hall at prices within the reach of all, and the evening hours will be devoted to visiting, patronizing the Bazaar, and dancing. Admission 15 cents a person, payable at the door. We heartily invite all friends and fellow workers in our glorious cause to come and help us make this Fair once more a grand success. Aid us with your presence, your good will and with your money, and when the opportunity offers, we will gladly and cheerfully reciprocate every kindness shown us. Come out anyhow, if you want to enjoy a good time. You can't miss that anyway, rain or shine.

Mrs. M. V. Arris, the medium, is seriously ill at her home, at 4 South Ada street, Chicago. Will the friends call and see her.

W. Brockway writes: "The Occult Scientists are meeting with good success. Every Sunday the audience has increased, until last Sunday Vincennes Assembly Hall, 3514 Vincennes avenue, was crowded. Last Sunday at the Medium's meeting and conference, the subject taken for discussion, "What Proof Have We of Immortality, and Why Do Mediums have Indian Guides?" It was handled with sound and logical reasoning. Mr. Hillis gave positive proof of immortality with his tests and messages. The afternoon meetings are thrown open to any and all phases of mediumship. The evening was devoted entirely to messages and tests by Mrs. Brockway, all being recognized. On Sunday, November 3, 8 p. m., Mr. William Krick and Regine Wagner will be united.

Mr. H. Smith writes: "The Society Student's of Nature, at Van Buren Opera House, had the pleasure of listening to Rev. T. C. Warner, Sunday, October 26, assisted by the Pastor, Mrs. M. Schumacher and Sister Smith, The coming Sunday evening, flower readings by the pastor; all will recieve a communication."

J. W. Ring passed through the city last week on his way to Pueblo, Col., to visit his venerable father. He will then go to San Diego, Cal., to fill an engagement there. He is very popular there and is doing a most excellent work. His permanent address will be, Spiritual Temple, San Diego, Cal.

Dr. J. H. Randall, secretary of the Chicago Spiritualists League, and the Chaplain of the Commander's Association of Cook County, Department of Illinois G. A. R., has part of his Sunday evenings engaged for the fall and winter and would make other engagements with societies desiring his services; also will serve at funerals. Address 1058 Washington Blvd., Chicago.

A. G. Cleveland writes: "The Society of the Psychic Forces held meeting as usual at 361 E. 43rd st., at Wilcox Hall on Sunday evening, October 20. Brother Arthur Hooper gave a short address under control of his guides, and then Sister Harper gave messages which were well received. Brother Hooper sang a solo, assisted by Mr. Carl Richards. Mrs. Isa Cleveland gave some clear messages, answering questions accurately, blindfolded. Admission 10 cents. Good music."

Mrs Clara Stewart King writes to her old-time friends, and others who wish to hear from her, as follows: "For some time I have been getting letters that have been advertised in my old home cities, and forwarded to me; others asking me to let my present address be known, as they desire me to officiate at funerals of their friends, and other services. I shall be glad to respond to any such call that comes to me, and am glad to have my friends remember me with letters. If there are any Spiritualists in, or near Omaha who chance to see this, I would be glad to hear from them. Address at my home, 501 N. 18th st., So Omaha, Neb."

A. W. Pratt of Oakland, Cal., writes that he is 88 years of aga. He speaks exultingly of his conversion to Spiritualism. We hope he will reach the century mark.

C. A. Sollinger writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "Would you kindly correct my mistake in article of last Progressive Thinker. Mrs. M. S. Greenamyer received call to speak at our Temple for the months of November and December, instead of October and November, 1908, and Mrs. Marian Carpenter for the month of October, 1908. Frank T. Ripley's work, speaking as well as his messages, are better and more convincing than we ever heard of him before."

ATTENTION, LYCEUMS!

HAVING BEEN ELECTED "NATIONAL SUPERINTENDENT OF LYCEUMS" I DESIRE TO CORRESPOND WITH CONDUCTORS AND LEADERS OF LYCEUMS, THAT WE MAY WORK TOGETHER FOR THE GOOD OF THE CHILDREN GENERALLY. "THE SPIRITUALIST LYCEUM QUARTERLY" WILL BE ISSUED IN THE NEAR FUTURE, AND WILL BE FURNISHED TO ALL WHO WANT IT AT COST. WE URGE ALL LYCEUMS TO SEND IN A REPORT OF THEIR MEMBERSHIP AT ONCE IF POSSIBLE.

THE N. S. A. CONVENTION.

Miss Alice L'Hommedieu, of Chicago, won the hearts of the convention as well as the people of Washington by her sweet singing and charming personality.

Mrs. Alice Sexsmith, of Chicago, gave messages from across the border, all being recognized.

Mr. J. S. Maxwell deserves special mention for the good work he did in abolishing the proxy system from this convention.

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Sanders, of Elyria, Ohio, sent two checks of $1,000 each for the endowment fund of the N. S. A. It would be well if many of the Spiritualists would take this method of giving while yet in the body, and not leaving their wills to be contested, and the money to go to lawyers.

Mr. Tabor Thompson, of Philadelphia, as reading clerk delighted the convention by his good enunciation and well modulated voice. The best wishes of the delegates are extended to him.

The Fraternal Daughters held their weekly meeting in Atlas Hall, 406 Ogden avenue, on Wednesday, October 23, and the following mediums took part: Mrs. Dr. Caird, Mrs. Helyett, and Mrs. J. Stuner Adams. On Wednesday, October 30, we intend to give an old-time Halloween party. Everybody is especially requested to bring a sheet and pillow case, and we are going to have a real old-time ghost party. Those who never saw a ghost, don't miss this. It will be one of the finest features of the Fall season. Supper will be served at 9 p. m. Afternoon session starts at 2:30 p. m. Don't forget the number, 406 Ogden ave., 2nd floor. Everybody cordially invited to attend.

W. H. Leidigh writes from Villa Ridge, Ill.: "I see I have received the last number of The Progressive Thinker that I am entitled to, and if I wish to enjoy its weekly visits any further, I must add our little mite to keep the machinery running. It is useless for me to attempt to find language to express our appreciation of The Progressive Thinker, for I certainly would fail. It grows better as it grows older. I don't think any publisher ever had a more able corps of contributors (if as good). Every week its pages are crowded with the inspiration of the best and brightest minds of the age. It is useless for me to take the too valuable space of The Progressive Thinker enumerating the names of able writers who so ably fill its columns every week. I am indeed glad to see that the great State of Illinois has been honored by the selection of Brother Geo. B. Warne as President of the N. S. A. Brother Barrett has done well, and I have no doubt about Brother Warne filling his place most acceptably. May the good work prosper."

D. G. Hill writes: "Sunday, October 20, was another day and evening of enjoyment for those who attended the services of The Golden Rule Spiritual Society's meeting. The afternoon exercises were by Mrs Nora E. Hill, with short talks and for messages, our brother Wm. Traver and Sister Harper; other work was of a high order. For the evening our Mrs. Nellie Kusserow gave a most entertaining lecture followed by messages by Mrs. Addie Clyburne and Mrs. Nora E. Hill, both of whom met the best expectations of those whom they reached. The speaker for November 3 will be our pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, who in the afternoon will give readings from flowers, assisted by others. Bear in mind the Harvest Festival and Dance, Saturday evening, November 2, at the Star Lodge Hall; also the fact that our society holds circles at the home of the President, 705 W. Madison street, on each Thursday evening, all for the benefit of the cause we love."

Louisa L. Kirby wishes to correspond with some good speaker who wishes a good test medium to work with them. Address her at 118 Upton avenue, Battle Creek, Mich.

Carrie L. Hatch writes from 9 Appleton street, Appleton Hall, Boston: "The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society met as usual with the president, Mrs. M. E. A. Albee, in the chair; business meeting at 4:30, and plans for greater work were suggested by the directors. The supper was a great success. The meeting in the evening was a delightful one. Many of our mediums and speakers were present and many tests were given. Our Golden Jubilee will be held on Friday, November 15; a great day is expected. Everything is being done to make it a gala day. Among those who are expected are Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, Mrs. W. J. Willis, Mr. F. A. Wiggin, Mrs. S. C. Cunningham, Mrs. Nellie Abbott, Mrs. Carrie F. Loring, Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, Mrs. Chapman, Nettie Holt Harding, Mr. Albert P. Blinn, and many others. Miss Nettie Palmer, vocalist; Miss Gertrude Waters, pianist; Mrs. Haida Hall, singer. Instrumental music, Mr. Samuel Graham; Hattie Waterhouse, violinists; Miss Alice Waterhouse, pianist. Reception at 3 p. m. The exercises will be free to all, and old members are earnestly requested to make a special effort to attend this meeting next Friday night. The 'Queen' of Honolulu will be present and read the future for all who present the dime to her; this is by the "Teulula System."

Hattie F. R. Peet, secretary, writes: "The ladies of the 'Illinois Sunflower Club' are busy with preparations for their approaching bazaar, which is to be held at Jefferson Hall, No. 70 Adams street, on Saturday afternoon and evening, November 30. The following committee is appointed to serve at the bazaar, and contributions to the different booths are solicited from our friends and patrons; Mrs. Isa Cross, general manager; Mrs. A. W. Bloom, on supper; Mrs. E. J. Bloom and Mrs. Myer, on aprons; Mrs. Nash, on handkerchiefs; Mrs. J. W. Howes, chairman Psychic Committee; Mrs. B. Hilbert country grocery store; Mrs. Keller, on candy; Mrs. Goodrich, toilet articles and cosmetics; Mrs. Kirchner, on dolls. Other booths will be added. A fine supper will be served at 6 o'clock. Come and bring your friends. Friends will please send their contributions to the bazaar to No. 40 Loomis street, care of Mrs. J. R. Francis, president."

The Sunflower Club wishes to announce a Grand Raffle of an Indian figure, done in oil, and donated by the well-known artist, Mrs. Jessie Bradley, for the benefit of the club. This raffle will take place at the approaching bazaar to be held at No. 70 Adams street, Fraternity Hall building, Saturday afternoon and evening, November 30. Tickets for this beautiful figure, 25 cents. Fine supper served at 6 p. m. Don't fail to come and bring your friends, and have a good social time.

Correspondent writes: "Sunday evening Dr. Burgess and your correspondent, piloted by Mrs. Hilbert, who has been given the extra title of "the parading medium," by her seemingly uneasy method of performing her platform work) went to West Pullman, to attend a meeting of a little society that is being organized, in fact is in a good condition, just at present, though not yet old enough to be named. Dr. Burgess was the speaker of the evening and used the very appropriate theme of "Organization" from which to interest the audience. Mr. and Mrs. Cushman, aided by Mrs. Hilbert and others began these meetings, last June, and under the management of Mr. Wm. Perry, and Mr. Richardson's little family orchestra, consisting of his four sons and himself, four violins and the piano, a cornetist., etc., and their exquisite music, the society is on the high road to a grand success. The mediums who gave messages were Mrs. Harper, Mrs. Longstaff, Mr. Temple and Mrs. Hilbert ("the parading medium"). Cake and coffee were also a part of the program, and were highly appreciated. Their next meeting will be held Sunday evening, November 10. Their hall is No 1115 Michigan ave."

STATE MASS MEETING.

The Michigan State Spiritualist Association will hold a State Mass Meeting in Grand Rapids, October 26 and 27. Saturday evening session and three sessions Sunday. Good speakers are expected: E. W. Sprague and wife, Mrs. Marion Carpenter, Mrs. Amanda Coffman, Mrs. Belle Fuller, Mrs. Jennie Martin, Dr. A. B. Spinney and others.

Meetings held in Odd Fellow's Hall 12 Lyon street, under the auspices of the Psychical Research Society. Visitors cared for.

TO KANSAS SPIRITUALISTS.

An Important Work Contemplated by the President.

In fulfillment of my work as President of the Kansas State Spiritualist Association, I am arranging to make a tour of the State, lecturing on the principles of Spiritualism. To the end that the greatest number of people shall be reached at the least expense to societies and individuals, please write me at once so the route shall be mapped out. Let us have a good report to tur nin next June.

Yours for progress,

AN EARNEST PLEA.

To Get in Tune with Infinite Law, and Thus Attain Happiness.

Happiness is a comparative term, and is adjustable in quite the same manner as our conception of God.

While it is true that our state of happiness consists in our mental attitude toward our surroundings, the fact remains that TRUE happiness can only be obtained by a harmonious co-operation of all conditions with which we come in contact.

The mental attitude of the idiot or insane person is of such a nature that many seem happier with their illusions than many of us, supposedly sane, with our delusions.

If, as the poet Pope says, "O happiness, our being's end and aim," is true, it is to be brought about by complying with Nature's laws, and it is up to us to obtain a sufficiently clear interpretation of the same to realize in our own experience of what happiness consists.

It is undoubtedly a fact that the motive power of all human effort is to obtain those conditions of environment which, to our mind, we conceive is necessary for our happiness.

The gourmand's idea of happiness is to possess all that will satisfy the seeming demand of his stomach.

The average business man of today expects to be happy when his business will attain to a certain volume.

Many other illustrations could be given, but these are sufficient to point out that the general conception of happiness is not built on a solid foundation—in fact on error.

The tendency of the present age is to investigate the foundations of things—to be shown, and this fact will be the means whereby the conditions which produce unhappiness will be rooted out, and man will continue to work out his salvation as he has been doing from the beginning.

The root of all evil, which is the antithesis of happiness, is ignorance, and as man is gradually arriving at a knowledge of the truth, he is entering into the possession of his inheritance of that happiness which is real, is lasting, and not obtained through the misfortune of others.

What awakened man can be happy when misery and destitution can be seen all about us, when injustice and tyranny is used in our dealings with each other?

We will but begin to learn the meaning of happiness when we see about us our children growing to their full stature of men and women with conditions favorable to develop all those qualities which approximate the perfect physical, intellectual and ethical being.

If sociological conditions prevent the development of these admirable faculties, then let us revolutionize society, break the ground and change the crop, clear off the noxious weeds which have heretofore seemed necessary and get in tune with the infinite law of progression by harmonizing our surroundings with the present needs of man, which are, namely, an opportunity to express the BEST within us, not the worst.

THE CAUSE IN PHILADELPHIA.

The First Association's Temple. Mr. Thompson, Pastor.

To the Editor:—In the recent improvements to the First Association's Temple, Mr. Thompson, our pastor, inaugurated what was a novelty to us, in placing mottoes on the walls of ante-rooms, either side of the rostrum. They were composed by him. Over the door on the left and right were placed these words; "OTHERS BELIEVE and WE KNOW." On the face of the left room, this truth: "SO UNIQUE IS THIS WEB OF LIFE, OUR VERY MISTAKES ARE WOVEN IN TO MAKE THE FABRIC STRONGER." On the right side of the rostrum: "THE FUTURE WHICH GOOD ANGELS PREDICT FOR MANKIND IS UPWARD AND ONWARD FOREVER." Are not these worth passing on? Our pastor discoursed on each of these mottoes on succeeding Sunday evenings in September, and handed us some noble lights to follow.

The annual meeting of our members was held October 7, at which time we re-elected five retiring trustees. Following this the Board of Trustees held a meeting, and after clearing up some old business, officers for the coming year were chosen.

Captain Keffer was elected to succeed himself as president.

Mr. Lawrence, who has been an attache since Mr. Thompson came with us, was re-elected vice-president, in which office for the past year he has been practically the leader in the progressive work done.

Mr. Morrill, who has served both as secretary and as treasurer of our Association for several years, had to leave before the election commenced, owing to his wife having passed to spirit life on Saturday, October 5, and the body still being in his keeping. We all felt stricken with our brother, as it must have been a deep sorrow to part with her in whose companionship he had journeyed the past fifty years of life here. We certainly realize and appreciate the great aid he has been to this Association for the last thirteen years, having, up to the first of this year, settled the debts of the Association from his own pocket when sufficient revenue did not materialize, and other members not paying their portion of the expenses. Under the new order of things this is changed. Mr. Morrill has been repaid his heavy loans to the cause, and others are now doing their share of contributing. He has also been filling the two offices above mentioned, no one seeming to care to relieve him in this particular any more than in the financial need.

The nominations being open for secretary, Mr. Thompson asked whether it would not be proper to elect a secretary and a treasurer, as, since the advent of the new regime which came with our pastor, the duties of the secretary have been greatly increased, and work would be piled on Mr. Morrill constantly because of our intense activity in all lines, and whether, having attended to the duties of the two offices so long, it was not only fair, but a duty, for us to relieve him ere he be compelled to ask for assistance because of increased duties. Mr. Thompson regarded it as imposing on good nature to expect Brother Morrill to attend to the duties of secretary in addition to those of treasurer, where as most societies not so large as the First Association had these offices separated, and often the secretaryship divided into at least two offices; and further, our Constitution calling for separate officers, were we abiding within the dictum by combining them.

For treasurer, Mr. Morrill was nominated and unanimously elected, and your correspondent chosen as secretary for the coming year.

The latter was also appointed as Conductor of Lyceum; and Mrs. Myers, who has so nobly held it together for some seasons, was continued in her position as guardian. We expect to have the children in the happy run of things, that the lyceum may also bud to new life.

OBSESSION.

It is Acting a Prominent Part in the World To-day, and Must be Considered—Our Insane Asylums Contain Many Who are Under a Baneful Spirit Influence—See Devils in Mrs. Romadka.—Physicians Think Her Possessed Like Bible Demoniacs.

To the Editor:—According to an account in the Chicago Tribune, Mrs. Charles J. Romadka, confessed burglar, is a Jekyll and Hyde character, "possessed of devils" as truly as were the biblical persons whom Jesus restored to moral sanity, is the contention of two Chicago physicians. One of these is Dr. Axel Gustafson, who attended Mrs. Romadka. The other is Dr. Sheldon Leavitt, a well-known practitioner and connected with numerous medical societies and Chicago hospitals.

In outlining his startling beliefs the latter frankly admits that the position he is taking "would be regarded as mere nonsense by the orthodox pathologist."

"But," he continued, "it must be remembered that he is wedded to materialism and has no definite faith in a conscious existence beyond the so-called death."

Victim of Occult Powers.

Both physicians do not hesitate to express the belief that the woman is under the influence of "disembodied spirits."

"This woman when herself was all a woman should be," said Dr. Gustafson. "When another spirit overpowered her personality she was what the police declare her to be."

Dr. Leavitt, whom Dr. Gustafson consulted, said in his letter of reply:

"I have found enough to justify your belief and mine that it is another case of obsession, as it is commonly called—'possession,' as I am disposed to call it. By the orthodox medical specialist I suppose it would be regarded as a case of 'dementia.'

Return to Archaic Diagnosis.

"The term obsession, as used by the latter, signifies a mere delusion, no evil spirit being recognized by him as actually existing. But to certain of us who have returned to the more archaic diagnosis, it is supposed to mean that the term 'possession' better expresses. I really believe that modern scientific physical research has gone far enough to justify the assumption of such a state in many cases hitherto classed under various heads, but more particularly under that of dementia.

"'I don't know what was the matter with me. The devil was in me,' says this woman. 'You can do nothing for me. No one can. There's something bad in me I can't control.'

Cites Attitude of Jews.

"'Even medical men who believe most implicitly in a future existence are not willing to admit the possibility of a disembodied spirit taking possession of the body of another. Christian people are put into the anomalous position of believing most emphatically in the 'divinity' of Jesus Christ, and yet confess that his conception of the alleged demon-possessed people whom he cured and with whose evil spirits he was said to converse, was utterly wrong.

"I formerly trained in the same company and believed in the orthodox medical translation of symptoms like those manifested by this poor Mrs. Romadka, but have come to take a different view. In doing so I have not departed from a rational and scientific line of reasoning.

"The accused is amenable to psychic treatment. She ought not to be punished, but ought to be placed under the care of a good psycho-therapeutist for cure."

When Spiritualists learn that obsession is a fixed fact in our ranks as well as out of it, they will have learned an important lesson.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About 7 words constitute a line.]

Passed to spirit life on September 19, 1907, from the home of her brother, C. F. Ordway, Montaville, Oregon, Mrs. Julia C. Whiting of Oconto, Wis., aged 59 years. She was the beloved daughter of J. S. and M. C. Ordway of Montaville, 538 Armstrong street.

Henry H. Bailey, a pioneer and prominent Spiritualist of Hastings, Mich., passed to spirit life October 15, caused by an accidental fall down a flight of stairs. His age wes sixty-eight years. He has been a constant reader of The Progressive Thinker for years. J. L. REED.

My wife passed to spirit life on October 5, and I was away from home a week to bury her poor body in Connecticut, where most of her family live, and did not get home until the 16th. She was a Spiritualist for 50 years, and for 48 years we have traveled the path of life side by side, and yet I could not call her back to suffer longer in the frail physical body.

F. H. MORRILLL.

Passed to the higher life, September 5, in Philadelphia, Adaline Morrill, wife of the treasurer of the First Association of Spiritualists Deceased was a life-long Spiritualist, active in our association and Women's Progressive Union.

A stroke of paralysis nine years ago left her an invalid, and suffering so long, leaving the mortal was undoubtedly a great relief to her. Pastor Thompson conducted services. Interment, East Hampton, Ct.

Passed to the unseen life from Murphysboro, Ill., of cancer of the stomach, Charles J. Fisher in his 54th year. Seeing spirits and hearing their words, led him to investigate. He thus became a Spiritualist. Alone in a town of 8,000 inhabitants, with no support but a negative one from his family, yet what he knew to be true he stood by to the last. He leaves a wife and seven children.

LOIS WAISBROOKER.

Gone Home—After a long life of loving deeds and thoughts, Mrs. Margaret K. Cooper passed to the higher life from her home in Varysburg, on Monday, October 14, aged seventy-two years. The funeral service was held in the Baptist Church; Mrs. A. G. Atcheson of Buffalo, N. Y., officiating. Mrs. Cooper had been a Spiritualist for more than forty years, and for many years had been attending the Lily Dale Camp.

MRS. LONGLEY'S REPORT.

societies, or even by the people at large as far as helping to arrange for them, at least, is concerned.

Lyceum Work.

The work of the Lyceum and the appointment of a general Lyceum Superintendent—in the person of that efficient worker, Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, was attended to at last Convention; Mrs. Gillespie entered upon her work with ardor and zeal, she did not spare time, or strength in its behalf, but circumstances in her own affairs coming up to make her removal to British Columbia for a year or two, necessary, she was obliged to resign her position as Lyceum Superintendent and to turn all matters connected therewith into the office of the N. S. A. The National Secretary found it impossible to take up the charge of this branch of National work in connection with her other duties, and as the summer vacations for societies were at hand it was deemed best by our Executive Board to leave the matter of appointment of Lyceum manager to the October Convention. Your secretary respectfully requests that our President be empowered to appoint a committee to go over the reports and other literature of Lyceums, including reports and statements of Mrs. Gillespie, said committee to make its report and recommendations to this Convention.

Propaganda.

The Home Office is constantly receiving letters and visitors on the important work of propaganda in various sections by mediums and speakers; calls are coming from the South as well as elsewhere—since beginning this report we have received a call from Mr. and Mrs. George Williams of Birmingham, Alabama, who are very urgent in their requests for mediums and speakers to visit them and open the good work of Spiritualism in that city. If some of our good missionary workers can go in that direction we feel their work would be appreciated and received.

Historian and Editor-at-Large.

The important office of Historian and of Editor-at-Large were merged into one at the last Convention and President Barrett was elected to discharge the double duty thus entailed upon him. That he has done so with honor to our cause and to the N. S. A. as well as with credit to himself, his report cannot fail to show to all candid and thinking minds. As Mr. Barrett has been an inmate of your secretary's home for the greater part of six months, and a daily worker in the Home Office, she has had ample opportunity to keep in touch with his work as both Historian and Editor-at Large, and is qualified to state that the labors thus accomplished have been for the furtherance of the best interests of our cause on the one hand—as Editor-at-Large, and for the preservation of most valuable records and events in Spiritualism, on the other, as Historian of our movement.

Your secretary feels that at this juncture, when such important labors have been done and the opening of a grand work in the line of Historian is made, that it would be unwise to take this labor out of the hands of the present manager, or to change to some other, no matter how able that other may be, for the field of research that our Historian has entered upon is vast and rich in material and will yield wonderful stores to his ready hand and brain.

Necrology.

The past year has taken many prominent Spiritualists from our ranks, the busy Spirit of Change has transported some of our best workers and leaders to the immortal realms; our President will undoubtedly chronicle the passing of some of them in his annual statement to the Convention, but no report to our National Association would be complete from its secretary that did not mention the illness and spiritual transition of our long-time Treasurer and ever faithful leader, Theodore J. Mayer of Washington, D. C. As perhaps is well known to most of you, Brother Mayer had been in steadily failing health for three years, but his indomitable spirit, together with the many affairs that he had in hand kept him at work early and late and did not permit him to take the long and needed relaxation from business that his case required; but his work was not all of a personal matter to himself, for in addition to the time and attention that he gave to the N. S. A. and to the affairs of the local Spiritual Society in this city, much of his thought, personal attention and daily planning were given to the needs of a public emergency hospital in Washington to which he contributed thousands of dollars and in the building of which he was benevolently concerned; he also gave time and planning to the affairs of an educational University here, and all these matters of interest and of expense to him, together with his business concerns, drew upon his resources of strength and energy until almost the last moment of his earthly career. Late in January of this year, our brother became too ill to continue at his post, and after a serious illness during the ensuing weeks passed to the higher life on March 12.

It is with emotions that appeal to the tender, spiritual side of our human nature that we touch upon the life and works of this good man and Spiritualist; no words can do adequate justice to his memory and labor; only the silent benediction of love may rise to him in his home of light from our hearts and be a token of our appreciation of his worth and tribute to his good deeds.

Many times during his illness your secretary was privileged to visit him, and with her he planned the last deeds he could perform for Spiritualism in settling his accounts as treasurer of the Association, and almost his last work was to send from his sick bed, to the manager of this Hall in which you are assembled, the payment in full from his own purse, freely given for the rent of these five days of our Convention.

Hoping to recover his health, but conscious of his dangerous illness, Brother Mayer conversed freely of the life beyond, also of his wishes for matters to be accomplished in the event of his passing; he had no fear, but spoke calmly of the great To Be—and the last words he ever uttered to the secretary of this Association a few days before his transition, were: "God bless you; give my love to everybody!" reverently she now brings these words to you, his co-workers and friends, as his message from Beyond.

While it is now a matter of general information that three years prior to his decease, Brother Mayer made transfer of three good buildings to the N. S. A., houses adjoining on two streets the N. S. A. Headquarters, it is necessary to refer to this transaction in this annual report to our constituents. This deed was placed in the charge of Mr. Mayer's attorney to be delivered at once to the N. S. A. secretary at his demise, and by her, to be at once taken to the District Recorder's office for registration. Your secretary had been repeatedly charged by the donor, during the last three years, to be sure and attend faithfully to this request, and in the early morning of March 13th, our Brother having passed away during the previous night, she went to the lawyer's office, signed to him for the deed and carried it to the Recorder's office for record. We did not receive the deed till some time after the Board meeting the middle of April, but on its delivery into the hands of cmfwyp cmfw livery into our hands we found that the property thus transferred to the N. S. A. is to be held for the benefit of the Medium's Relief Fund of this organization. Your secretary is happy to record this fact, which places this generous gift in the light of a sacred charge to the N. S. A. for the benefit and blessing of aged and helpless mediums who have given their lives to the service of humanity. It also proves to us that our beloved Brother Mayer ever held the needs and interests of the mediums at heart, and that he fully realized the grand work of the N. S. A. in caring for those helpless ones. The property mentioned is occupied by good and desirable tenants, and the rent from the three houses amounts to ninety-three dollars and fifty cents per month. Some repairs have had to be made and some more must be attended to at once, but the property is in a fine locality and of value to this Association. At the time we acquired it it was in the care of a real estate agent, but seeing no reason why the money paid to him should not be saved to the N. S. A., your secretary appealed to the Board to allow her to collect the rents and attend to the matters that might come up before her with the tenants, submitting all essentials to the Executive Board, which was granted. She has had no difficulty in attending to this duty, and the N. S. A. has been saved nearly five dollars each month thereby. The taxes on this property had not been paid for the year and the N. S. A. was held responsible for them. We paid these taxes in full, but after the adjournment of the Board in April the secretary thought that as a matter of business, the estate of our benefactor should pay the tax to the time of recording the deed, as said estate had received all revenue from the houses up to that time; she accordingly entered into correspondence with the executors of the estate and after some letters, pro and con between them, we secured their check for the sum of $98.20.

A Memorial service to Brother Mayer was held in Washington, April 14; under the joint auspices of the N. S. A. and the First Association of the City; nearly the entire Board participated in these exercises, all of which were reported for and published in The Progressive Thinker.

A New Treasurer.

In the person of our well loved and honored Brother and Trustee, Mr. C. L. Stevens of Pittsburg, was elected at the April Board meeting; this election left a vacancy on the Board of Trustees, to which the President of the First Association of Spiritualists of this City, Mr. F. A. Wood, was elected. These gentlemen are both very efficient in their work and valued members of our Association.

"What the N. S. A. Has Done."

The National Trustees at their Board meeting in May, framed and accepted a leaflet with the above caption to be published in the Spiritual papers and then issued for distribution to our societies and to other interested inquirers. This article treated in brief of so many good works of this Association and furnished a ready reply to our critics and others, to the query of what use to Spiritualism is the N. S. A., and to its auxiliaries; Editor Francis generously printed a number of these leaflets for the Home Office, as well as the list of chartered societies, with no expense to our treasury.

The Parting Word.

With this Report, Mr. President and fellow delegates, and with the close of the Convention of 1907, which I feel will be a memorable assembly in the annals of Spiritualism, the work of your secretary as an official in the National Spiritualists' Association, will end; but as a laborer in the cause of Spiritualism voice and pen will ever be ready to not only defend our National body and its grand objects, but also to enhance its interests and promote its labors whenever power and opportunity permit. For nine consecutive years, I, as your secretary and co-worker have enjoyed the sympathy, aid and confidence of our constituents, an honor of which I am justly proud and which I fully appreciate. Having received the election to this important office in 1898, and on each succeeding year the unanimous election—with no opposing candidate—I feel that I can carry with me the good will and kind-thoughts of all connected with our work; this to me is a happy thought and of more value than aught else. The relations between the auxiliaries of our N. S. A., the various members of its Board of officers during my official work and myself have ever been pleasing and encouraging to me; I can think of no friction that ever arose to leave a sting; passing shadows there have been but they have melted away in the sunlight of explanation and of kind thought, and only the blessed memory of many congenial associations with hosts of good and true Spiritualists abides with me.

I have been repeatedly asked by our people—and urged by our auxiliaries—during the last six months, not to withdraw from the N. S. A. but as far as serving as its secretary, the custodian of its Home Office goes, I feel persuaded by both physical and psychical conditions and reasons, that the time has come for me to say the parting word and to decline renomination at this convention. My best of good wishes go with you, my helpful thoughts are extended to you, and my pledge to do all that I can in my feeble way to aid and encourage the N. S. A. is made to you. In regard to the new secretary who shall be elected to our office I must speak, asking the Convention to be thoughtful and deliberate in its choice; nine years of service have made me familiar with the work and needs of the office and of its custodian. The place is not easily filled. The duties are manifold—to keep in touch with the societies, the press, individual investigators and Spiritualists, to meet their many demands requires tact and a trained qualification on the part of the incumbent of the Home Office. The correspondence requires the writing of thousands of letters yearly on the part of the secretary—letters that cannot be shifted to anyone else; matters arise of importance that must be met at once, sometimes by the secretary; articles must be prepared for the secular and spiritual press; reporters received and interviews given with care and a measure of conservatism; the financial accounts must be accurately kept by systematic bookkeeping; the free library must be attended to and the headquarters kept in thorough condition and attractiveness; and the secretary must live at the Home Office that it may be properly cared for. It is a good house with room enough for a family, and of course the secretary pays the rent for the residential part. A thousand and one things that cannot be here enumerated must be looked after; remember this, dear friends, in the selection of your secretary. When your present incumbent came into the office she had but little idea of the numerous duties to be attended to in a great National body, it seemed to her then that it was a case of "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread"—true the case is much different now than it was then in the sense that we have now a good exchequer and then the N. S. A. was sixteen Hundred Dollars in debt—with no money to draw from till noble Theodore J. Mayer came forward, and advanced the money for the payment of all debts, placing one thousand dollars at our command to draw from till we could refill the treasury. We at once set to work to solicit contributions for the work of the National body, letters were sent all over the country appealing for aid; the spiritual papers—and there were ten of them at that time, gave freely of their columns for this work; gradually we crept along to better things, and we went into the 1899 Convention with all bills paid and three thousand dollars in the treasury. At the beginning of our administration, the Home Office was in chaos, making the newcomer heartsick at its contemplation and the mountain of work to be done there before the new labor of the year could be entered upon, but it all cleared away and at this time, everything is in readiness for the incoming secretary, therefore in many ways the work will be easier for the one who is to come; but in nine years the objects of the N. S. A. have enlarged and the position of the occupant of the home office cannot fail to be of great importance and responsibility, hence, again I ask for your calm, sober and deliberate consideration of this subject before election hour arrives.

And now, dear friends, I come to the parting of the ways, and in doing so, I wish to reiterate my thankful and loving appreciation of the great blessing I have received from all connected with my office and work; to the editors of the spiritual press, collectively and personally I owe sincere gratitude and recognition; to the honorable and beloved officers of the National Association; to all of our chartered societies—state and local—and their members; to thousands of friends all over the country who do not count themselves as our constituents, and to Mrs. A. O. Fugitt and Mr. C. P. Longley, for help rendered in official life in many an anxious hour, I desire here publicly to attest my heartfelt thanks for and expressions of value, of all the good that has been shown to me—and especially is this true concerning the aid and blessing of hosts of unseen but none the less valued helpers of the Angel world—to whom I owe my allegiance and debt of loving gratitude.

With cordial greetings and tender affection to one and all, Respectfully submitted.

MARY T. LONGLEY.

CONTENTMENT.

More blest than he who has traveled far,
And is cheered by thousands who think him great,
And luckier than the anointed are,
With their jeweled crowns and their cares of State,
And richer than those who would govern by
The might of millions they coldly claim,
Is he who has never been uplifted high,
Nor ever been weary pursuing fame,
Who comes and goes in a world that is small,
A world that is free from pretense and care—
Who in his nook has the love of all,
And through the years is contented there.

Report of Committee on Auxiliary Society Reports

To the Officers and Delegates of the N. S. A., in Convention Assembled:

Your committee has received for its consideration reports from three camp meetings, one Temple Fund society, thirty local societies and sixteen State Associations.

Though so few of the auxiliary societies have reported, we are pleased to notice a marked increase of interest in the manner of preparing them. They are more systematic than in former years and give more needful items of information.

CAMP MEETINGS.

Only a few of the camps have sent in any statement. Mississippi Valley Spiritualist Association, Compounce, and New Era, Ore. We recommend that the incoming secretary be instructed to make an endeavor to have camp meetings more closely affiliated with the N. S. A.

LYCEUMS.

Many lyceums have reported through the late N. S. A. superintendent, Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie. These reports are full of interest and have been referred to the Lyceum Committee. We recommend that every effort be made to sustain lyceums.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

The Morris Pratt Institute, of Whitewater, Wis., is the only school chartered by the N. S. A., and, in fact, the only one of the kind in the United States. The present Board of Trustees seem to have created more interest in the institution than has been for years. The full report will be presented by its officers at this convention.

TEMPLE FUND SOCIETY.

This society reports about two hundred dollars in its treasury, and an increase of interest. As its full report will come before this Convention to be acted upon, it calls for no special recommendation from this committee.

LOCAL SOCIETIES.

Thirty local associations have filed written statements and financial as well. Your committee is pleased to note that there are a number of local societies that present very complete statements of the work accomplished during the year and are in good financial standing, many owning their own temples, and the amount expended for speakers and mediums shows the loyal support of the members.

While many are weak and unable to employ a speaker regularly, yet your committee notes with interest the tendency on the part of the local societies to have settled speakers.

An urgent call for circuit missionary work comes from the societies. We recommend that this be acted upon by he incoming Board, and that the missionary endeavor to strengthen the societies already in existence. The written reports are much more complete than usual.

We recommend that the incoming secretary be instructed to make every effort to obtain uniform statements and more complete written reports.

STATE ASSOCIATIONS.

Out of twenty-two State Associations chartered by the National, sixteen have reported: Minnesota, Illinois, New York, California, Indiana, Kansas, Ohio, Missouri, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Oregon, Texas, Oklahoma, Maine, Wisconsin and Washington.

The incompleteness of these reports, and the weak condition of many of the State Associations, warrant your committee in recommending that no State charter be issued unless there are at least ten societies in the State in active operation. The information conveyed in these reports submitted to us is the explanation for this recommendation.

The importance of keeping on file at the office of the N. S. A. a complete statement of the work accomplished by each State Association does not seem to appeal to many secretaries. There are some notable exceptions to this rule; New York, Indiana, California, Missouri and Ohio are worthy of especial mention for their endeavor to present complete reports. The Illinois State Association, through its secretary, especially emphasizes the fact that he tried to follow as closely as circumstances permitted the great prize report of last year, and his report shows that Illinois is a close second in honors in the character of the itemized statement furnished.

The Minnesota State Association has again filed a model report, which contains such a complete record of the State work, and every item is of useful information. Your committee feels that just recognition is due for the careful manner in which this report is made out. It reflects great credit upon the Minnesota State Association and its faithful secretary, Mr. Irvine.

Your committee recommends that a tabulated form be printed, upon the plan of this banner State Association, and that a copy be sent to both State and local auxiliaries with explicit instructions to use it as an example to go by when sending in their statements, and urge upon the incoming secretary that every endeavor be made to carry out the requirements of the Constitution and By-laws of the N. S. A.

Your committee recommends the regulation of the proxy system of voting, so as to give fair representation to each auxiliary society. We recommend that a complete list of auxiliary societies of the N. S. A. be published and sent to each auxiliary, with a view to having all auxiliaries acquainted with the status of the N. S. A.

Owing to the conflicting statements contained in the Constitution and By-laws, your committee recommends that a careful revision of same be made, and that all errors, typographical or others, be eliminated. The errors especially noted are on several pages of the Constitution and By-laws, which conflict with each other. On page 6, after the word "society" there is a typographical error. It should read "One delegate for each chartered society of lay members and one delegate for each fifty members or fraction thereof." We recommend the committee on amendments be instructed to correct the typographical errors and conflicting statements in other sections of the Constitution and By-laws as now printed.

At the present time each society is granted a delegate on behalf of its charter and one on behalf of its membership, but the error in this particular case seems to make it read that there is to be no delegate for charter.

Your committee recommends the adoption of a new By-law requiring each delegate to wear a badge and stating that no badge be issued to any delegate or proxy whose society has not fulfilled the requirements of the Constitution and By-laws of the N. S. A. in regard to dues.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

No complete report of the financial standing of the auxiliaries can possibly be given on account of the incompleteness of the reports. We recommend that this condition be obviated by requesting that a full account be rendered in connection with a brief written report.

In conclusion, though the reports rendered in no wise show the full strength of the societies chartered by the N. S. A., yet there is no doubt in the minds of your committee that each society is striving to do its best for the interests of the Association. Therefore we recommend that where societies are weak they be helped and strengthened by missionary work until they are able to go forward in their endeavors to spread the truth of Spiritualism. We realize the great good that has been accomplished by the N. S. A. through its auxiliaries. "United we stand, divided we fall" should be our motto, and if we all unite in harmonious action, the N. S. A. will grow to be a greater power for good in the future than it has ever been in the past.

MORRIS PRATT INSTITUTE.

A Thousand-Dollar Endowment Fund.

We have just received a donation of one thousand dollars for Morris Pratt Institute from Mr. and Mrs. Allen Saunders, of Elyria, Ohio. It is in the form of a Gold Bond payable in 1923, bearing interest at five percent. Thus this gift becomes an endowment.

There are some suggestions growing out of this donation that I wish to make to those who contemplate doing something sooner or later in a financial way for this institution.

Since the opening of the school in September, I have received a number of letters in regard to giving aid to the Institute. One was from a lawyer in a neighboring city who inquired the legal name of the school, saying he had a client who contemplated inserting something in his will for its benefit. From another lawyer in another city I received a similar inquiry. From a wealthy and well-known Spiritualist in another State I received a letter bearing on the same subject. I wish to suggest to them and other friends of the school the idea of donating now what they intend shall go to the school, instead of putting it into their will to come to the school at their decease.

If a person is dependent for his daily living on what he wishes to donate, it might be advisable for him to put it into his will; but for all who do not need the proceeds of what they intend to give, would it not be better to close the transaction at once? In these days when so many bequests to Spiritualism are contested, causing great expense and often breakage of the will, there is no certainty connected with such a method of disposing of one's property, especially when given to an unpopular cause.

This bond which we have received we have deposited in a private box in the vault of the Citizen's Bank of this city and shall draw from it fifty dollars a year interest. I wish it might be the beginning of a continuous endowment which, by and by, will make this institution one of the largest in the country.

Before this endowment came the Institute was practically out of debt. It commenced this year unencumbered. Its permanence was thus secured. The cash value of the property could not be less than $15,000. The permanancy of a school, however, can be secured and yet the school can be hampered in its growth, in its work, and in its value by lack of funds.

The school has now got down to solid work. Heretofore, encumbered by lawsuits, heavy debts and much opposition, it was in part an experiment. But when this year opened it had triumphed in the lawsuits, the debts were paid and all opposition was at an end. The road before had been cleared of obstructions. Now comes this noble benefaction—a permanent fund, the interest of which only will be used and which, if more is added, will give the school a tremendous impulse.

Nothing can tell more for our cause than a large and influential institution of learning. Nothing can tell more for humanity than an institution like this where mediumship is loved, its laws studied and the radical and progressive ideas of Spiritualism are the very essence and atmosphere of the education given. Spiritualists who have money to give to the school, do not wait until you are "dead" before the school gets it. If you are not needing it, GIVE IT NOW, that the school may have the benefit of it.

Ringing Words.

The N. S. A. Convention of 1907, as Viewed by the Present Secretary.

Another convention of the National Association has passed into history; and the general verdict is, that it was the most business-like convention of that body. The personnel was certainly high-class, both intellectually and energetic.

The legislative work was very important, and very little of it was left to the incoming Board. That is as it should be, for a convention is assembled to legislate, and not to refer the most important matters of public interest to the Official Board. The reports were not pessimistic so much as optimistic; and the latter spirit is the dominant one as the result of this gathering. A new era seems dawning, because faith in the N. S. A. is restored and increasing. The officers-elect, each and all, see golden promises for the future of Spiritualism. There will be no pessimistic talk from the executive office. We must herald to the world the positive fact that is now realized: Spiritualism is becoming a world-power, and the spiritualization of the people is growing in might. The phenomena of Spiritualism is fully proclaimed by the N. S. A. as being of positive and demonstrated spirit production. The positive phenomena of all character is to be upheld and sustained by all possible energy. We have arrived at the time when we can proclaim the positiveness of spirit phenomena.

The place for Spiritualism, as an ism, is in its ranks organized, and not with any outside class. The places to find mediums we can confide in, is in the auxiliary societies of the N. S. A., and in no case should we be judged by those who fail to affiliate or are not accepted by these organizations. Good mediums may exist and be at work outside, but all the bad and doubtful ones must be relegated to the outside. And all the auxiliary societies should try the medium as well as the spirit before these are given public place and sustenance. The N. S. A. desires to rest upon its merits, but that is greatly determined by its units; therefore close affiliation and protection is needed. The major responsibility is placed upon the auxiliary societies at work before the public. This convention asks them to hold up a high standard of merit officially, and especially by the class of talent employed and presented.

The Children's Lyceum is to receive good attention this year.

A Lesson Quarterly is to be instituted, and Mesdames Elizabeth Schauss, Emma Rood Tuttle and M. E. Cadwallader are the committee in charge.

The officers-elect were carefully chosen. The president, vice-president and treasurer were the unanimous choice, and are to have the full confidence of all, I feel sure. The secretary was elected by a large vote in his favor, and hopes to do a faithful work for the good of all. The trustees were elected after long balloting by the convention, with a long list of capable nominees. These trustees have entered upon their duties with zeal. They are each well-known public workers.

The declination to be candidates, by President Barrett and Secretary Longley, made much of regret to all; but still, the realization of changes being now more than ever less harmful to the general welfare, their close of service in the positions they have honored has brought no paralysis to the N. S. A. work. These ex-officials have not left the cause at large, nor the N. S. A. They each continue to hold official position with the N. S. A. Mr. Barrett was elected as editor-at-large and historian, and Mrs. Longley as a trustee.

Let us all take courage! Good forces, human and spiritual, are back of our movement, and progress is in the air!

Rally all, and help to achieve the great results desired.

Fraternally,
GEORGE W. KATES.

N. S. A. OFFICERS FOR 1907-1908 FISCAL YEAR.

It is my privilege to announce to the Spiritualists of the United States that the following officials have been chosen as the Executive Board for the ensuing year:

Dr George B. Warne, Chicago, Ill., president.

Hon. Charles R. Schirm, Baltimore, Md., vice-president.

George W. Kates, Cheyney, Pa., secretary.

Cassius L. Stevens, Pittsburg, Pa., treasurer.

Trustees:—I. C. I. Evans, Washington, D. C.; J. S. Maxwell, Minneapolis, Minn; Mrs. Mary T. Longley, Washington, D. C.; Miss Elizabeth Harlow, Haydenville, Mass; A. W. Belden, San Diego, Cal.

Please take note that official letters to the president and secretary should be changed in address accordingly.

All communications to the main office will receive prompt attention.

Fraternally,
GEORGE W. KATES, Sec'y.

MISPLACED MIRACLE.

An Old Mule Was Saved Under Peculiar Circumstances.

One survivor of the recent powder-mill disaster was an old mule, whose driver had been blown into bits. The mule's escape from instant bodily annihilation was a miracle, but no priest sent out to the world the glad tidings that once again "God's" protection had been shown forth to the world's "show-me" inhabitants. No claim was made by a pulpit pounder that here was ocular evidence of "Divine intervention."

But if, instead of this poor old mule that hand been found uninjured a painting of a portly, porcine-faced priest, a crucifix, a bottle of holy water, a "piece of the true cross," a semblance in sepia of a smug-mugged senile pope, or in fact any article that had once been "blessed by the influence of Christianity," the dignitaries of the church would have come from all the points of the compass. They would have pointed out the survivor to a gaping multitude of duped, deluded delvers in a dark delusion that has come up from the dusky days of ignorance in the form of the Christian religion, and the "miraculously unscathed" article would have soon been enshrined in a place where the resultant pilgrims could conveniently drop their pieces of money in a "poor box" at its base.

Of course, we know the same impersonal, impartial laws of nature protected the maimed mule from instant disintegration that have preserved numberless "sacred" relics, etc., from destruction in times of disaster, ever since priestcraft pushed its pesky presence into existence among men. But dare a preacher declare this fact? Ye gods, no! He would quickly lose his precious position in his nicely varnished pulpit if he dared to be a man of truth and declare forth facts instead of falsities.

No, 'twould never do to call the attention of his flock to the truths that are to be found in nature and nature's laws.

Had this mule been the property of even the janitor of a church the escape would have then been a church-legitimatized miracle.

The churches near the scene of the explosion were converted into piles of splintered wreckage, but the mule survived. Can it be that one mule (an old one at that) is worth more "in the sight of God"—than several churches? Or was it a misplaced miracle?

FRANK XAVIER MITCHELL.

SAYS CHURCH HOUNDS HIM.

Rudolph Isch, a well-known and respected member of the Amish community in Bedford County, Ill., has brought suit for $50,000 damages against Rudolph Wietzig, a wealthy farmer and an elder in the church, alleging that he has been hounded for 16 years by the church, separated from his family and his fortune dissipated. The reason for his alleged persecution, Isch says, is because he broke a rule of the church 16 years ago, which provides that no member of the sect shall step on a pair of scales and be weighed.

FAVORS JAP CODE IN CHICAGO.

President Schneider for Oriental Ethics in Schools—Stress Laid on Morality—Creed Found in Imperial Rescript Issued Thirty Years Ago.

Japan is to have a unique revenge for any real or fancied slights it may have received at the hands of American school authorities if President Otto C. Schneider of the Chicago school board has his way. President Schneider wants to adopt the Japanese imperial rescript on education as a standard of ethical and moral teaching in the Chicago public schools.

A copy of the rescript, in a new translation recently made by a board of Japanese scholars, reached the president yesterday from the Japanese government at Tokio.

It did not take President Schneider long to discover in the document a pointer for the Chicago schools.

"Why not?" he said to a visitor who expressed surprise at the president's proposal. "There could be no objection to using it here. The document cannot be improved upon.

"It presents a code of ethics which seems to apply to the west as well as the east. The chief stress seems to be laid on the development of morality, and that is right. Learning has really always been of secondary consideration, and it should be."

This Is the Japs' Creed.

The rescript, which is a sort of educational creed, was issued some thirty years ago by the emperor of Japan, and has been used since that time as a formula for ethical teaching in the Japanese schools. In part it reads:

"Be filial to your parents, affectionate to your brothers and sisters; as husbands and wives be harmonious, as friends true; bear yourselves in modesty and moderation; extend your benevolence to all; pursue learning and cultivate arts, and thereby develop intellectual faculties and perfect moral powers; furthermore, advance public good and promote common interests; always respect the constitution and preserve the laws; should emergency arise, offer yourselves courageously to the state; and thus guard and maintain the prosperity of our imperial throne, coeval with heaven and earth."

"Our education has had no connection with religion," says the communication which accompanied the rescript, 'and the new system is entirely free from any sacerdotal influence. Secular morality has always been taught in the schools and forms the distinctive feature of our system."

Inspection Causes Clashes.

A "situation" is believed to be developing at certain of the city schools as the result of the drastic methods employed by the school inspectors of the health department in the general inspection of pupils. In several cases there has been open rupture between the inspectors on the one hand and the pupils and their parents on the other, and the comments of the school authorities indicate that they by no means approve of the methods used.

As a result of one of the clashes Inspector C. E. M. Fisher went on his rounds yesterday with a policeman as a bodyguard, at the Lafayette school, at Augusta street and Washtenaw avenue, on Wednesday he had sent home nearly half the pupils of the school, telling them that they were so unclean that their presence was a menace to the other pupils. The order was taken as an insult, and so many of the older boys threatened to "fix" Inspector Fisher that he applied for police protection.

So many parents of the children Several parents of children have charged that physical examinations are made without discrimination.

ROOMS FOR VEGETARIANS ONLY.

M. Leonard Wants Lodgers, but Will Not Accept Persons Who Eat the Corpses of Animals.

M. Leonard, 6600 Ellis Avenue, Chicago, has rooms to rent, but he will not rent them to anyone who is not a vegetarian. He placed an advertisement in the papers yesterday to that effect. He has three rooms vacant and will give board if desired. During the day he received no vegetable diet applicants, but several with meat diet tendencies applied. He refused them admission to the household.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

If you want ONLY ONE Premium Book, the price of The Unknown Life of Jesus is 15 cents. The price of any one of the others is 25 cents. After paying postage thereon, the books at that price are practically a gift to our subscribers. At those prices only one book will be sent out. All orders for one or more Premium Books must be accompanied with a yearly subscription for The Progressive Thinker. Where more than one Premium Book is desired, see the terms mentioned above.

THE SIMPLE LIFE IS BEST.

'Tis but a little thing for you and me
In Life's journey, day by day,
To cherish in our souls sweet sympathy;
For this I know: All life's way
Is made up of simple acts and things,
And to our souls its blessing brings.

'Tis not enough to be great and wise,
Learned in mechanics' subtle laws,
Or versed in science that derides
Loves' all-wise first great Cause.
The soul to grander heights upsprings
When it to simple duty clings.

We cannot reason on the secret why
One's simple life is fraught with bless,
Nor would we any great truth deny.
What seemeth best is this:
The simple life to do and trust,
And to all mankind be true and just.

Down deep within the human heart
There pulses a living spring,
With sympathies that to the weak impart
Comfort no other power can bring;
This soul-power within has no name
Known to science or to fame.

The god at heart of every race
Has love's great unwritten law
That lends enchantment to the face
And to it all men draw;
For more than wealth, power or might,
Is the soul's inner light.

This is my message and refrain,
The Christ-love and sympathy;
I cannot stop to argue or explain,
But enough for you and me
To know the simple life is always best,
To be happy and truly blessed.

OBEYS HEAVEN'S WARNING.

Captain August Richter, known to thousands of American ocean travelers, his given up his command of the North German Lloyd steamer, Kronprinz Wilhelm, and quit the sea forever, because, according to his friends, he was warned by heaven, through the medium of his ship's collision with an iceberg, to abandon seafaring.

"How to Train Children and parents." Mrs. Elizabeth Towne takes the position that in many cases it is the parents that need the training more than the children, and advises parents to look to themselves. Twenty-five cents could not be better spent than in buying the book. Anyone that has the care of children should read it. Price 25 cents.

"After Her Death." The Story of a Summer." By Lilian Whiting. No mind that loves spiritual thought can fail to be fed and delighted with this book. Beautiful spiritual thought, combining advanced ideas on the finer and ethereal phases of Spiritualism, leading the mind onward into the purer atmosphere of exalted spiritual truth. A book for the higher life. Price, cloth, $1.00.

WHY?

Why do I weep for one who died? He loves me yet;
And is with me lest my sad heart grow strange,
He is with me lest my weary heart a moment will forget;
I wept when he died, that death could his presence change.

He was so marble-like, cold and still;
he whom I loved!
They told me he was safe at home, and that he lived;
I believed he had found rest at last above cares that fill
Life's pathway as we rove with those we love

Ah! changed, not lost! too true, thou best beloved!
I wonder if the ages can repair the broken lives
Of Love, that once was there. Love is unchanging
And changeless, as time passes by, and lives through eternity.

IT AMUSES HIM.

I do not know from whence I came nor what my future is to be. I like The Progressive Thinker all the same, because its style amuses me.

The Progressive Thinker is unique in more ways than one. Its place in literature is noteworthy. In number 932 are three articles written by earnest, intelligent and profound thinkers, viz: Rev. George W. Kates, Laura G. Fixen, and E. J Schellhous. There were several other articles in the same number, of merit and noteworthy because the writers are evidently sincere.

The cosmopolitan character of your journal is one of its best features. Of the authors named, E. J. Schellhous strikes the keynote to my ear when he says: "There is nothing in human interests that transcends the Comprehension of man, and therefore nothing to worship. There is nothing in the Bible that is good but what might be learned elsewhere; but there is much in it that should be learned nowhere."

While I was trying to assimilate and profit by these highly spiced, mental dainties, my digestion went on a strike until I turned to the editorial page. There I saw a quotation from Pope's Essay on Man, and this was most opportune, as it restored the mental equilibrium.

Spiritualism dominated by priesthood! Not for me.

The time will come when we can read
The thoughts of those we meet.
Priestcraft and greed, dogma and creed,
Will take a low back seat.

I will consider what is wise
For me to do and say.
Will not accept a mess of lies
Though told by men that pray.

RHEUMATISM CURED.

Dr. Caird will send postpaid, THE HERBS—a formula and full directions for preparing his RHEUMATISM CURE—enough for a month's treatment for $1.00. Address ALEX CAIRD, M. D., 598 W. Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill. $1.00 per bottle, by express or at-office.

"A DWELLER ON TWO PLANETS."

THE STORY OF THE GREAT ATLANTIS, and the accompanying map and description thereof, its wonderful and advanced civilization of 12,000 years ago, and the light and lesson it gives forth upon the problems of to-day is worth more to the historian, the statesman, the student, and even the general reader, than many times the price of the book—to say nothing on the many topics of which it treats, sufficient to interest deeply every school of thought in this momentous time of the world's history. This book is endorsed by Prof. Larkin, the great Astronomer and scientist; he regards it as one of the greatest Books of the present age. Address MRS. M. E. M. OLIVER, No. 415 North Fremont avenue, Los Angeles, Cal. Price $2.00.

MASTERSHIP IS THE RIGHT WAY.

THE GREAT WORK is Vol. III., of the "Harmonic Series." It makes clear the Way of Mastership. This is the Way that leads to Individual Liberty here and hereafter.

Every intelligent man and woman who is seeking for Spiritual Truth should read THE GREAT WORK. Why? Because:

1. It teaches the Constructive Process of Spiritual Development whereby we may communicate with our spirit friends without becoming Mediums.

2. It explains the most mysterious and fascinating phenomena of human life simply and clearly.

3. It presents a new array of demonstrated facts which prove that MASTERSHIP, and not Mediumship is the Constructive Road to Spiritual Unfoldment, and that it is open to all who elect to travel it.

4. Its author speaks from the standpoint of one who has "had the personal experience and made the demonstration."

5. It presents to the world a Moral Philosophy so simple and exact that it may be understood by a child, and yet so profound as to meet the deepest and most exalted demands of the human soul.

It will be sent post-paid to any address on receipt of $2.00. Address, Department P. T.

THE JULO

Positively an extraordinary discovery for communicating with the other world intelligently. This seems so unnatural to some people that it is hard to realize what this really means. However, it is absolutely legitimate and all we claim. It is strictly a high-class article and was tested carefully before being placed upon the market. Those who have had experience with it declare it "Simply Wonderful." Write for interesting booklet free.

From Dream to Vision of Life

By Lilian Whiting, Author of "The World Beautiful," "The Spiritual Significance," "The Outlook Beautiful," etc.

This book finds its keynote in the question asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury—"The Life Beyond,—what it it? What is its bearing on these present working years?" To the discussion of this vital problem Miss Whiting brings the results of modern scientific research and that peculiar spiritual clairvoyance which has been remarked in "The Life Radiant" and some of her other books. It is written with a certain joyous vitality that communicates itself to the reader in a certain radiance and liberation of new energies. Price $1.00 net.

GENUINE PSYCHIC DEVELOPMENT.

At this time of writing there are over 100 students enrolled on the College Books, studying the great work, "The System of Philosophy Concerning Divinity." Why? Because the many who have received practical results have told others and so the good work goes on. A long list of names, sworn to by a Boston notary will soon be ready, telling you who's who in this endorsement of my System, and how many have received psychical proofs of unfoldment. The endorsement of these representative men and women will appeal to you. Please lay prejudice aside and take up my work. Will you still be a Spiritualist? Yes, and why? Because, you will know that it is true and can have evidences within yourself. "Your lessons are a revelation." W. Iler, Berlin, Can. "Course is great for spiritual development." G. H.
